Mr. BLANTON. Why? Does it hurt the gentleman to have the people talk about him?

Mr. MAY. Not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Because if it does, he better quit, because any man on earth who does anything worth while will get talked about. The more he does in the interest of the people, the more adverse criticism he will get from the press, usually. It does not bother me one bit for them to talk about me. They have been cussing me for 25 years, and I still have the confidence of my constituents.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Perhaps the gentleman is somewhat in my attitude toward my constituents. A Republican district has sent me here twice, and by a largely increased majority each time.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the Democrats send me here, but there are always many Republicans who vote for me.

Mr. MAY. They sent me here because they knew it did not take a civil engineer to find out where I stood on any public question.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will be glad to yield to my distinguished friend.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I fully realize that in the gentleman's modesty he would not include himself in the list of those about whom the great encomiums of praise have been passed around, so I want to have the pleasure of adding the gentleman's name to the list.

Mr. BLANTON. I thank you, General. The general and I are going to get along splendidly from now on. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER].

Mr. PITTINGER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the profound discussion between my Democratic brethren on the cost of carpenters to build the presidential inaugural stand. May I suggest, but without being too serious, that the carpenters probably figured it was worth more than $11 a day to erect a stand upon which to inaugurate a Democratic President, and that perhaps explains the high union scale on that particular job.

I have also considered it a privilege to hear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] pluck those orange blossoms and geraniums and hand bouquets around here to his colleagues. It should make the Members of the House live longer to have kind things said about them that the gentleman has said.

However, these are not the subjects I wish to discuss. I arose to say that on next Monday I think we are going to cast one of the most important votes that the members of this body have had an opportunity to cast since I have been privileged to be here; that it, to vote for the Crowther bill. I wish to say now, that I am going to vote to discharge the committee, and I am going to vote for the bill because a vote for that measure is a vote for the protection of American labor and industry and American working men. It is a vote against the dumping of foreign goods on the American market that will mean much to the American people. If the vote is wrong and a measure like that is not adopted by this Congress there will be a failure which will contribute to prolong the depression.

The only other comment I wanted to make is (and it is well understood that there may be a failure next Monday) that I am just wondering if some of the newspaper men will make the mistake of saying that we do not have a party system of Government, and that the lame ducks are responsible, if the Crowther bill is defeated. The responsibility for the success or failure of that measure on Monday will rest with the responsible party leadership of this House and not with the lame ducks. The Democrats are in control, and are responsible. In an Associated Press dispatch I notice it says that the lame ducks are the reason for the failure of Congress to do anything, and as a lame duck, but a perfectly live one, going out of here with no strings around my hands or feet, I want to protest against that sort of statement. The live ducks of this body and not the lame ducks determine the success or failure of the legislative program. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the depression, its cause and cure, is a much discussed topic. We have been told many times about industrial, economic, and agricultural conditions. There has been plenty of talk concerning the problems that face the American people. It is not now my purpose to repeat the facts and figures which show that agriculture and industry are paralyzed, that people are out of employment, that additional relief for the unemployed is necessary, and that our political and business leaders in America are face to face with most perplexing difficulties. We have been told many times that, with overproduction in agriculture, there is want and starvation among other classes of our people. All of this is true.

When conditions demand constructive action, and when there is a failure along those lines, it is natural to put the responsibility on someone for such a situation. For several weeks there has been a popular outcry against the lame-duck Congress. Let me say that I am a lame duck and with no apologies. I am prepared to defend my legislative record if any such defense is necessary. The people of northeastern Minnesota have twice indorsed it. I have been in attendance at this short session of Congress, have answered the roll calls, and have voted on such measures as were permitted to come before the House of Representatives for attention. I am rendering the same service, and will continue to do so until March 4, which I rendered in 1929, in 1930, in 1931, and in 1932.

I repeat that it is fashionable to fasten the responsibility on someone when we are face to face with disaster. As now appears, the propagandists would blame the so-called lame ducks and would have the American people believe they are responsible for a continuation of unemployment, closed factories, low prices of farm products, and every other misfortune, social, economic, and political, which prevails in this country to-day.

As one editorial writer puts it, the present session of Congress has furnished the horrible example which has speeded up the abolition of lame-duck sessions, after calling attention to the fact that Congress is about as futile as a family argument.

Another editorial writer takes pleasure in saying that we have the sickening spectacle of the present lame-duck Congress killing time and getting nowhere while public business waits. He also enthusiastically says that the adoption of the lame-duck amendment shows that we do make progress.

The implication of both of these editorials, and I have quoted from them literally, is that lame ducks are responsible for all of our troubles. There can be no doubt about the facts as to present conditions. Conditions do call for a remedy. There are many things that Congress should do. Congress should translate into a legislative program every device known to relieve unemployment and, until that is done, Congress should supplement the work of relief agencies for those who can not obtain work and who are willing to work.

Congress should take notice of the fact that goods made in foreign countries by cheap labor are flooding the American markets. Whether this be due to depreciated currencies of other countries or to other conditions is beside the point. The facts are that foreign goods are coming into the United States in spite of our recent tariff law. If necessary, an embargo against their importation should be placed on our statute books for the protection of American labor and industry.

The St. Lawrence waterway treaty should be ratified. It is one of the greatest projects of modern times, and, in the march of progress, will be one of the milestones marking an important period in the welfare of our people on the North American Continent.

There are many other things that should be done, but it is not now my purpose to discuss them. I want merely to call attention to the absurdities of trying to lead people to believe that lame ducks are responsible for our troubles.

What is a lame duck? Under our Constitution, Members of Congress who are elected in November have their official term of office begin on the succeeding March 4. Unless there is a special session, Congress, however, does not convene until the succeeding December, and a period of 13 months elapses. In the short session of Congress, which occurs in December of even-numbered years, Members of Congress who have been defeated in the preceding November serve during the so-called short session, which automatically ends on March 4 next. In popular language, these Congressmen are designated as lame ducks.

One of the reasons for a change and for the adoption of the so-called amendment abolishing lame ducks is the fact that defeated Congressmen may or may not be responsive to the wishes of their constituents, and that they may be charged with responsibility for defeating worthwhile legislation or for voting in the affirmative on the adoption of bad legislation. All of this is theoretically possible under the present arrangement. The ratification of the twentieth amendment to the Constitution of the United States changes the situation so that, in the future, a Member of Congress, elected in November, takes office on January 3, and it will no longer be possible for a man to serve in Congress after he has been defeated.

The only way to determine whether or not lame ducks are responsible for the failure of everything is to examine the roll calls. I challenge anyone to show where the lame ducks in the present session of Congress have been responsible for the failure of any legislative program any more than other Members of Congress. For the most part, the roll calls will show that the lame ducks, without regard to the results last November, are discharging their duties and obligations faithfully and well. It would be just as foolish to blame the "live ducks" for present conditions and just as logical.

People who indulge in this loose talk lose sight of the fact that we have in this country a party system of government. Our legislative bodies are responsive to party leadership, or lack of it, as the case may be. Consequently, the criticism that is misdirected at the lame ducks should be directed to our party system of government which prevails in this country. If there are any shortcomings, and we cheerfully admit them, they are the shortcomings of the political parties in this country and the political leaders. For good measure, I do not hesitate to include some of our so-called great leaders in business and industry who owe it to themselves as well as to the American people to give patriotic encouragement and help to every program and proposition that will end the depression.

We were told last October that the election on November 8 was important and that a "change" would end all of our troubles and furnish a solution for all of our difficulties. The failures of prohibition were to be promptly ended. Farm relief was to be established. The Budget was to be balanced. Every man was to be furnished with a job. Numerous, indeed, were the pictures of hope hung out to the view of a despondent people.

The facts are that the present short session of Congress has failed in every promise that was made last fall, but that failure can not be charged to the lame ducks. It is a failure of party leadership. It is foolish to claim that nothing could be accomplished during the short session. There was much that could be done under proper leadership. Our Democratic brethren have been in control of the House of Representatives for two years. Their leaders determine what legislation shall be considered by the committees and how those committees shall report thereon.

That is the very essence of a party system of government. It carries with it opportunities and responsibilities. If those responsibilities are met the glory goes to the party leaders who met them. If they adopt a "do nothing" policy, the credit for that belongs to the party in power and to its leaders.

You can call it childish or you can call it foolish, but the fact is that a so-called lame duck can not be charged with this cheerful responsibility. For all of the good things that are done, and for the bad things that are done, for the sins of omission and commission, committed and uncommitted, in the House of Representatives, the party in control, when the record is written, must be charged in full measure therewith. Make no mistake about it. That party is the Democratic Party, long on promises and short on performance. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HART].

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested this afternoon listening to the arguments of the minority leader in favor of placing a tariff or a tax against the products of foreign countries having a depreciated currency. I was particularly interested in that portion of his statement which he was quoting from some newspaper printed in Japan, that this depreciated currency had only caused a rise in commodity prices in Japan of about 8 per cent, while, on the other hand, due to the depreciation of currency, they were able to seize the export markets of the world. In fact, their export trade had reached war-time proportions.

It would seem that if a depreciated currency could work as magically as described by the gentleman from New York his party would have seized the opportunity to immediately rescue our business from the doldrums and put our export trade back on its feet.

That our export trade is an important factor in our prosperity it does not devolve upon me to prove. I just want to quote from President Hoover's speech made in Newark, N. J., on September 17, 1928:

> When, at the beginning of the Republican administration, we were determining those measures which would restore and increase employment, one of our first decisions was vigorously to build up our foreign trade. We determined that we must sell more products abroad if we would have steady and assured employment for labor in our industries. We realized that we must energetically promote the sale of our farmers' surplus abroad both in their interest and in the interest of labor. By so doing we increase the farmers' buying power and in turn his demand for the products of labor.

Somehow or another our Republican friends have lost interest in foreign trade. They are endeavoring to foster the idea that the farmer must reduce his production to domestic consumption. In other words, he is to profit by idleness.

When we speak of foreign trade it does not mean that we are only going to sell. The word "trade" itself, as defined by Webster, means "to barter; buy and sell; participate in a sale or exchange." Therefore, when Mr. Hoover in 1928 was discussing foreign trade, he certainly could not have had in mind the embargoing of foreign products.

Listen to Mr. Hoover again in September, 1928, speaking at Newark, N. J.—

> More than 2,000,000 families in the United States earn their living to-day producing goods for export, and another million families earn their living in the manufacture of raw materials which we import in exchange for our exports. This increase in exports has brought a living to a half-million families. This means more than statistics. It means higher standards of living—more jobs make more wages. Foreign trade is no artificial stimulant to employment. Its development is a vital contribution to the welfare of the American workman and the American merchant and the American farmer. I propose that we shall continue this service to our people.

I can not conceive of why our Republican friends are now endeavoring to stifle foreign trade. The "Buy American" movement will result in a stifling of foreign trade. Oh, I realize that there is a "Buy Britain" movement. There is also a buy locally movement in many of the States. We have a group in my State, "Buy Michigan."

In my judgment, these movements are fostered by those who have an ulterior motive, or by unthinking people. For instance, take my own State as an example. What would happen to our automobile industry, if other States started a "buy" movement in their own State and refused to buy Michigan automobiles. What would happen to the farmers of my State, if other States discriminated against us, because of our "Buy Michigan" movement and refused to buy Michigan beans, when we produce 75 per cent of all the white beans grown in the United States?

These local "buy" movements will have the effect of separating us into 48 individual countries and bring about bickering and trade barriers, as they exists by tariffs in Europe.

America has grown great because of its natural resources and because of a free and unobstructed market throughout this vast empire of 48 States. We want no Chinese walls. We are suffering to-day from a stifling of trade and a robbing of the public by inflation of stocks and bonds, sponsored largely by tariff-protected concerns.

It seems our friends on the other side of the aisle have an ulterior motive. They lost this election because of their high tariffs. They would like to put our party on record as out-Grundying Grundy himself.

One of the emissaries of high tariff called on me yesterday. He was not an irresponsible, but represented one of the largest industries in the United States in his line. He comes from near my home town in Michigan. He was greatly interested in depreciated currencies and when he found that I was not interested in his program, here was his last weapon. He said: "Do you realize, Mr. HART, that we are going to have another Boston Tea Party after March 4—that great interests are preparing and financing the unemployed who will dump overboard, as they arrive in port, these foreign goods which come from countries with depreciated currency?" I said to him, "This does not disturb me. No movement of this kind can take place without organization and I am sure that our Government is not asleep and that after March 4 a movement of this kind would be dealt with very quickly."

We have the farm problem with us. Over in the Senate, I understand a bill has just been reported, which will put the Government into speculating in cotton and encourage the farmer also to speculate in cotton. We learn nothing from experience. We have just finished this morning a huge speculation in cotton, by turning over the last 350,000 bales of cotton to the Red Cross. We have paid for this cotton two or three times, but the bill just reported in the Senate is going to get us in another gigantic speculation.

Why is the Government speculating in farm products? It is a blind attempt to assist the farmer, whose dollar, as compared with pre-war levels—before the Fordney-McCumber Act or the Smoot-Hawley Act—is to-day worth only 50 cents. Shall we put some more tariff on manufactured goods and put the farmer's dollar farther out of reach of the commodities which he must buy and then, in turn, try some more nostrums to lift the farmer up to the level of those whom we have protected with outrageous tariffs? It is unjustifiable; it is silly; it is unsound. The only excuse for this agitation is the next general election in 1934.

I warn my Democratic friends to beware this snare.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I agree with my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER], that on next Monday the membership of this House will have an opportunity to cast one of the most important votes in this Congress.

Before passing on to what I had intended to say, may I refer to the statement of the preceding speaker, that the tariff issue wrecked the Republican Party in the last campaign? Let us look at the facts. Under the American Constitution, tariff legislation must originate in the House of Representatives. The gentleman's party, the majority party, the Democratic Party, has had control of the House of Representatives and the Ways and Means Committee thereof for two years, and although your Members demagogued against high protective tariff rates in this House and on the political stump, you have not reported from your Democratic-controlled Ways and Means Committee one bill or resolution to reduce one of the existing tariff rates, not even to the small degree of one-half of 1 per cent. On the other hand, your Democratic-controlled Ways and Means Committee reported a sales tax bill in the last session, which would put an additional 2¼ per cent row of tariff stones on almost every rate covering every article on the protected list under the Hawley-Smoot Act, and an additional 2¼ per cent row of protective tariff stones on nearly everything on the free list under that act. Under the Democratic Roosevelt farm-allotment monstrosity you sponsored and advanced some of the highest tariffs ever in the history of any nation on the face of the globe. It was only a few weeks ago that out of the Democratic-controlled Committee on Expenditures there was reported the Wilson bill, which, in effect, put an embargo tariff on every foreign product which might have been purchased for use by the Federal Government, and there were only a handful of Members of this House, while controlled by a Democratic majority, who rose up and voted against that bill—not even a sufficient number to obtain a roll call.

In the other body a few days ago a similar embargo tariff, a "Buy American" proposition for the Federal Government, was passed as a rider to an appropriation bill, and there were but a handful of votes against it.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. Can the gentleman see any consistency in advocating a "Buy American" plan and at the same time working against protecting this country against imports from depreciated-currency countries?

Mr. SCHAFER. No. I have had my picture taken for the press and for the movietones with Democratic brothers and sisters making "Buy American" speeches. I now call upon the Democratic brothers and sisters who appeared in movietones advocating "Buy American" to act and not let the matter rest with talk only. Those talks will not cure the situation and prevent a flood of foreign imports from destroying the American market. I call upon those Democratic movietone actors who were then spreading the gospel "Buy American," which is in effect an embargo tariff principle, to back up their talk with action.

I now wish to bring to the attention of the House some ideas expounded by the leading Democratic campaigner in the last campaign, Hon. William Randolph Hearst. What has he stated in his editorials with reference to this Crowther bill we are going to vote on Monday? He said:

> There is said to be a Democratic desire that the question be kept open for the new administration. The question should not be kept open an unnecessary moment. The emergency is upon us.
> If the Democrats are so fatuous and shortsighted as to play politics with this great duty of national preservation, it will go ill with the Democratic Party both in this administration and the administration shortly to be inaugurated. The workingman's job and the restoration of American industry are not playthings for politicians.

This is not the utterance of a Republican protectionist; this comes from the pen of the leading Democratic campaigner in the last campaign, the Hon. William Randolph Hearst.

Mr. BLANTON. Where does Hearst get his pulp paper from? He imports it from foreign countries.

Mr. SCHAFER. I do not know. However, from his editorials, I must assume that he "Buys American."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWARD. I am sure my colleague would not wittingly make a misstatement, but evidently he has forgotten some of the things that happened in the past. He stated a while ago that nobody had made any attempt to reduce the tariff. I recall that I introduced a bill to cut the tariff on aluminum hospital utensils and cooking utensils 50 per cent, and the gentleman from Wisconsin loudly applauded my effort.

Mr. SCHAFER. I give the gentleman all due credit, but I did not say that no Member had introduced a bill. I said that the Democratic majority which controls this House and which controls the Ways and Means Committee of this House has not reported a bill to reduce the tariff in any manner.

The Ways and Means Committee have chloroformed the gentleman's aluminum tariff reduction bill in committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman did not answer my last question. Can the gentleman tell us where Mr. Hearst gets his pulp paper from?

Mr. SCHAFER. I do not know about that. I presume he "Buys American."

Mr. BLANTON. He imports it from abroad. His "Buy American" slogan is forgotten when he buys his pulp paper.

Mr. SCHAFER. I have not written to ask him. If the gentleman knows about it, I would suggest that he take it up with him.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman one question: Did not the gentleman vote to put a tax on wort?

Mr. SCHAFER. Who did?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER. Who voted for it?

Mr. BLANTON. Did not the gentleman offer an amendment——

Mr. SCHAFER. I refuse to yield further, because my time is limited. A tax was imposed on malt sirups and wort; and, just as I prophesied at the time that I spoke and voted against said tax, which was supported by the gentleman from Texas, thousands of men have been thrown out of employment by reason of its enactment. There is now coming into this country from depreciated-currency foreign countries millions of bushels of malt, which is helping to wreck the great malting industry of this Nation—and bear in mind that malt is used for purposes other than making beer, nonintoxicating in fact or intoxicating in fact—the great cereal manufacturing and baking institutions buy malt sirups from the malting industry in carload lots.

Yesterday some of the Democratic speakers made a strong plea to cast party aside, to cast party actions and reflections aside, and stand united and nonpartisan. Only since last November have these gentlemen become converted to this principle. If we are to cast party considerations aside, how can we explain the action of the Democratic majority of this House in calling a caucus and binding the majority Members of this House to vote to prevent the Crowther bill from being considered next Monday?

Now I call upon you Democratic Members and progressive Republican Members who in the past have asked for the discharge rule—who in the past have gone so far as to indicate that when 100 Members of this body desired legislation considered it should be considered—to practice what you preach.

I call upon you now to give the 145 Members who have signed my petition to discharge the Crowther bill an opportunity to at least consider this important legislation on Monday next. Your Democratic Speaker indicated we did not have time for such consideration. Yesterday we adjourned at quarter to 4 and the day before we adjourned at 20 minutes to 4; and we have plenty of evenings when we could have evening sessions, if necessary.

This kind of legislation, under the American Constitution, must originate in the House of Representatives. Let us get it over to the other body. Democratic gentlemen certainly can not blame the lame-duck Republican minority for frittering away about eight days of time in another body, unless you wish to hold that a gentleman commonly known as the Kingfish is a lame-duck Republican. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I think it is pretty generally conceded that the Government at this time is facing the greatest crisis it has ever faced in its entire history. This crisis, of course, is a financial crisis.

We have heard and will continue to hear of the absolute necessity of reducing Government expenses. It is true that the expenses of Government that are bearing down upon the people of our country are not all Federal expenses. The truth is that a very small percentage of the total expenses of government in our Nation is the expense of the Federal Government; but, notwithstanding this fact, the duty devolves upon the Congress to relieve the people of the expense of the Federal Government as much as can possibly be done without destroying the efficiency of government.

Yesterday we sent to conference an appropriation bill carrying an amendment that had been adopted by the Senate which some gentlemen have termed drastic and dictatorial; which some gentlemen have termed as a move to surrender the prerogatives and the rights of the Congress to the incoming Executive.

I do not agree that it is a surrender of a single right that the Congress has, and I want to invite your attention to the text of the measure that has been adopted by the Senate and see if we can find therein, if that provision is enacted into law, where we have surrendered one iota of the prerogatives that belong to the American Congress. Only a delegation of authority has been made to the Chief Executive upon whose shoulders the task of administering the Government within its revenue will fall after March 4, 1933, and since his is the responsibility, the power should likewise be his within the limits of the Constitution.

It has been argued that the Congress ought to undertake the task of reorganizing the Government and cutting down expenses, abolishing bureaus and eliminating this department or that commission. Mr. Chairman, I have only been a Member of this body during this Congress, and during this time it has been a part of my duties to act on the Committee on Expenditures. Before that committee there have been many bills. We spent many days last summer during the first session of the Seventy-second Congress in an honest and a conscientious effort to perfom this task, and there was nothing partisan about it. The question of politics did not enter into the discussion or the consideration of those bills, but here is what we were confronted with: The average Member of Congress is not an expert. His duties are manifold. We were compelled to depend upon the department heads and we were compelled to depend upon the bureau chiefs who are the very men whose departments we were trying to consolidate. They were the men whose bureaus we were trying to eliminate. We were compelled to depend upon them for information, and, without a single exception, they came before the committee armed sufficiently to prove that you could not touch them; that you could not effect any economies by touching their bureau or their commission, but that you ought to go to the other fellow; and when the other fellow came it was the same old story. I am not criticizing those gentlemen. I am stating the facts. They are all efficient enough to make a plausible argument for the maintenance of their bureau, and the Congress need not expect them to come before any committee and admit that their bureau or commission should be abolished. We all know that some should be abolished, and it is imperative that this specific authority be vested in a responsible head.

It is said, Mr. Chairman, that emergencies call for drastic action. We must all concede that this Government is facing an emergency. If it is to continue to render the service to the people that they are entitled to from their Government, then it is incumbent upon us to see to it that some of this expense, that some of these bureaus, and that some of these commissions are abolished and their functions either transferred or done away with.

I am one of those who believe that the least governed people are the best governed people, and regardless of the question of whether the President be a Democrat or a Republican and regardless of all question of politics, I believe this Congress ought to go the full constitutional limit, and when this bill comes back or when the conference report comes back we should act promptly and effectively. I want to call your attention to the words of our President, which he used in submitting the plan that was not approved by this Congress:

> Either Congress must keep its hands off now or they must give to my successor much larger powers and independent action than given to any President if there is ever to be reorganization; and that authority, to be effective, should be free of the limitations in the law passed last year. * * *

He is referring to the act of July 30, 1922, which was a step in the right direction, but which lacks a great deal of going far enough to empower him or anybody else to correct the existing evils.

Quoting further:

> Should be free of the limitation in the law passed last year which gives Congress the veto power, prevents the abolition of functions, and prevents the rearrangement of major departments. Otherwise it will, as is now being demonstrated in the present law, again be merely make-believe.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that the Membership of this House is sincere in its desire to reduce governmental expenses. It matters not whether you or I may agree that this bureau or that bureau shall be abolished. Probably we could not agree, but if conditions are what we are told that they are—in fact, what we know they are, and we know they exist at this time—we should surrender our belief and not object to putting this particular bureau or that particular bureau out of existence. I do not care who he is, he should conscientiously approach the problem in the discharge of his duty of returning the Government to the people and reducing expenses.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman is looking to solving the question by the President. Does not the gentleman believe that if the President of the United States sent up recommendations as to the abolition of this bureau or that bureau he would get the same action without giving him complete dictatorial power?

Mr. MILLER. They might do it.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think they would.

Mr. MILLER. I am trying to avoid the same condition that has been confronting the Committee on Expenditures during this entire Congress. There have been meritorious propositions; meritorious bills have come before that committee, and I am sure that every man on the committee and every Member of Congress wants to reduce expenses, but I may have a particular liking for this bureau or that bureau which serves and functions in my district; another Member likes a particular bureau that functions in his district, and neither will give up. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman from Texas when he says that we can not do it—not because we do not cooperate but simply because I will not give up the bureau that serves my district and he will not give up one that serves his.

Mr. BLANTON. The President only can do it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the work can only be done by some one upon whom the responsibility rests. Some one must have the sole responsibility, and the President is the servant of all the people. He is responsible to them and he must have this power.

It can not be successfully argued that Congress can do it, for the reasons above stated; not that the individual Members are not just as able as anyone and just as desirous of reducing expenses, but because the particular interests of our districts lead us to fight for the retention of the various bureaus. We are afraid to surrender one because we do not know that the other fellow will have to surrender, and so the fight goes on. The President represents all and will not be moved by any partisan consideration nor by any sectional desire. He will be dominated and controlled by the imperative duty to reduce governmental expenses without a corresponding destruction of governmental efficiency in the fundamental activities.

President Taft, upon authority from Congress, reorganized the Customs Service and brought about economies. That work was accomplished in the face of opposition from all over the country. The work of the new President will be assailed, but he can and will do it well, and after it is done will come the fight of the organized minorities for the undoing of the work. Then will come the agitation for the repeal of this law, but I firmly believe that the Congress will be controlled by the desires of the people as a whole rather than by the wishes of the minorities who may be affected by the consolidations, abolitions, and eliminations.

It can not be argued that a commission should be appointed to study the question, because in the past many such commissions have been appointed and have filed their reports after long and careful investigation. The reports contained many useful suggestions, but because of the variety of interests affected none of them could be adopted.

If the proposal be revolutionary, if it be drastic, if it be dictatorial, experience has taught us that the reform can not come unless the authority be lodged in some one who is responsible to all the people, and not to any particular district, interest, or section. That one person is the President, and if we are to save our Government and relieve our people we must act.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I listened with a good deal of interest to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hart] in which he called attention to the decrease in our export trade. Of course his criticism falls flat because our loss in exports is exactly in proportion to the export loss sustained by every other country in the world, and our loss is due to their impoverished condition and consequent reduced purchasing power.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word on the subject that we are going to take up on Monday. One of our leading newspapers this morning contained an editorial on this subject of depreciated currency and quoted from the report by the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Chapin, which is a rather comprehensive statement, although it is brief, and will be found on page 3708 of the RECORD of February 9, 1933. The only thing that the newspaper apparently could find of value from its point of view in that statement was this, which it quoted in the editorial, as follows:

> An examination of the latest available foreign trade statistics does not indicate that we are experiencing what might be termed a flood of imports.

That is the only portion of the statement they thought worth while to quote in the editorial. I wonder why it did not quote this part of the statement, if it wanted to be fair to the reading public:

> From the standpoint of mechanics alone, a lag of several months must occur between the time a foreign currency begins to depreciate and the time when imports of individual commodities begin to increase. The depreciated-currency country must have or develop an exportable surplus. The foreign producer must arrange for United States agents or distributors, who in turn must develop or extend the market. This takes time. Even after this has been done the growth of imports may be temporarily stopped or retarded by "less-than-cost selling" by American producers. But a policy so ruinous and uneconomic can not long be maintained. Statistics for 1932 should therefore be taken, not as a measure of effect, but merely as an indication of the direction in which these forces are working.

The writer of the editorial would not quote a constructive paragraph that illustrates what the final result is going to be in the United States of the continuation of a policy so eminently unfair as that which now predominates.

Mr. Chairman, 145 Members of this body signed a motion to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the consideration of the bill, H. R. 8557, known as the Crowther bill, and action will be taken upon that motion on February 13. The title of that bill is "To equalize tariff duties by compensating for depreciation in foreign currency." The Hill bill, H. R. 13999, and the Connery bill, H. R. 14413, are designed to effect the same purpose.

While it is not fair to place the entire blame for our industrial depression on depreciated foreign currency, sufficient evidence was submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means to prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that this condition is a prime factor in the continuation of our industrial stagnation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I can not yield at present.

Mr. BLANTON. Just for one question.

Mr. CROWTHER. Very well.

Mr. BLANTON. Why did my friend from New York let them hoodoo his bill by bringing it up on the 13th of the month?

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I am not as superstitious as the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman would probably run away from a black cat if he saw one. Besides, 13 is a lucky number with me. I have 13 letters in my name, and I think I have been one of the luckiest fellows in the world to be able to serve here all these years with the gentleman from Texas and my many beloved colleagues. Let me give you a list of the industries that are seriously affected by depreciated foreign currency:

Fisheries and fish canning: Washington, Oregon, and California.

Boat builders: Washington and Oregon.

Motor hardware: Washington, Oregon, and California.

Electric supplies, incandescent bulbs, and so forth: Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and New York.

Electric storage batteries, metal toys, and novelties: Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Other metal articles: New Jersey, Illinois, Kentucky, Virginia, and California.

Lumber: Missouri, Washington, and Michigan.

Pulp and paper: Washington, Oregon, Massachusetts, Maine, Illinois, Wisconsin, West Virginia, New York, Ohio, and Michigan.

Pottery: New York, New Jersey, Ohio, and West Virginia.

Carpets and rugs: New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts.

Leather: New York, Ohio, and Wisconsin.

Glazed kid: Pennsylvania and Delaware.

Manufactures of cork: Pennsylvania.

It is only fair to say that I have received some 16 letters protesting against the proposed legislation, largely from the converting paper mills.

While our imports have suffered a material reduction as a whole, resulting from our own decreased buying power, there has been a marked increase of importations of many commodities from countries off the gold standard. It is only fair to say that there has been an increase in some commodities from countries still on the gold standard, but in many cases a low gold standard.

France, Germany, Canada, and even the Philippines have protected themselves against loss from this source by suitable legislation, order of council, or proclamation.

If the greatly reduced income of our American workers is to be spent for articles that are made abroad and American goods permitted to remain on the shelves, what hope is there for a resumption of industrial or agricultural activities in this country?

Here is the situation: Foreign nations with their depreciated currency have taken charge of the toll gates at our customhouses and have changed the price of admission to suit themselves. Tariff rates have been destroyed by this process and the foreign goods enter in many cases with less than a fair degree of competition. The element of protection to American industry has vanished and American industry and labor are the victims. How long are we going to permit this condition to prevail? It seems to suit the element that is apparently obsessed with the cult of internationalism, but if protecting American industry and American workmen against a combination of pauper labor and depreciated foreign currency is nationalism, then put me on record as a nationalist. I am for America first, now and forever. [Applause.]

I hope the Members of the House will see the wisdom of enacting this legislation and of reestablishing the rates that we intended to be applied when we passed the Hawley-Smoot bill.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. In just a minute.

I believe if we had embarked on this method of legislation 30 days after England went off the gold standard in September, 1931, and when the rest of the nations followed her in rapid succession, if we had adopted this policy of collecting tariff duties on par value of their currency, not only England but many of the other nations would have long ago returned to the gold standard. Every week that we postpone it we are losing an opportunity to drive in a wedge that will urge these nations back to the gold standard and help to stabilize the currency of the world. [Applause.]

We are more than a year late in taking this action. I introduced H. R. 8557 on January 28, 1932, and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY] introduced identical bills at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON].

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Chairman, I am glad we have had what might be termed a "running debate" this afternoon upon this very important question that is to be decided on next Monday.

I would call the attention of the Members to this condition that exists in the district of each of us: Our people are greatly disturbed; it matters not whether it be the most humble workman or the greatest financier in any one of your districts, that man to-day is hoping for some solution of the problem that we have in this great depression.

At first glance this proposition of equalizing the tariff rates with those countries that have resorted to a depreciation of currency appeals to one, whether he is a protectionist or not, but when you turn to clear light of truth upon the question and get the facts surrounding it the legislation that is here proposed is utterly worthless and ridiculous.

I think if I were on the opposite side of the aisle and if I had a distinguished member of my party who happened to be in a place of great authority, namely, the Tariff Commission, and a man who should know more about this than any other one, and then to have been denounced by him for signing a petition to bring an important tariff bill before the House under a petition to discharge the committee, I would certainly stop and try to study the testimony in this case and see if I might not be wrong.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. I will answer the gentleman in just a moment.

Mr. PITTENGER. I just wanted to say that man is not a Republican.

Mr. RAGON. I beg the gentleman's pardon; he is a Republican, and he was appointed by a Republican President.

Mr. PITTENGER. No; I disagree with the gentleman.

Mr. RAGON. Of course the gentleman disagrees. He must disagree. The gentleman is the same gentleman who a while ago said the lame ducks had nothing to do with this legislation.

Mr. PITTENGER. And I meant it.

Mr. RAGON. Yet 84 Members of the 145 who signed that petition are lame ducks. I have nothing against those so unfortunate as to be defeated, but the gentleman must recognize facts.

Mr. PITTENGER. That is one of the finest things they have ever done.

Mr. RAGON. Fifty-eight per cent of the signers of the Republican petition are lame ducks, and then the gentleman tells us they had nothing to do with this legislation. [Laughter and applause.]

Well, it is an old saying that a fellow had better stop and do a little thinking before he does so much speaking.

Now, let us see what are the principles involved in this bill. Our tariff is supposed to represent the difference between the cost of production here and abroad. From the lips of the Tariff Commission, who knows more about this than anyone else, we hear this: There has been a reduction in wholesale costs in this country of 32 per cent. Now, if we have had that much reduction in wholesale production costs in this country, then you are certainly bound to admit that the costs of production have become greatly decreased in this country. Very well. Against that 32 per cent reduction in wholesale prices in this country what do we find in Canada? We find a depreciated currency now, as I recall, of between 20 and 25 per cent. Very well. What is expected by this bill? It is expected to increase the tariff and make it effective upon our present rates, without giving any consideration at all to the cost of production in this country and its reduction within the last two years.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. I can not yield now.

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman just made a statement that is very wide of the mark.

Mr. RAGON. Very well.

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman said that this legislation did not make any provision for reduction of production costs in this country. In both the Hill bill and my bill there is left a very wide margin between what we shall receive in duties, and what we expected to get under the present tariff law; a very wide margin is allowed for the reduction of our costs, and also for the presumed increase of foreign costs, under the old economic fundamental theory of commodity price rising when currency is debased, which has not occurred, and the gentleman knows that is a fact by the evidence submitted.

Mr. RAGON. I contend that both the Crowther bill and the Hill bill will make the tariff effective just as soon as foreign currency is reduced 5 per cent below par. The very object of these bills ignores domestic cost of production. Find out, if you can, how it would effect a consideration of the cost of production in this country. Of course, that is the very purpose of it, not to consider the cost of production here, because it would not work if you did. The Tariff Commission can do that now. It has only recently done that very thing. If you consider anything but the depreciation of currency, you take it out of the scope of this legislation.

Why, of course, it does not refer to the cost of production in this country. You now have in the flexible clause of the tariff act all the power necessary to do the very thing the gentleman from New York speaks about.

Mr. Chairman, upon what is based the claimed necessity for this bill? You have got to base it upon the proposition that this country is being flooded by imports from other countries. I do not see how in the world any reasonable man could expect it to be invoked in any other way.

What are the facts? The facts are that the imports into this country last year from all sources in volume were 21 per cent under those of 1931. In value they decreased in 1932 something over 30 per cent under what they were in 1931.

Not only that, but the gentlemen have quoted from Mr. Chapin, the Secretary of Commerce, and his statement that there were two hundred and thirty-odd articles listed. Mr. Chairman, if they had taken time to get information from other sources than Mr. Chapin they would find there is listed 277 articles in our hearings. Mr. Page, of the Tariff Commission, testified that of these 277 articles there were only 83 as to which imports had increased last year over the year before. I ask you to think this statement over seriously; he said that of the 83 articles 43 were from depreciated-currency countries and 40 were from countries on the gold standard.

Mr. Chairman, I say these gentlemen must be careful that they do not make themselves the instrument of a half a dozen greedy industries who want to peg their prices in this country.

Now, let us look at a common application of this legislation. Here is Canada with a currency depreciated about 25 per cent. Here is Japan with a 50 per cent depreciated currency.

Mr. CROWTHER. Sixty per cent.

Mr. RAGON. Well, we will say 50 per cent. That will make it better for your side. Here is France, who many years ago cheapened her currency more than any of these countries, and you are not making any provision to meet the French situation at all.

What does this mean? It means against the same article coming from the different countries that in the case of Canada you charge one rate of tariff, in the case of Japan you charge another rate of tariff, but in the case of France you do not charge a penny.

Great Britain is in the same shape as Canada, yet Great Britain walked up to the lick log and paid up every dollar she owed us last December. Nevertheless, you would impose upon Great Britain this extra burden.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas 10 additional minutes.

Mr. RAGON. But to France, who was a defaulter, you are giving a crown of glory.

There are fifty-odd countries with depreciated currencies—maybe more; I do not remember the number now. The reason assigned by those men appearing before the committee, Republicans and Democrats alike, why it was impractical of operation was because it set up a different tariff rate on all articles for over 50 countries. In effect it would be levying 50 different rates on the same article.

Mr. Chairman, there must be something wrong when three members of the Tariff Commission come before the committee and say this bill will not do. There must be something wrong when the authorized representatives of the Treasury Department come up there and say this bill is impractical. There must be something wrong when the gentleman who appeared on behalf of the Department of Commerce gave the kind of testimony he did.

Mr. Chairman, this is a serious proposition from another viewpoint. When you increase the tariff against Japan 100 per cent, and increase that against France none, what is going to be the feeling in Japan? When you increase the Canadian duty 33⅓ per cent and increase the French duty none, what is going to be the feeling in Canada?

Mr. Chairman, legislation of this character will simply make a crowd of nations now out of humor with us feel more disposed against us than they have ever felt.

Let us analyze the situation a little further.

You have 67 per cent of your imports on the free list. You have one-half of the remaining 33 per cent of dutiable tariffs, one-half specific duties and one-half ad valorem.

Under your specific duties whenever they depreciate the currency you automatically increase the tariff. For illustration, here is a hat that comes in from Italy worth $4 and they pay $1 specific duty. The currency in Italy depreciates 25 per cent and the hat goes down to $3 and you still retain that specific $1 tax. In order to bring that up and make it effective, what have you to do? You have to increase it one-third of $3 dollars; in other words, you have to increase it 33⅓ per cent to make up for a 25 per cent depreciation in currency.

Mr. Chairman, you are not only increasing it in this way, but you are increasing it upon your ad valorem rates as well to the same extent. You are not only doing this, but you are going into the free list. Have you ever thought about that? Have you ever begun to contemplate that even under the Smoot-Hawley bill, passed when you gentlemen on the Republican side were in power, with a great majority here, 67 per cent of the imports into this country were placed by you upon the free list? Are you willing now with a few slight exceptions, that they shall all have an import duty placed upon them?

I had a gentleman figure it out the other day and averaging the equivalent ad valorem rate over all our imports, it amounts to a rate of 16.9 per cent. Whenever you adopt this legislation you drive up the average equivalent ad valorem rate to over 40 per cent by including the free list.

Mr. Chairman, this is why these gentlemen down here on the commission, Republicans and Democrats, make this statement, and as I said to my friend, SNELL, to-day, there is not one argument for this bill that I can not give you 12 better arguments for depreciation of our own currency.

When did the thought arise that in the depreciation of the currency of the country, the very salvation of our people is to come about? I am not going to answer the question, but I am going to say this. We have been talking about the great advantages of this depreciated currency to these countries. If this is true, then you make the strongest argument for the depreciation of our own currency that could possibly be made.

There is one other thing to remember in this connection. By doing this you might possibly help a score of industries in this country in an infinitesimal way, but they are the only people you will help.

Now, why do I say this? I say this because whenever you increase wholesale prices in this country, that is going back onto the shoulders of a population that now carries 12,000,000 people unemployed. It carries about 55,000,000 of the American population who are partially deprived of their livelihood in the agricultural sections of our country, and there never has been such destitution in the history of this country as there is to-day in agriculture, and there is not a man here who does not know it.

I have been here 10 years, and I have seen many bills come in here for the relief of agriculture. Everybody admits the necessity for this. If you will rehabilitate the agriculture of the country, to-morrow you will start the smokestacks in every New England factory just as soon as the reaction can set in. There is no question about it.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. Not now.

But how many of these agricultural relief bills have you even seen where either party ever became so active in support of that they resorted to a petition for the discharge of the committee considering them?

Oh, a handful of factories can go around the country with their propaganda; and as a result we are to undertake to write the most complicated bill there is upon any statute book with 10 minutes of debate on each side. There are millions of people to-day in the agricultural business with their cotton and wheat prices reduced 66 per cent since 1926, whereas the products of the Steel Trust, a beneficiary of this legislation, have only been reduced 19 per cent. Yet, my friends, those people do not get any bills introduced by my friend from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] petitioned out of committee by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

I say to you frankly, Mr. Chairman, that almost every day you read upon the front pages of the papers a description of these horrible conditions from the communities that have always furnished the finest examples of manhood to this country; a source that has been so productive in building up the institution of which we are all so proud. These people are standing out there in peasantry and yet you will bring in here a bill that will heap $1,000,000,000 upon their already overburdened shoulders in order to make the big interests of this country smile.

I want to say to my friends of the Republican faith that I thought you had a taste for roughness when you took unto yourselves the parenthood of the Hawley-Smoot bill. On last November the Democratic Party took that bill and they hammered you into insensibility and the people on November 8, holding an inquest, decided that the Republican Party's usefulness in this country was dead.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. No, not now.

Now, what do you do? You have not only got the poor, old Republican Party that has served a great purpose in the history of this country laid out cold on the slab, but now you come along under the leadership of my friend from New York [Mr. SNELL], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] and you place upon the cold, poor old Republican Party a shroud in the shape of the Crowther bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for two minutes in order to ask a question of the gentleman from Arkansas. He said a moment ago that if we would do something to relieve agriculture the industrial sections of our country would begin operations and prosper. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas how the industrial sections can prosper when to-day they are suffering from the competition of manufactured products coming from European and Asiatic countries that take the work away from the American laborer employed in our American industries. How is it going to benefit agriculture by passing relief legislation and put them on their feet again if the industrial manufacturing sections are not thriving?

He spoke about the iniquitous Smoot-Hawley tariff bill. I remember more than two years ago the Democrats were going from one end of the country to the other criticizing the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill as the most iniquitous measure ever put on the statute books. And yet the Democrats have had control of this Congress for two years and not one step have they taken to change one schedule in the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill. [Applause.] The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON] says wait until after March 4, and then we will show you how quick we will reduce the rates in the Hawley-Smoot bill. That was your cry two years ago. Your party promised the people you would lower the tariff rates in the Republican tariff act of 1930. Be honest about this, and I want to see if you have the courage to carry out your promise to do so. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON].

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio is a too high-class Republican, he is too great a statesman, to be the author of such a suggestion as he has just made. It would be frittering away the time of this House for any Democrat, or any Democratic Ways and Means Committee to have undertaken to consider a tariff bill, when we had only a half dozen majority in the House and a Republican Senate that would kill it, and a Republican President who would veto the bill if it should pass. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas has not answered my question. The Democratic Party carried on a campaign against the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, and I repeat that his party has been in control of Congress two years and has not endeavored to change one schedule of the Smoot-Hawley tariff law.

I call the gentleman's attention to a matter that came to me a few days ago. It was called to my attention that one of the American steel companies was buying Belgian steel skelp and fabricating it into pipe, and some of that pipe was going into the construction of our Federal buildings.

I called upon the Treasury to make an investigation, and they sent the usual letter that it was not the policy of the department to use any foreign material in the Federal buildings.

I got in touch with them again, and called attention to the fact that this American industry was buying Belgian skelp and fabricating it into steel pipe, and I wanted this investigated. A few days later I received a letter from the Treasury with a copy of a letter from this steel company stating that they were buying Belgian skelp and it was being fabricated into steel pipe and this steel is being sold on the American market in competition with the products of our own steel industry at a cost far below the price we can produce it in the United States. I represent a great steel industrial district, where we have at the present time 20,000 or more unemployed. It is not only steel skelp, but also steel bars, tin, pig iron, and many other steel products being imported into our country to-day from foreign lands. How can the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON] stand for and justify the importation of products into our country which is taking business and work from our American industries and American labor. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Chairman, I want to keep the record straight. It is true that we fought the Smoot-Hawley bill; it is true that we went to the people of this country when we put that up as an issue two years ago, and they turned out an overwhelmingly Republican House and replaced it with a Democratic House; and it is true that again this past year we went to the country on that same issue and they increased our present membership to the largest majority that ever sat here as a majority of either one of the parties. They not only gave us the House but they gave a Democratic Senate and a Democratic President, and we will show the gentleman in two years what we will have been able to do with the tariff.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I know that you made that kind of a campaign and promise to the people, but you have not dared to carry it out.

Mr. RAGON. We could not do it with a Republican President in power.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to this round-table discussion or running tariff debate this afternoon, in a consideration of tariff rates that affect business and commerce of this country at the ports of entry, and I have been wondering whether the gentlemen who have talked so readily and ably upon the question of the tariff on imports from foreign countries have awakened to a realization that they are talking about a bear in the woods, while there is a snake at their feet, ready to bite them.

I want to talk this afternoon for just a little while on a tariff at home, that is even more destructive of the commerce of this country than either the Smoot-Hawley bill or the Hoover-Grundy tariff act, or both of them combined, notwithstanding their well-known iniquities. I have reference to the freight rates upon the railroads of this country. In my district the principal industry is coal, and being interested in the subject of coal and the transportation of it to the markets of the Middle West and the Northwest where it is consumed by the constituents of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] and by my friend from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] and others in the Northwestern States, as well as my Ohio colleagues, I asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to furnish to me a statement showing the freight rates on coal from the Kentucky fields and the West Virginia fields to the Lake ports. Before I put in the RECORD that certificate showing the table of rates, I call attention to the fact that some of the best high-class steam coal in the world is selling now on the markets at the mine in northeastern Kentucky and West Virginia at 20 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds.

I call attention to the fact that a 50-ton car of coal sold at the mine at 20 cents per ton amounts to the huge sum of $10 per car, and in that price are included the wages of the men who produce it and load it onto the cars, taxes, insurance, mine supplies, and every other charge connected with the production of coal, while the freight rate on that same car of coal from points in eastern Kentucky to the city of Louisville in northern Kentucky is $1.69 a ton of 2,000 pounds, which would make the freight on the $10 carload of coal cost $84.50 for its delivery into the city of Louisville. The freight rate on the same carload of coal from the Kentucky fields to Toledo, Ohio, is $2.64 per ton, which on this $10 carload of coal costs $132 to deliver at Toledo, Ohio, or $122 more than it brings the producer at the mines. The same 50-ton car of coal delivered at Erie, Pa., with a freight rate of $3.06 per ton, costs the producer $153 or $143 more than it brings the producer at the mines; and the same 50-ton car of coal delivered at Buffalo, N. Y., on a freight rate of $3.48, costs the producer $174, which is $164 more than it brings the producer at the mines. Yet Members in the House of Representatives have not yet realized that that is just as much a tariff on the consumer of this country as the Smoot-Hawley or the Hoover-Grundy tariffs are upon the imports into the country. It must ultimately be paid by the man in the Northwest and in the Middle West and at the Lake ports who consumes the coal, and in addition to that he pays a transfer charge of $1.81 for transferring it from the railroad to the boat that takes it across the Lakes to the Lake ports in Michigan and other northwestern points.

I undertake to say that whoever controls the commerce and the finances of the country controls the business of the country. They are dictators, and yet in this country we have two independent offices, the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal reserve system which have more power in the country than the Executive and the Congress combined.

They talk about the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal reserve system, and I have heard them denounced, correctly so, upon the floor of this House as the archcriminals of the age. It was during Grover Cleveland's administration that the Interstate Commerce Commission was created, and it was brought forth for the purpose of preventing discriminations and preventing exorbitant freight rates, yet they refused to allow the railroads, who voluntarily offered to do so, to reduce their freight rates on coal from the South to the Lake ports and to the Mid West and the Northwest.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a table of rates, furnished me by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Traffic moving under rates stated above is subject to an additional emergency surcharge of 6 cents per 2,000 pounds.

Mr. MAY. Further, I want to call attention to the fact when you are talking about freight rates and tariff rates, that the freight rates on coal are significant of the fact that they prevail in the same proportion upon cotton and wheat and corn and every other product in this country, and yet the Interstate Commerce Commission, created for the express purpose of regulating freight rates, refuses to allow them to be regulated downward, and holds them at an equilibrium on the upward schedules.

I undertake to say that is what we might call an internal tariff, and railroad freight rates in this country are destroying the country just as much as tariff rates that prevent competition in foreign trade.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman not think that the excessively high freight rates are probably as chief a factor in the present plight of the railroads as any other factor which enters into their condition?

Mr. MAY. I am quite agreed with the gentleman, and if they were permitted to reduce their freight rates as well as their passenger rates, they would have more traffic and more business. Instead of the coal mines in my section of the country and every other coal field in the country being paralyzed, their miners' houses rotting down and crying for paint and occupied by animals and bats and owls, rather than by happy and industrious tenants, we would have greatly increased business for the coal mines, and resulting larger business and vastly greater revenues for the roads therefrom.

I call attention to the fact that in a certain proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission, that has been pending for 20 years, trying to regulate the differentials between coal shipped from the North and South and various fields, Docket 23240 and Docket 23241, Ohio Lake Cargo Coal Association against Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and others, it was shown by the railroad representatives in that proceeding that they were making as much as a dollar a ton profit upon every ton of coal shipped under the present rates from the South to the North.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Under the rates as I have given them to you, and as set forth in this statement, the average mileage of an engine running from Russell, Ky., to Toledo, Ohio, is one trip in 15 hours, with 2 train crews of 5 men. They pull 150 cars carrying 50 tons per car, or 7,500 tons of coal, for which they get $2.39 per ton, or a total sum of $17,925. It is excessive rates and it is excessive profits, and yet the railroads contend that if they were permitted to reduce those rates they could operate and compete with the busses and trucks and other forms of competition which they have.

I undertake to say that we have a situation in America similar to that which existed in 1832, when Andrew Jackson was President. The Bank of the United States undertook to dominate the money market. When Jackson was told by the president of the United States Bank that he controlled 75,000 votes in the United States and if he refused to continue the charter of the National Bank of the United States, he would bring about his defeat, Jackson answered: "That was too damned much power for one man in a free country." I think to-day the Interstate Commerce Commission is given too much power, or permitted to exercise too much power in this country on the question of regulating railroad traffic and freight rates, to the extent that they are destroying commerce throughout the country.

I propose, Mr. Chairman, before the next session of Congress closes, to undertake, if it is within my power to do it, to secure the passage of a bill to control the power of this commission and to give them the privilege only of exercising the functions and purposes for which the act was enacted which created that commission, that of preventing discriminations and exorbitant freight rates, rather than building up an obligarchy in a free country.

The price of the coal which I have mentioned was the lowest available price of which I have received information in the last few months, based on the lowest grade of coal commonly known as nut and slack; and since the mines in the fields referred to prepare their coal by separating it into three to five grades, ranging from nut and slack to a large-size block coal with intermediate grades, I am able to say to the members of this committee that the average of those grades on the market to-day will not exceed 80 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds f. o. b. mines; and using this price, which is the average of all the grades and covers the entire production of the mines, and following the same line of discussion, a 50-ton car of coal loaded in this field, all grades included, at 80 cents per ton, would average $40 per car sales price at the mine. Assuming that this is the average market price at the mines, and taking the average weight of the cars loaded at 50 tons per car, and taking the table of freight rates to which I have referred, each car of coal transported from the mines to Toledo, Ohio, at $2.64 per ton, freight rate, would cost $132 delivered at Toledo, Ohio, which would be $92 more than the price realized by the producer; and the same car of coal delivered at Erie, Pa., on a freight rate of $3.06 per ton, would cost for transportation to that point $153, which is $113 more than the coal yields to the producer at the mines and approximately three times the value of the car of coal; and the same car of coal transported from the mine to Buffalo, N. Y., on a freight rate of $3.48 per ton, as shown in the foregoing table, would cost $174, and $134 more than realized by the seller at the mines, which is more than three times the value of the coal.

What is true of coal is true of all other products transported over the railroads, including all agricultural crops, lumber, and all grades of building material and hardware. The commission assumes authority to fix and regulate freight rates, and within its jurisdiction under the law as it now exists it undoubtedly has this power, or at least no court has so far denied it the power to regulate transportation in interstate commerce and fix freight schedules and rates therefor. The power to regulate commerce among the several States is expressly confided to the Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States, and yet this commission usurps and arbitrarily exercises the powers and functions of the Congress of the United States.

In the early history of this Government, George Washington, the great leader of the movements of his day, for better and more extended transportation facilities was engaged in building canals and improving navigation of the great waterways by the simple method of removing obstructions therefrom, and to-day one of the great railroad systems of the country carries a marvelously equipped, commodious passenger train bearing the name, the "George Washington," celebrating the bicentennial of Washington's birth. It was the idea of Washington that in order to maintain and bind more closely the Union, the manufacturing industries of the North and East would transport and deliver their manufactured articles throughout the agricultural South in exchange for the produce of the farms of the South and West, and of course he had in mind the transportation and delivery of these goods at that time by boats, barges, and small commercial vessels by water and the stagecoach overland.

Were he to return to-day and walk up to the ticket agent in the Union Station in Washington and ask for a ticket to Alexandria, Va., he would be invited to become a passenger on the "George Washington," and I can imagine his surprise at the comfort, convenience, and beauties of that great train, and likewise I can conceive that he would be more surprised, and perhaps dumbfounded, if he should walk into the chamber of the Interstate Commerce Commission and inquire as to their legitimate functions and be told that these are the men that regulate and control the railroads, say how much they shall charge for the transportation of goods from one section of the country to the other, fix schedules and tariffs for the transportation of the products of the vineyards of California to New York, and of the manufacturing establishments from north to south and east to west and every nook and corner of the continent, and the rates to be charged for the transportation of the vegetables of the truck grower in Florida to the markets of the North and East, he would begin to wonder what has become of the Constitution framed by the convention over which he presided more than 150 years ago, and who created this great branch or department of the Government when he and his compatriots had provided only for three departments: legislative, executive, and judicial.

Washington's great mind would no doubt begin to grasp the whole situation, and presently you would hear him remark, "Such power as this was not contemplated by the framers of the Constitution, and if this commission can wield the powers and functions claimed for it, then it has power to destroy the markets of the wheat growers of the West, the fruit growers of the South and West, the coal producers of the North and East, the cotton farmers of the South, and the manufacturers in the great industrial factories of the North and East alike." Then if some lawyer should step up to the immortal Washington and reveal to him the fact that the great railroads of America that constitute and are the real arteries of commerce can not even, with their own money, install a railroad siding except by order of this commission, he would begin to wonder what has become of the law of competition, and the Constitution of the United States.

The economic life of the Nation depends very greatly upon the methods and means of transportation of the produce of the farm, the mines, the mills, and the factories to the markets of the country, and the railroads of this great industrial country of ours are to it and its commerce what the circulatory system is to the human body. If transportation by reasonable competition is not free and unrestrained, the result is stagnation and paralysis.

The question propounded by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRIGGS] was doubtless intended to provoke an argument on the question of the earning capacity of the railroads in connection with the volume of traffic available and the influence of the exorbitant freight rates thereon. The most striking illustration of the blighting effect of the high freight rates as now maintained in the country is, by comparison, made plain by reference to the effect of the provisions of the revenue act of 1932 which required upon first-class mail a 3-cent stamp in lieu of a 2-cent stamp, the result being that by reason of the increased charge there was a depreciation in the amount of business and a resulting loss of many millions of dollars to the Post Office Department, without taking into consideration the fact that failure to use the mails for means of communication naturally resulted in a large decrease in the amount of commercial business transacted. Likewise, if the railroads were permitted to engage in legitimate competition with each other with reasonable regulation and permitted, as they have often sought to do, to reduce their freight rates on the major products of the country, they would enjoy a vastly greater income and, in my judgment, achieve many desirable results not obtainable under the present system.

As I have already stated, the powers accorded to the Interstate Commerce Commission and exercised by it are so arbitrary and unlimited that its orders and regulations amount not to regulation but to confiscation and destruction of the markets of the country. Members of the House may talk all they wish about high protective tariff; they may denounce the Smoot-Hawley and the Hoover-Grundy laws to their hearts' content, but I contend that the most disastrous and destructive tariff system on the face of the earth is the tariff schedules being maintained by the railroads and other means of transportation throughout the country. It has been very aptly said that "competition is the life of trade," and while I do not believe in—nor would I favor—any resort whatever to cutthroat methods of competition between the common carriers, either by land or water, yet I believe one of the chief factors in the destruction of business in this country is the outrageous and exorbitant cost of transportation.

We may pass legislation for the relief of the farmer from interest rates and mortgage indebtedness; we may pass relief measures and continue the unwise practice of giving doles to big business or doles to individuals; we may regulate tariff schedules and thereby improve our foreign trade, but if we do not provide some means by which the prohibitive tariffs embraced in freight and passenger rates now existing upon the railroads of this country will be cut, all of our efforts for relief from our economic difficulties will be of no avail.

During the World War and immediately following it there were flat horizontal increases of freight rates from time to time; first, it was a flat 15 per cent raise and another of 25 per cent in 1918, and another of 25 to 40 per cent in 1920, and yet at that time prices of farm commodities and products of the mines and factories of this country were normal and sufficient to yield a reasonable profit to the producer, and the cost of transportation at that time did not exceed the market value of the produce transported, as is the case in thousands of instances now. The Congress of the United States undertook by resolution to induce the Interstate Commerce Commission to so adjust their structure of freight and passenger tariffs as to relieve the then supposedly distressing condition of the farmers, and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 6, 1924, lengthy debate was indulged in upon the floor of this House upon a resolution proposing to establish and declare the policy of the Congress with respect thereto. The first paragraph of that resolution is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That it is hereby declared to be the true policy in rate making to be pursued by the Interstate Commerce Commission in adjusting freight rates that the conditions which at any given time prevail in our several industries should be considered, in so far as it is legally possible to do so, to the end that commodities may freely move with fair profit to the producer and sold at a reasonable price to the consumer.

Then after directing the commission to make a thorough investigation of the rate structure of common carriers that were subject to the interstate commerce act, the resolution concluded:

In view of the existing depression in agriculture, a basic industry, the commission is hereby directed to effect with the least practicable delay such reasonable and lawful changes in the rate structure of the country as will promote the freedom of movement by common carriers of the products of agriculture affected by that depression, including livestock, at the lowest possible reasonable and lawful rates compatible with the maintenance of adequate transportation service: Provided, That no investigation or proceeding resulting from the adoption of this resolution shall be permitted to delay the decision of cases now pending before the commission involving rates on products of agriculture, and that such cases shall be decided in accordance with this resolution.

Thus, it will be seen that the Congress not only declared a policy, but undertook to have it put into practice by the commission, and even went to the extent of directing that rate controversies then pending should be decided in accordance with the resolution. Were it possible to do so, I would be glad to quote at length from the discussions of the membership of this House at that time upon that question, but it is sufficient to say that a joint resolution of January 30, 1925 (U. S. Code, title 49, sec. 55), provided:

That it is hereby declared to be the true policy in rate making to be pursued by the Interstate Commerce Commission in adjusting freight rates, that the conditions which at any given time prevail in our several industries should be considered in so far as it is legally possible to do so to the end that commodities may freely move.

There is something radically wrong in a government where an individual department or commission is delegated the constitutional functions and powers of the Congress to regulate commerce among the several States when it is possible for that commission to so adjust rates and tariffs of freight and passenger rates as to destroy the industries of one section of the country while they build up and promote the industries in another section of the country. All of this is possible and has, in fact, been done as in the case of coal shipped from the southern fields to the lake ports in competition with coal shipped from eastern fields to the lake ports where a freight differential is permitted and adhered to by the commission amounting to 35 cents on each ton of coal; discriminatory and destructive of the business of the southern coal operators, this 35-cent differential is nothing more nor less than imposition of a local tariff that must ultimately come from the pockets of the consumer and result in the paralysis of the business against which it is directed. By reason of this situation, a large number of coal operating companies in the southern fields have been exterminated, completely bankrupted, and their mines abandoned, involving many thousands of dollars, and the few that survive the blighting effects of this freight differential, plus the exorbitant rates otherwise allowed, are practically all in receivership. As a result of prohibitive freight rates prevailing under orders of the commission throughout the country, the rice growers of Arkansas are trucking thousands of tons of rice to Idaho and exchanging it for Idaho beans and potatoes, and the railroads are the losers of the traffic and the revenue to be derived therefrom.

I have already discussed the situation relating to value, and while I do not contend that value is the only criterion for arriving at proper freight charges, it is nevertheless one of the important factors and has a definite bearing on values as well as in determining what the traffic will bear. So far as coal is concerned, the average of freight rates for the year 1932 applicable to the transportation of bituminous coal throughout the country, it is a fact that the freight charges imposed upon coal as a commodity amounted to 64 per cent of the retail sales value of the products at the point of delivery upon the market, so that, as a matter of fact, the remaining 36 per cent of the sales price of coal must take care not only of the cost of production but of the dealers' and retailers' profits to be derived therefrom. In some instances the entire revenue of the railroads received from bituminous coal represents more than 75 per cent of the total gross receipts taken in by the roads in the form of revenue.

The railroads themselves use about 20 per cent of the entire production of bituminous coal for fuel purposes, and as a result of competition of other fuels and forms of energy, the total mass production of coal in the United States depreciated in 1932 approximately 200,000,000 tons, while several hundred millions more have been lost by reason of competing fuels such as gas, fuel oil, and electricity. In view of the fact that the railroads consume from 20 to 25 per cent of all bituminous coal produced and that they receive freights equal to 17 per cent of the freight revenue on all class 1 railroads, 23 per cent on 37 roads, 75 per cent on 5 of the 37 roads, and 50 per cent on 7 of the 37 roads, so that by reason of the failure and refusal of the commission to obey the express mandate of the Congress of the United States by following the policy outlined by the Congress, not only the coal industry is being throttled and destroyed by prohibitive freight rates, but the carriers themselves are being bankrupted by the rates they are required to maintain under the orders of the commission.

In the closing days of this session of the Congress there is little or no hope of any remedial legislation on this subject, and doubtless if a bill should be referred to a committee at this late day in the session, it would not even be accorded a hearing, much less be reported, and any action of this session of the Congress on the subject would doubtless be futile.

The truth of the matter is the railroads have been regulated to death, and while regulation to some extent is necessary, the sooner the railroads are relieved of the clutches of this all-powerful tribunal of the Government and permitted to engage in legitimate competition, the sooner both the railroads and the country will start toward a substantial and lasting recovery. The railroads are being assessed not only upon a high rate of values of their properties, but they are paying multiplied millions in franchise taxes, and being one of the largest industries and, perhaps, the greatest tax-paying organization in the country, they are being required to contribute to the burdens of government, and the money that is being paid by them in the form of taxes is being used by the Government to build canals and waterways and hard-surface roads upon which their competitors are permitted without restraint to indulge in all sorts of competition with the railroads. It is unfair, and everyone knows it, and the trucks and busses should be put under the same regulations or the shackles should be taken off the railroads and they permitted to compete in a legitimate way with their competitors.

As for me, Mr. Chairman, sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish, I propose to exert my energies so long as I am a Member of this House, or until something is done to relieve agricultural and other industries in this country from the grasp of this giant bureaucrat.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, on Thursday last I was privileged to appear before the House Committee on Banking and Currency and there to make an argument in favor of refinancing farm mortgages and in support of a bill which I had introduced for that purpose. In order not to take up the time of the House this afternoon, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the remarks which I made before the committee on that occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is unnecessary for me to remind you that the question of refinancing farm mortgages is the most important question before the Congress and before the country to-day. The Bureau of Economics of the Department of Agriculture reports that there are outstanding mortgages on real estate in the amount of $9,241,390,000.

In addition to that amount there are other farm indebtednesses of some $4,283,000,000. So that the farmers are indebted in the amount of approximately $13,500,000,000.

Mr. REILLY. Is that additional indebtedness inclusive of second mortgages?

Mr. HASTINGS. My understanding is that the additional indebtedness does not include second mortgages but includes chattel mortgages and all other indebtedness of the farmer.

Mr. REILLY. Does the amount $9,241,390,000 take in second mortgages?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is my understanding—and I get this information from the hearings before the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, page 739 of their hearings—that is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is only their estimate of it; that is, there are no absolutely accurate statistics on the subject aside from the reports made by the farm owners—those who operate the farms.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is the best estimate that we have. I think there was a statement in last Sunday's New York Times to the effect that the amount was $9,100,000,000. That is a pretty close estimate of the farm-mortgage indebtedness.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that your time is limited. I think I can cover the essential points in a few minutes. I want to make it plain that I favor any one of the bills to relieve the mortgage situation—I have no pride of authorship.

The bill which I have introduced, to refinance farm mortgages, is H. R. 14135, and I should like to explain its provisions.

In the first place, I tried in this bill to avoid as many new setups as I could. The administration of the bill is placed under the Farm Loan Board that was created by the act of July 17, 1916.

Second: The bill retains the same districts that have been outlined in the farm land bank system.

Third: The bill creates a new agency, known as the Federal Rural Mortgage Land Bank, to take the place of the farm land bank. The head offices are placed in the same cities where the farm land banks are located, because we want to utilize some of their employes, and benefit from their experience.

In the first place, the bill provides that stock shall be subscribed by the Secretary of the Treasury in the minimum sum of $25,000,000 and may be increased to the maximum sum of $40,000,000, to each of the 12 banks, which would make a maximum amount of $480,000,000.

Every director is appointed by the Farm Board, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; so that every officer and employee is a Federal officer.

In the fifth place, the bill does away with local loan associations. There is no necessity for them under this set-up. It creates an agent, in the place of a local loan association, who would be authorized to serve one or more counties. Those agents are to receive applications and forward them, make reports upon them and perform such other duties as may be required.

All of these officers are appointed by the Federal rural mortgage land bank and approved by the Farm Board and the Secretary of the Treasury, so that they are all Government officers.

The amount of a loan that may be made to any one borrower is raised to 60 per cent of the appraised value of the land instead of 50 per cent, as under the rural credit bill, and to 25 per cent instead of 20 per cent of the value of the permanent insured improvements.

Now, let me anticipate a question that I know the committee will ask and that is, "Why don't you use the farm land banks"? I have tried to use them, but I found that farm land banks have outstanding loans in the sum of $1,200,000,000. That is the latest information from the Farm Board of the amount of outstanding loans. A great many of these loans are delinquent and are either foreclosed or in the process of foreclosure.

Another reason is that, in my judgment, you can not exercise the same control over them, because some of the directors are elected by the vote of the individual shareholders that have subscribed for stock in these banks since they were organized in 1916.

Mr. STEVENSON. The directors are not elected by the shareholders?

Mr. HASTINGS. A part of them are.

Mr. STEVENSON. Three of them are elected and three of them are selected.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct; I understand that.

Mr. STEVENSON. The board really has control of them.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not think you can exercise the same complete control over them as you could if all were appointed as this bill provides.

Another provision in the bill is that the Government of the United States guarantees the bonds, both principal and interest. The rural mortgage land banks may issue bonds in the same manner as Federal farm land banks may issue bonds. That would enable them, with the amount of capital stock authorized, to issue bonds in the sum of twenty times the amount of their capital stock and take care of all outstanding mortgages.

While the bill is rather long and technical, it follows almost identically the language of the rural credits bill approved July 17, 1916, with the exceptions that I have indicated and some others I will point out.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is it the purpose to take care of all the land mortgages.

Mr. HASTINGS. The purpose is to take care of any or all who may apply. It is intended to be a permanent and constructive measure.

Mr. STEVENSON. In other words, ultimately it means a transfer into the Treasury of the United States of all the land mortgages in America.

Mr. HASTINGS. No; that is not the purpose and will not be the effect.

Mr. STEVENSON. If they all apply, that is what it means.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not think so. The bill provides that every borrower should subscribe for stock, just as an individual borrower would take stock under the rural credits bill, and it contemplates at the end of 10 years that the borrowers will own these banks instead of the Government owning them.

Mr. STEVENSON. What percentage of the loan is it contemplated the borrower should take in stock?

Mr. HASTINGS. Five per cent.

Mr. STEVENSON. Five per cent?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes. These loans are limited in amount to $10,000. That is the limit under the rural credits bill. The minimum amount that one may borrow is $200.

It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall subscribe for all the stock. The money is to be advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The language is the same as that which provided for money to be advanced under the home loan bank bill. The bill really combines the two.

It provides—and I want to give my reasons for this—against a second mortgage. It provides that in the mortgage that is made there shall be a provision or covenant that the mortgagor will not make a second mortgage. Loans are only made on first mortgages, up to 60 per cent, as I stated a moment ago, of the present value of the land and 25 per cent of the insured permanent improvements.

My judgment is if this bill were passed and competent men appointed as agents representing the banks and the mortgagors, the farmers throughout the country, they would be able to scale down a very large percentage of the amounts of the mortgages and the mortgagees would be glad to accept in lieu of their mortgages liquid money to the amount of 60 per cent of the appraised value of the land, which the banks would be authorized to loan under the terms of this bill.

Speaking from my own personal experience out in my State, I believe that most, if not all, of the mortgagees of farm lands would be willing to accept 60 per cent of the appraised value of the land and release their lien, so that a first mortgage could be taken by the bank—if sold under an order of foreclosure, it may and perhaps would bring less.

It is important that the farmer have some equity left in the farm. If he is allowed to mortgage his land a second or third time, he has no hope to start with to pay off the indebtedness, and the present mortgagor might as well foreclose and take the farm. You are only postponing the evil day.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Your theory, Mr. HASTINGS, is something like this, as I understand it: The farm lands of the country are now mortgaged for much more than their present value. If the mortgages remain as they are, the farmers will ultimately go into bankruptcy and will be in grief between now and that time. This legislation which you propose may result in scaling down the mortgages to a point where they can come out, if they are thrifty and use ordinary judgment and energy in the management of their business.

Mr. HASTINGS. And have some equity left; yes. In a nutshell, that is what the bill provides and its purpose.

Mr. REILLY. Where are you going to get the money?

Mr. HASTINGS. Through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. REILLY. You will have to have additional money; you will have to sell bonds?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes. I am glad you asked that question. The bill authorizes this rural mortgage bank to issue bonds exactly under the same terms and in the same language as is provided for in the rural credit bill for farm land banks, not to exceed twenty times the amount of their capital stock.

Mr. REILLY. But they can not draw that rate of interest.

Mr. STRONG. Your idea is that they can sell those bonds with the Government guarantee behind it?

Mr. HASTING. That is what I was going to say.

The bill provides that the Government guarantee the bonds, principal, and interest. Farming is our leading industry, and I think we are justified in going just as far as we can to save the farmers of this country from bankruptcy and ruin. Agriculture should be placed on a parity with industry.

The bonds are to be exempt from all taxation. The Government guarantees them and there is a requirement that the borrowers subscribe for stock of the banks as in the case of farm land banks.

The hope is expressed in the bill that ultimately the borrowers will own and control the banks. When that time comes and they take them over, they can elect their own directors, as they may do in the farm land banks.

Mr. STRONG. What will be the incentive for people to buy bonds in an institution in which the borrowers will eventually control and who are going to manage it? Would you do it?

Mr. HASTINGS. The Government guarantees these bonds and guarantees the interest. Both the principal and the interest are tax exempt.

Mr. STRONG. I was wondering, if you and I are trustees of a fund to invest, how much we would invest in an institution the borrowers of which were eventually going to run and control the system?

Mr. HASTINGS. The bill permits Congress to legislate and release control if and when the stockholders, the individual borrowers, own three-fourths of the stock of the bank and after 10 years. Bonds thereafter issued would not be guaranteed. In my judgment, the bill will provide a means to refinance all distressed mortgages. Many mortgagors will want to make application for loans.

Mr. REILLY. How can you take them over? Are not these farms mortgaged now to their full value and more?

Mr. HASTINGS. If that be true, I do not see how you can help them unless you get the mortgagors to scale down the amount of their mortgage liens. I do not know of any case that has come to my attention where a mortgagee would not be more than glad to scale down his mortgage lien rather than go to court, pay a lawyer's fee and court costs, and be subject to the delay of a decree being entered, wait perhaps a year or two before he can get a deed; as I say, I do not know of any case where a mortgagee would not prefer to take 60 per cent of the value of the land in ready money. I believe that there are thousands of cases of threatened foreclosure of mortgages that could and would be compromised, where the mortgagors would be willing to scale down the amounts and release their liens for liquid money of 60 per cent of the appraised value of the land.

You could get thrifty farmers on the farms and they would retain some equity in their lands.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. How would you get thrifty farmers on the farms?

Mr. HASTINGS. What is the question, Mr. Goldsborough?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. How would this legislation get thrifty farmers on the farms? They may be thrifty already. I am not criticizing the farmers. I think they do more work for what they get than any other class. But how would this legislation assist in getting thrifty farmers on the farms?

Mr. STRONG. They may be thrifty when they go on the farms, but how long does it last?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, that is a pertinent question and I want to answer it. This bill provides for the appointment of local agents in the several counties. One agent may serve one or more counties. If the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] were the local agent in his particular county, he would not make a favorable recommendation on the application of a thriftless man for a loan. In that way I think we would weed out a great many of the less thrifty farmers and have the more conservative, economical, hard-working farmers whom you could recommend as being worthy of some moral risk.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Let me ask you another question, Mr. HASTINGS: Of course, the farm-loan banks have had a great deal of experience with the results of having local agents. The natural tendency is to sympathize with their own people in their desire to get money from the Government. That has been their experience.

Mr. HASTINGS. You are mistaken about land banks having local agents. If you examine the rural credit bill you will see what I mean. Refer to section 15 of the act. Now, I happened to be on this committee when that legislation was passed. Section 15 of that bill provides that the only local agents that may be appointed are banks or trust companies and that they must guarantee the loans. If you will examine that act you will find that provision in section 15 of the act.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The practical situation in my country is this: In counties where they have the local farm-loan organization they have some man whom they call their agent. They take his judgment and he is the one who actually does the work and to whom they pay some sort of compensation. That is what happens in practice. Of course, in some of the counties, the local organization is not functioning and a loan is applied for direct to the Federal land bank. They send out an inspector from Baltimore, but they also have a local representative. I know that is a fact. That is how it works in practice.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am not talking about the farm agents. I am talking about the agents of the farm-land banks.

You will find you are mistaken about that. The farm land banks do not have any agents in the counties. We have agricultural agents there but no agents of farm land banks. The farm land banks agents, under section 15 of the act of July 17, 1916, must be banks or trust companies, and they must indorse or guarantee the loans.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I know what they do.

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me say this to you, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I said when the rural credit bill was being framed, that when local loan associations met and formed an organization and secured their loans, that there would be no inducement to meet again.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. If you will allow me, Mr. HASTINGS, I did not finish my question. The insurance companies, for instance, have a local agent who writes insurance, let us say fire insurance. When a loss occurs the agent theoretically represents the insurance company, but actually he represents his client in trying to adjust the loss.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is true.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. How does your bill get away from that local situation?

Mr. HASTINGS. Here is how it does it. The local agent is just a forwarding agent. He would be the preliminary representative of the rural-mortgage land banks. All applications for loans would have to be forwarded to the bank. The bank would have an examiner to pass on the title. The bank would have appraisers of the land whom they send out to view and appraise the land. The loan would not, of course, be made on the appraisement of the local agent at all.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is, under your bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes. The appraisement must be made by an appraiser not the agent. This provision is in the exact language of the farm land bank bill. I have only substituted the agents for the local loan associations.

Mr. STEVENSON. Let me suggest there that the local loan associations have been dominated, of course, by the secretary of the association, and he is the agent of the thriftless fellow that you talk about who wants to borrow. He always exhibits to those people who finally pass on the loan his splendid wife and fine children. The old man himself is not worth a darn, but because of his wife and children they think the loan is a good loan, because the wife and children will work it out. That is the situation.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, so far as my information goes, there has not been a meeting of any local loan association in my district in the last 10 years. After the local loan association has met and organized and secured the loans for their members from the farm land banks, there was never any inducement for them to meet any more. They are not interested in having any new borrowers to come in and secure loans.

Mr. MCFADDEN. Are they functioning now, are they taking new loans?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not think the farm-land banks are making any loans now. They are not in my State, certainly not in my district.

Mr. MCFADDEN. The local associations, are they functioning, are they making loans?

Mr. HASTINGS. No.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. HASTINGS, I have been watching you for 16 years in the House. You have been a student of this particular problem for a long time. You have always shown a great interest in it. I want to direct your attention to what the tendency is and where it is going to lead us, as it looks to me. You remember once away back yonder there was a country called Egypt and one Joseph, the son of Israel, representing the Government of Egypt, loaned the farmer everything he needed. That was all right, but first he got the capital. We are going the other way. Then he got the land. The Government got it. They have been tenants and peons ever since.

Do you not think we are driving in that same direction, to the point where Uncle Sam is going to own all the land in this country? It will not be owned by Joseph, but it will be owned by the land banks and others.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not care to detain you by picturing to you the distressful condition of the farmers throughout the country to-day. You read about their financial condition in every day's paper.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not have to read it. I am one of them.

Mr. HASTINGS. You have read about the situation in Iowa. The same is true in Wisconsin. The same is true in Oklahoma. The situation as described in Iowa is measurably true in every agricultural State in this country. Let me say that I was amazed, while going about over my district, to be informed that in certain of my counties, 65 per cent of the acreage of the land was foreign owned. In other words, mortgages had been foreclosed either by individuals, insurance companies, or savings banks, or foreign mortgage companies had taken them over. Those farms were occupied by tenants. The improvements were deteriorating, the soil was eroding. The land was becoming less productive.

It is an alarming statement to make that 65 per cent of the land of a county is foreign owned.

Let me suggest another thing, and this, I presume, is true in your own districts. Very few, I would say only a comparative few, are paying taxes in my State. That unfortunately is true. We are getting very little money for current expenses, for running schools or the county government. The payment of taxes is being postponed by legislation. The farmers can't pay them with the present prices of farm products.

We dislike to advertise this condition as obtaining in our own State, but it is true, and it is true, I think, in a large number of other sections of the country. Press reports so indicate.

Mr. MCFADDEN. I did not quite understand all of your statement in regard to the farms being foreign controlled. Do you mean that people outside of the State own this land? What class of ownership is that?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. MCFADDEN, I do not have exact information just where the owners of the farms live. Some of them, many of them, are outside of the State, but I mean to say that the owners do not live on the farms. Many mortgages have been foreclosed. The farms have been taken away from the original owners. They are not being operated, they are not being cultivated by the people who own the lands. I am sorry, but I do not have more definite information to give you in reply to your question.

Mr. McFADDEN. What I was wondering was this: Is there a deliberate control being exercised by outside interests who have come in the State to take control of these lands? For instance, in Oklahoma you have oil lands. Do you think that some of the oil companies are picking up these lands?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not think so, Mr. McFADDEN. I do not think that the oil companies want these farm lands unless they have prospective oil value for the opportunity to pay taxes on them, any more than individuals or mortgage companies or insurance companies want them.

But a few years ago real-estate mortgages were regarded as the very best investment. A great many agents of insurance companies and mortgage companies and other outside companies, representatives of people with capital, scoured our new State of Oklahoma for real-estate mortgages, advertising money to loan on farm lands.

Farming conditions are very bad now, as Mr. GILCHRIST, of Iowa, stated on the floor of the House the other day. He said corn was selling in his district at 6 cents a bushel. I think it is selling at around 12 to 14 cents in my district. Oats are around 12 to 14 cents a bushel; wheat is selling for from 25 to 30 cents a bushel. As a result of the low price of farm products the farmers have been unable to pay interest, they have been unable to pay taxes. They are bankrupt and discouraged—they need help.

Mr. LUCE. You just touched upon one phase of this subject, Mr. HASTINGS, that has not received the benefit of any discussion here, so far as I know, and that has perplexed me at any rate greatly. You spoke of the decrease in the fertility of the soil of some of these farms. I have seen it stated that fully 40 per cent of the farm lands of this country ought not to be kept under cultivation. They are the marginal lands.

I have wondered whether legislation of this class, testimony concerning which we have been listening to now for some days, and which is widely proposed, does not encourage the continuing cultivation of marginal lands that might, to the common good, be thrown out? And before you answer, I may say that in my own neighborhood, in New England, the ordinary workings of the economic laws led to a large increase in the number of abandoned farms. In recent years, many of them have been taken up for summer use by city dwellers. The problem is no longer serious. But the irresistible laws of supply and demand led to our discarding the lands that were no longer profitable.

Do you think it is wise for us to encourage the owners of marginal lands to continue the inevitable failure of these lands?

Mr. HASTINGS. In reply to the question propounded, I think it would have exactly the opposite effect; because in my judgment agents carefully selected, men of judgment, men of character, would advise prospective borrowers against making application for loans on these so-called marginal lands. They would advise them that there was no hope for them to ultimately pay out on that kind of land. The agents would not make a favorable report on an application to borrow money on that character of land.

Suppose the gentleman, my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, were the agent in his county and of the surrounding counties, and a prospective borrower comes to him and says, "I want to make application to the rural mortgage land bank to borrow money." You would sit down and discuss the matter with the prospective borrower. You would say to him, "John, that is your tract of land out there. I have known it for years. That land is eroded. It is losing its productivity. There is no hope for you to pay out on that land. It is better for you not to make an application for this loan. I am sorry, but I will be unable to recommend favorably your application for a loan on this character, this class of land. It would only bring you to grief in the end. It would be better to deny you now than to have you get a loan and then lose all that you may expend in improving it."

I think that if you picked out the proper men to represent the bank you would discourage just such loans as that and in that way you would weed out the thriftless class and in that way you would get a better class of farmers.

This bill would require borrowers to retain an equity in their farms and they would be able to entertain the hope that at some time they would own unemcumbered their own home.

I have not yet explained to you that the bill provides for payment on the amortization plan. It requires borrowers to add 1 per cent to the interest rate, the same as is required by farm land banks, which makes a total of 4 per cent per annum. One per cent of the 4 would be applied toward the reduction of the principal of the loan. It has been figured out that in thirty-four and a half years, 1 per cent, payable one-half per cent semiannually compounded, will pay off the principal.

Mr. LUCE. Your answer is complete, I think, so far as it goes. But unquestionably some large part of the demand for farm relief that reaches us is coming from men who occupy marginal lands. I do not see how this type of legislation can avoid encouraging their continued occupancy.

Mr. HASTINGS. It depends on the efficiency of the administration. If you get the proper men to administer provisions of the bill, it will work. The bill provides that every single one of these officers shall be a Government officer, Government-appointed, so that they may be selected with care.

Mr. LUCE. In this matter of administration, this committee has learned from time to time of difficulties that may not have come to your attention. In the matter of the farm loan system, for instance, it was brought to our notice that the secretaries of the loan associations in many cases were paying no further attention to developing the farm loan system, but were acting as agents for others.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. LUCE, that was the weak spot in that act, as I pointed out when the bill was being drafted. I was a member of this committee when the act of July 17, 1916, known as the rural credit bill, was proposed and reported. The truth is that many secretary-treasurers of local loan associations were appointed without reference to their special fitness. I venture to say that thousands of them should not have been appointed. But under the terms of this bill that is changed. These local agents are not appointed by local loan associations nor upon their recommendation; they are to be selected with very great care by the farm land banks and approved by your Farm Board and the Secretary of the Treasury. So that we should select the best-equipped men in the several counties to represent this new set-up or the new rural mortgage banks that are provided in the bill.

Mr. LUCE. Do you contemplate paying them salaries or a commission?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is to be regulated by the rural mortgage bank.

Mr. LUCE. If commissions, it would tempt them to make these loans, would it not?

Mr. HASTINGS. Their compensation is left to the rural mortgage farm land banks under rules and regulations to be adopted, approved by the Farm Board and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LUCE. That is all.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. HASTINGS, I was interested in your reference to the manner in which applications for loans on these marginal lands, unproductive lands, were handled. What is going to happen to that poor fellow that has got a family and lives on some of that poor land and can not get along? Is he going to lose his place? Are we going to have him as a pauper? Or is he going to be moved onto some of this productive land, or is any assistance to be rendered to him?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. McFADDEN, I hope he can be helped. If his land is such that there is any chance or any hope through good advice and assistance of his being able to pay out his loan, then that loan may be recommended and favorably considered. But if it is a hopeless case, if this land is eroded, and can not be terraced, so that it is nonproductive, if there is not any chance of his being able to pay off the loan in the end, you had better be frank with him and deny him the loan now. That is my judgment about it.

Mr. McFADDEN. I was on the committee when the Federal farm land act was passed, as you were, and I recall the discussions. I have watched the operation of the system during these years. I am aware of the fact that these secretary-treasurers of the local loan farm associations went out and solicited loans. They were anxious to build up a big business for their own association. There was not the care exercised that should have been exercised in the determination of values as a basis for these loans. It has resulted in the chaotic condition which we see here, as shown by so many foreclosures to-day. But under the plan you have just set out here of picking these men, these loans are to be approved by local people and then by the Farm Loan Board, and then by the Secretary of the Treasury; is that correct?

Mr. HASTINGS. No, you are mistaken. The bill provides for an approval of the loans by the rural mortgage banks. It does not require the approval of loans by the Farm Board or the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is the way I understood you.

Mr. HASTINGS. I regret that I did not make myself clear. The agent would receive the applications and would advise the prospective borrowers of the requirements. The agents would be supplied with blank forms and detailed instructions. They would talk the matter over with each prospective borrower. The chances are that the agent would personally know every farm in the county and when the applicant, the owner of the farm, would come to him to discuss the matter with the agent, the following conversation would take place: "Now, John, is this your 80 acres of land upon which you live that you want to borrow on?"

"Yes."

"What amount of taxes are you paying?" He would give the information.

"What kind of improvements are there on the farm? How much of it is in cultivation?" and so on. The agent would get and report all the facts. But he could not take final action. All he could do is to forward the application and report to the rural mortgage land bank for his district for its consideration and action. First, the bank would have to examine the title and, second, the land would be visited, viewed, and appraised by the bank's appraiser, just as the farm land bank does now, and the appraiser would not be a local man at all. He would appraise the land and report back to the rural mortgage land bank, just as they do to farm-land banks. The application for the loan would not go any further than the rural mortgage land bank that is to be created under the provisions of the bill. In that way consideration of the application for loans will be expedited.

Mr. McFADDEN. I understood you to say that it had to be approved by the board and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HASTINGS. What I meant to say was that all officers were selected or appointed in that way with the approval of the Farm Board.

Mr. STRONG. Yes; you were referring to the selection of the agents. What compensation do these agents get for taking the application?

Mr. HASTINGS. That would be governed by the rural mortgage land bank and would be covered by their rules and regulations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me ask you this question, Mr. HASTINGS: After all, what would be the difference between the principle involved there and the principle involved in the present plan so far as making the loans is concerned?

Mr. HASTINGS. The bill does away with local loan associations. So far as the present local loan associations are concerned, they do not function and are of no value. I do not believe that many of them have ever had a legal meeting since they were first organized and secured their first loans.

In my judgment as long as you compel a farmer to join one of these local loan associations and make his application through them, that you will not make a success of the system.

I have had pending in Congress since 1916 a bill to amend section 15 of the rural credit bill authorizing the appointment of agents, as is provided for in this bill, rather than through local loan associations; and in that effort I have had the sympathetic assistance of my good friend from Kansas [Mr. STRONG].

Mr. STRONG. You remember, Mr. HASTINGS, that my bill, under which these banks are now operating—that is, the liberalization bill—contained that provision, but they struck it out on the floor of the House.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; that is right. I will say that this amendment, which embodies your ideas as well as my own, to amend section 15, had the recommendation of the Farm Loan Board a few years ago. We tried to get it considered, but because of the congestion of the calendar we were unable to get favorable action.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do you think the cooperative feature of the old system has broken down?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes. I do not think it is of any value at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My original question was this: What would be the difference, after all, in the manner of the approval of the loan? Do they not now depend upon the recommendations of the appraiser for the land bank who is sent out to appraise the land?

Mr. HASTINGS. They do; yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that is your plan, is it not?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; that is my plan of appraisement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He is the one who determines finally whether or not the loan should be made?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; the officials of the bank pass on the loan. The truth is, of course, not only have the land banks lost but insurance companies and all other mortgagees have lost; everybody that has invested in mortgages has lost because of the depreciation in land values. That applies to all classes of business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me ask you this question: You are a man of experience and one who has given a great deal of study to this question. Is there any way out of it except to scale down these enormous values?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not think so. I think this bill does that in a constitutional way by offering them a certain amount not to exceed 60 per cent of the value of the land and requiring that no second mortgage may be taken. I believe most all mortgagees throughout the country will be glad to accept that amount in full settlement of their indebtedness.

Mr. REILLY. The principal point of your bill is the guarantee of the Government of the payment of the interest.

Mr. HASTINGS. Both the principal and interest of the bonds.

Mr. REILLY. Have you any idea how much that will cost?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not think the Government is liable to suffer much loss other than, perhaps, the administrative costs. I think that better conditions are going to prevail in this country. I do not believe that corn is always going to sell at from 6 to 14 cents a bushel. I do not believe that oats are going to continue to sell for 10 to 15 cents a bushel, and I do not believe that wheat is going to sell for 25 to 30 cents a bushel. I believe that if you pass a permanent law, one that will operate for a long time so that the farmer can get on his feet and will be encouraged in the belief that some day he will own his own home, it will help greatly toward bringing about better conditions.

Mr. STRONG. If those prices prevail, the more the farmer borrows the worse shape he will be in.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; of course.

Mr. MCFADDEN. How is a good appraiser going to arrive at the proper value of a farm to-day under these conditions so as to be able to justify the recommendation of a loan on the farm? Would not any value that he places on it to-day be merely a guess?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is a perfectly legitimate question. Of course values have shrunk. But I think a man could arrive at a pretty fair estimate of the value of good farm lands throughout the country. It would not be the value placed on the land in 1919 or 1920 or 1921. But the appraiser would take into consideration the amount the land was returned for taxes, and what the land would produce; the location; whether they are marginal lands, whether they have eroded; the character of the improvements; and all other factors.

If I were the appraiser I would also take into consideration the moral risk, the character of the applicant, whether he had been a successful farmer, whether he had tenacity of purpose, and his capacity to run the farm.

A great many other factors would enter into the appraisement if I had it to do and if I were the appraiser.

But I think that a pretty fair estimate could be made of the value of farm lands. These appraisers would be selected, not from that particular locality but from various parts of the country, so that they would be familiar at the same time with local conditions and with the value of farm lands generally in those localities.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask you for some figures, if you have them. What percentage of farms of this country are mortgaged?

Mr. HASTINGS. These hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations for the Department of Agriculture show that information. The Bureau of Economics gives it as 42 per cent. I am glad you asked that question; I think it is important. It is estimated that 42 per cent of the farms of the country are mortgaged. That is the latest estimate of the Bureau of Economics of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What percentage of the farms of the country are operated by the owners of the farms, if you have that information?

Mr. HASTINGS. I believe that information is in the hearings before the committee. Of course, the percentage varies in different localities. In New England and in the East they are largely operated by the owners, but as you go West and South the percentage is lower.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You do not have the percentage?

Mr. HASTINGS. The Bureau of Economics gives it as 57.46 per cent operated by the owners.

In conclusion, permit me to recapitulate:

The provisions of the bill which I have introduced (H. R. 14135) create 12 Federal rural mortgage land banks, one to be located in each of the Federal land bank districts under the supervision of the Farm Board and the Secretary of the Treasury, with a minimum capital of $25,000,000 each, which may be increased to $40,000,000 each, to be subscribed by the Secretary of the Treasury with funds furnished by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the same as furnished to the home loan banks, for the purpose of making loans to farmers on first mortgages at 3 per cent interest, plus 1 per cent additional to amortize or to be applied upon the reduction of the principal. Loans are provided to be made through county agents up to 60 per cent of the appraised value of the land and 25 per cent of the appraised value of the permanent insured improvements. The rural mortgage land banks are authorized to issue bonds in the same manner as the farm land banks and said bonds, both principal and interest, are to be guaranteed by the Government. All of the directors and other officials are to be appointed by the Farm Loan Board, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

I can not too strongly urge upon the committee the necessity for permanent legislation. Let me make it clear, however, that I favor any one of the many bills pending in Congress which will bring relief to the distressed farmers of the country.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FIESINGER].

Mr. KUNZ. Mr. Chairman, I make the point there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PRALL, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14643), had come to no resolution thereon.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution and bill of the House of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 597. A joint resolution to provide appropriations to carry into effect the act entitled "An act to authorize the distribution of Government-owned cotton to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress," approved February 8, 1933.

H. R. 11461. An act for the relief of C. N. Hildreth, jr.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 188. An act for the relief of Tampico Marine Iron Works.

The message also announced that the Senate had ordered that the House be requested to return to the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 533) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska, with accompanying papers.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. METCALF and Mr. COPELAND members of the Joint Select Committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Department of Labor.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Senate:

Ordered, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 533) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska, with the accompanying papers.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the Senate is agreed to.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BANKHEAD, for an indefinite period, on account of death in family.

RADIO ACT

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7716, an act to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees:

Messrs. DAVIS of Tennesese, BLAND, and LEHLBACH.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, on Monday the House will vote on the question of considering legislation pertaining to depreciated currency.

Mr. Speaker, there is no subject pending before the Congress of the United States at this time which to my mind is of such vital importance to the American people, American industry, American labor, and American agriculture as is the question of depreciated currency. The fact that producers in foreign countries are willing and able to offer their products in the American market at total landed costs which are less than the American costs of production of similar articles is responsible for the closing of thousands of American factories and workshops and the unemployment of hundreds of thousands of American workers.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Ways and Means, as I understand it, takes the position that time does not permit of the study necessary to report a bill to the House. Realizing the importance of the subject, and not wishing to embarrass Members of the House by asking their support for permanent legislation on this subject, I wish to announce that if the Ways and Means Committee is discharged on Monday from further consideration of the Crowther bill, and the bill is considered in the House, I propose to offer the Connery bill as a substitute for the Crowther bill with an amendment which will limit the enforcement of the Connery bill to a period not beyond June 30, 1934.

Mr. Speaker, it will be conceded by every person conversant with present-day conditions that a national emergency exists. The passage of the Connery bill limiting its operation to a period not beyond June 30, 1924, will take care of the present emergency and will permit the Committee on Ways and Means to make a full and exhaustive study, and will give them time to have their conclusions enacted into law by the incoming Congress. At the same time the bill, together with the amendment which I will offer, will save many American industries from utter destruction and will provide employment for hundreds of thousands of American workers now idle.

The bill referred to follows:

A bill to protect American labor by equalizing the cost in the United States of articles imported from foreign countries the currency of which has depreciated

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles when imported into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the island of Guam) from any foreign country, if the depreciation in the currency of such country, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, is 5 per cent or more below the standard value of such currency as proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury on October 1, 1931, these following taxes, which shall be in addition to the duties collected under existing law as amended by section 3 of this act:

(1) If the amount of the invoice value of the article is ascertained in units of currency of such foreign country—a tax equal to the difference between the invoice value of the article expressed in units of currency of such foreign country and converted to units of currency of the United States at the standard value of the currency of such foreign country as proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury on October 1, 1931; and (b) such amount converted to the currency of the United States at the buying rate of the unit of currency of such foreign country as ascertained under section 522 (c) of the tariff act of 1930.

(b) If the amount of the invoice value of the article is ascertained in units of currency of any country (including the United States) other than the country of exportation—a tax equal to the difference between (a) such amount expressed in units of currency of the country of exportation at the current rate of exchange for noon of the date of exportation and converted as provided in paragraph (1) to the currency of the United States at the standard value of such unit of currency of the country of exportation as proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury on October 1, 1931, and such amount expressed in units of currency of the country of exportation, and converted as provided in paragraph (1) into the currency of the United States at the buying rate of the unit of currency of the country of exportation as ascertained under section 522 (c) of the tariff act of 1930.

SEC. 2. This act shall not apply to imports of tea, coffee, tin, or rubber, to fruits, or to unmanufactured spices not produced in the United States.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of the assessment and collection of duties under the existing law, the value (whether such value is ascertained in units of currency of the United States or of any other country) of any article provided for in section 1 shall be the value of such article converted to the currency of the United States at the standard value of the unit of currency of the country of exportation as provided for in paragraph (1) or (2) of section 1, as the case may be.

SEC. 4. Terms used in this act shall have the meaning assigned to such terms in the tariff act of 1930.

SEC. 5. This act shall be administered as part of the customs laws.

SEC. 6. This act shall take effect on the day following the date of its enactment.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

10388. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Good Government Congress of Jackson County, Oreg., requesting that action be taken to reestablish law and order in Jackson County, State of Oregon; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1933

(Legislative day of Friday, February 10, 1933)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 533) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska, with accompanying papers.

The message announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5261) for the relief of Sard S. Reed, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee, Mr. BLAND, and Mr. LEHLBACH were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 311. An act to approve Act No. 268 of the session laws of 1931 of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric current for light and power within the island of Molokai";

H. R. 3033. An act for the relief of Ida E. Godfrey and others;

H. R. 5329. An act to amend section 24 of the act approved February 28, 1925, entitled "An act to provide for the creation, organization, administration, and maintenance of a Naval Reserve and a Marine Corps Reserve," as amended by the act of March 2, 1929;

H. R. 6733. An act for estimates necessary for the proper maintenance of the flood-control works at Lowell Creek, Seward, Alaska;

H. R. 7503. An act to repeal the Executive order of November 23, 1909, making the enticing of laborers from the Isthmian Canal Commission or the Panama Railroad a misdemeanor;

H. R. 7506. An act to repeal an ordinance enacted by the Isthmian Canal Commission August 5, 1911, and approved by the Secretary of War August 22, 1911, establishing market regulations for the Canal Zone;

H. R. 7508. An act to provide for the inspection of vessels navigating Canal Zone waters;

H. R. 7514. An act in relation to the Canal Zone postal service;

H. R. 7515. An act to provide for the establishment of a customs service in the Canal Zone, and other matters;

H. R. 7523. An act to amend sections 7, 8, and 9 of the Panama Canal act, as amended;

H. R. 9166. An act for the relief of William E. B. Grant;

H. R. 9385. An act authorizing Roy H. Campbell, Charles H. Brown, G. H. Wilsey, and Dr. H. O. Strosnider, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near St. Francisville, Mo.;

H. R. 13974. An act granting the consent of Congress to Bonner County, State of Idaho, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Pend Oreille Lake at the city of Sandpoint in the State of Idaho;

H. R. 14060. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near The Dalles, Oreg.;

H. R. 14129. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across that portion of Lake Michigan lying opposite the entrance to Chicago River, Ill.; and a bridge across the Michigan Canal, otherwise known as the Ogden Slip, in the city of Chicago, Ill.; and

H. R. 14200. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N. Y.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the approval of the Journal for the calendar day of Saturday, February 11, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

LINCOLN—APOSTLE OF LIBERTY

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, Lincoln's Birthday never passes without stirring anew within the soul of the Nation a feeling of patriotism and a sense of "the nobleness that lovely spirits gather from distress." We can not reflect upon his life and achievements without rekindling enthusiasm for those ideals for which he gave his last full measure of devotion. Every year on this occasion "the mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave, to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land" are "touched by the better angels of our nature."

Sixty-eight years have passed since Lincoln was assassinated, yet Lincoln is still with us. His spirit is interwoven into the fabric of our national life. His philosophy is built into our Government and our institutions. His personality endures in both history and tradition as one of the choicest manifestations of humanity. In the words of Joel Benton, the poet:

> Some opulent force of genius, soul, and race,
> Some deep life-current from far centuries
> Flowed to his mind and lighted his sad eyes,
> And gave his name, among great names, high place.

The influence of his personality and his achievements can never be effaced from our national life. In reality, Lincoln marches with us down through the centuries, strengthening our appreciation of liberty, holding us fast to the fundamental concepts of the American Union, and mitigating our troubles by his own unshakable faith and quaint humor. Like our rugged Atlantic coast and the impregnable Rocky Mountains, Lincoln has become a vital part of the American heritage.

With each passing year we find new significance in Lincoln's Birthday, because the elemental problem with which he struggled confronts us, differing only in form. That problem, as Lincoln states it, is "whether a constitutional republic or democracy—a government of the people by the same people—can or can not maintain its territorial integrity against its own domestic foes." Thanks to Lincoln's indomitable strength, the question of "territorial integrity," so far as the United States is concerned, has been solved. But the kindred issue as to whether our Government is capable of maintaining economic stability without abridging the liberties of the people is still upon us.

In his day Lincoln proved that the Government could be strong enough to maintain its own existence without being "too strong for the liberties of its own people." If the Great Emancipator could speak to us to-day, he might ask whether the Government will now be strong enough to cope with economic catastrophe without surrendering to dictatorship or socialism. Certainly his interest would go to the heart of every attempt that is made to sacrifice personal freedom and private enterprise to theoretical expedients that may seem advantageous for the moment.

Can human liberty be preserved in the machine age? From underneath the maze of problems that now beset us this question will arise to a position of supreme importance. And we shall turn to Lincoln for inspiration, courage, and advice. If we wish to reach down into the depths of human feeling, down to the fundamental law and to the basic concept of human liberty, as it was established upon this continent by our fathers, there is no richer nor more profound source to which we may go than the speeches and writing of Abraham Lincoln. He lived and breathed in the spirit of liberty. In life and in death his influence has upheld government by the majority, with safeguards for the rights of minorities, as the only practicable formula by which an intelligent and energetic people may avoid tyranny, on one hand, and chaos on the other.

Lincoln understood whence our difficulties of the present day would arise. "At what point," he asked, "is the approach of danger to be expected? I answer, if it ever reaches us, it must spring up amongst us. It can not come from abroad. If destruction be our lot, we must ourselves be its author and finisher. As a nation of free men we must live through all time or die by suicide."

No foreign enemy is threatening us to-day. But from every section of our great Nation come appeals and proposals that would undermine the principles on which American civilization is based. We are told that personal liberties must be submerged beneath economic regimentation. We are asked to give up the right of managing our own affairs for the sake of raising the prices of commodities we produce. We are urged to surrender personal initiative for equal rewards and doles that undermine our incentive to progress. Panaceas of every kind and description flood the Halls of Congress. Millions of our citizens are ready to mortgage their liberty by having the Government take over private economic functions. The heritage which Lincoln preserved and handed down to us is scorned as a priceless heirloom in the hands of yokels.

Lincoln loved the common people as few other great characters have done. The welfare of the masses was always uppermost in his mind. But he had no thought of opening the United States Treasury to them. He made no effort to force one class or group to support another. The Great Emancipator understood well that the function of the Government is not to support the people, but to guarantee them protection and freedom to work out their own economic destiny.

Few Americans have felt the grip of poverty more poignantly than Abraham Lincoln. In childhood he learned the meaning of destitution, and in young manhood want and financial failure were frequently at his door. But out of adversity Lincoln magnified his love of freedom; and when he reached positions of high authority he used his influence to preserve the right of all Americans to struggle from poverty to economic well-being. Lincoln's fears that the right of every man to improve his own station in life might be impaired found expression in his annual message to Congress in 1861. This is what he said:

No men living are more worthy to be trusted than those who toil up from poverty, none less inclined to take or touch aught which they have not honestly earned. Let them beware of surrendering a political power which they already possess, and which, if surrendered, will surely be used to close the door of advancement against such as they, and to fix new disabilities and burdens upon them till all of liberty shall be lost.

This advice comes to us like a solemn warning from history. It embodies the American ideal. It is the principle to which the present generation of Americans must adhere if we are to preserve the heritage Lincoln bequeathed unto us.

Lincoln's devotion to the ideal of liberty is matched only by his faith in the triumph of right. Beneath his zeal in the cause of human rights ran an overpowering conviction that he was doing God's service. In an address delivered September 28, 1862, Lincoln revealed the source of his inspiration and strength in these words:

In the very responsible position in which I happen to be placed, being a humble instrument in the hands of our Heavenly Father, as I am, and as we all are, to work out His great purpose, I have desired that all my works and acts may be according to His will, and that it might be so I have sought His aid; but if, after endeavoring to do my best in the light which He affords me, I find my efforts failed, I must believe that for some wise purpose unknown to me, He wills it otherwise. If I had had my way this war would never have commenced. If I had been allowed my way the war would have ended before this; but we find it still continues and we must believe He permits for some wise purpose of His own, mysterious and unknown to us; and though with our limited understanding we may not be able comprehend it, yet we can not but believe that He who made the world still governs it.

To use his own words, the motto of Lincoln was, "Firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right."

It is difficult to find a public address of Lincoln in which he did not acknowledge his faith in the Creator or his confidence that the will of God prevails. At Cooper Union he pleaded with a people torn by dissension:

Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us—to the end—dare to do our duty as we understand it.

At Springfield, when he said farewell to his friends and neighbors before taking up the perilous duties of the Presidency, he pleaded that the faith of his friends might be added to his own:

I now leave, not knowing when or whether ever I may return, with a task before me greater than that which rested upon Washington. Without the assistance of that Divine Being who attended him, I can not succeed. With that assistance, I can not fail. Trusting in Him who can go with me, and remain with you, and be everywhere for good, let us confidently hope that all will yet be well. To His care commending you, as I hope in your prayers you will commend me, I bid you an affectionate farewell.

In his first inaugural address he was still confident that—

Intelligence, patriotism, Christianity, and a firm reliance on Him who has never yet forsaken this favored land, are still competent to adjust, in the best way, all our present difficulty.

When all his masterful efforts to preserve the peace had failed and war became the only means of saving the Union the faith of Lincoln was not shaken. He called upon the people:

Let us diligently apply the means, never doubting that a just God, in His own good time, will give us the rightful result.

After four years of struggle, anguish, suffering, and destruction faith still burned in his soul. Lincoln humbled himself before his Maker in the simple conclusion that "the Almighty has His own purposes." In the sublime words of the second inaugural he bowed to the will of God, regardless of what it might be, and gave solemn assurance to his countrymen that "the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

Lincoln's faith that right makes might, and that the providential hand of God directs this Nation, is a bulwark of strength to us even to-day. He towers among the great of all ages as a servant of God and a follower of Christ, as well as an apostle of human liberty. Shall we say that Lincoln was an instrument in the hands of the Master in preserving liberty and enthroning peace? We do know that he humbly and fervently sought the aid of God in this great cause and that through his efforts right did prevail.

I can wish for no greater blessing for my country in this hour of unrest than the pervading spirit of the immortal Lincoln. No other American has been endowed with such a deep understanding of human aspirations. Instead of trying to fritter away the heritage he left us, let us revive and reassert the wisdom of Lincoln, as a breath of fresh air to a people stifled by an economic depression.

We can not truly honor Lincoln without holding fast to the ideals which he so nobly advanced. Let the influence and wisdom of the incomparable Lincoln flow free all over this broad land. When guided by his faith and his courage, America must go forward as the land where liberty was born and shall never die.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the Republic "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal," in the throes of dissolution; the Union of Washington and Jackson framed by the wisdom and sanctified by the blood of brothers about to be rent asunder; the "government of the people, by the people, and for the people" in mortal danger of perishing from the earth—in that dark hour of estrangement, doubt, and fear the great captain of our country's salvation came.

He came, and thenceforth all was clear. Simple in speech, plain in manner, straightforward in action, tender as a child, fearless as a hero, humble and lowly, he came to speak and to act. Born of southern parents and reared in the broad prairies of the West, whose very winds sang liberty, he realized the curse of bondage and the blessing of freedom. From the unfelled forest, from the log cabin and the country store, from humble forum and obscure dwelling, from out the ranks of the people the great captain came. He came, and statesmen paused and wondered; he spoke, and a nation hearkened to his counsel.

Devoted to truth and the right, opposed to falsehood and the wrong; scorning the tricks and subterfuges of the self-seeking and abhorring the mean and base; loving his country with a devotion that made him forgetful of all save the preservation of the Union, the incomparable leader rose. In judicial tribunal and hall of state, in capital and village, in stately mansion and log hut, bewildered men listened to his words and saw, as they had never seen before, the darkness, the light, and the path—the wrong, the right, and the remedy.

Who was this man that came unheralded out of the West? Who was this man that rose above great statesmen of his day—who was as earnest as Phillips, as gifted as Baker, more profound than Seward, more wise than Chase, more logical than Douglas, more eloquent than Everett?

Who was this man that combined in one soul the simplicity of a child, the wisdom of a sage, and the foresight of a prophet?

Wheresoever among men there is a love for disinterested patriotism and sublime attachment to duty; wheresoever liberty is worshiped and loyalty exalted, his name, his life, his deeds are known. To-day his image is in all hearts, his name is on all lips. That humble, loving, forgiving, sublime man was the rail splitter of Illinois—sainted and immortal Abraham Lincoln—Abraham Lincoln, child of poverty, champion of freedom, savior of the Union.

Rejoice and give thanks to God. The dark hour of brotherly estrangement is gone forever. The Constitution of Washington and Jackson remains. The Union, strong and great, endures. The "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people" did not perish. The sons of America march all one way.

And for all these blessings we stand to-day beneath the one and only banner of the loyal heart, to pay the tribute of our veneration and gratitude and love to Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, my eminent colleague [Mr. GLENN], representing with me in this honorable body the great State of Illinois—the area from which this distinguished hero of events described in these two epic addresses hailed—would have, because of the appropriateness of the occasion, presented some thought and fitting expression to this honorable body, appealing, as we feel it would have been, to the occasion. But the two apostrophes that have given inspiration, the one from the eminent Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] as the first, and the other an epic from the equally distinguished Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] second, have with such completeness presented a picture of such illuminating grandeur that we feel we could not, by any additional offer, do other than possibly impair the perfection presented. Therefore we defer other than to pay our tribute to these delivered addresses, and withhold any additional contribution individually from ourselves.

Mr. President, we, however, beg to express our appreciation and our thanks for this sacred offering borne to the noble soul who in life did so much to hallow with something of sanctity and elevate by ability the great State of Illinois as he contributed guiding lessons of liberty and justice to the world.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is a little embarrassing to me, in that he suggested that further utterances about the great liberator might not be made.

Mr. LEWIS. Only as to ourselves; not as to the distinguished Senator from Ohio, conscious that his contribution will add further illumination to any topic.

Mr. FESS. When the most eloquent Senator of the body makes that suggestion, even though it does not apply to anyone but himself, it is very embarrassing for another Senator to rise to say anything. I did, however, want to make an observation about one phase of this great character that is not generally discussed.

Abraham Lincoln is regarded as not an educated man, in that his schooling amounted to less than two years, all told; and yet this man, without education, has made contributions to our literature that are regarded as the rarest that have yet come from the lips or pen of any American.

The famous letter written to Mrs. Bixby hangs on the walls of the corridor of one of the colleges of the University of Oxford as the finest bit of literature touching the spirit and subject of condolence that is found anywhere.

The famous short address known as the Gettysburg Address is in the British Museum and is regarded by the highest authority in English as the finest short speech ever uttered in the English language.

The second inaugural address in many ways is regarded as even superior to the address at Gettysburg. I do not think it is more chaste in language, but there is an emotion and spiritual tone expressed that is unmatched even in the Gettysburg Address:

> Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away.

A prose poem—one of the most beautiful things ever penned.

This man, without education, regarded as uncultured—as the world judges culture—delivered the famous Cooper Union speech that is regarded by the literary critics as the finest example of the balanced sentence in American literature; and yet it comes from this untutored man of the West.

It is that phase of Lincoln that is not generally discussed but is very obvious when his utterances are studied.

Some 12 years ago I undertook to collate some of the statements of Lincoln that might be regarded as original, as gleaned from his various utterances. When I tried to analyze my own speeches and enumerate how many things I had ever said that were purely original with me, that I did not get from some other source, I was embarrassed, because I could not find many. Most of them come from other sources. I am, however, going to ask consent of the Senate to insert in the RECORD this collation of the statements of Lincoln that are properly original, and they will occupy at least two columns of the RECORD.

He was a most remarkable man, yet up to 1857 he was little known. Following the Dred Scott decision, he came to the front in his exposition of it; and then later, in 1858, when engaged in the debate with Douglas, he at once loomed as a national figure. From March 4, 1861, to the 15th day of April, 1865, covering only four years, he, as the head of the Nation, made a more remarkable contribution to popular government in the world than any other man, living or dead—a very unusual character, to the commemoration of whose memory we can justly devote a little time to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from Ohio will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From The National Republican, February 12, 1921]

SEEING LINCOLN THROUGH HIS WORDS

(By SIMEON D. FESS, Representative in Congress from Ohio)

This is the time of year when the country reverts to the significance of Lincoln's influence. Whatever be his monuments in accomplishment as the preserver of the American Union and the Great Emancipator, he has an enduring fame through his deathless utterances delivered from time to time. These utterances clearly pointed the course of history in a momentous era and merely became an index of the progress of our national growth from a slaveocracy defended as a loose confederation of States to an indissoluble union of indestructible States.

In 1858 when he was 49 years of age and known locally as a local political figure, he outlined the issue upon the most sensitive question which within a dozen years was to divide churches, destroy political parties, and threaten the overturn of the Government in the greatest civil war known to history.

"A house divided against itself can not stand. I believe this Government can not endure permanently, half slave and half free."

When his friends urged him against this "d——d fool utterance," and wanted to know "what in God's name could induce you to promulgate such an opinion," his reply was: "Upon my soul I think it is true." To those who condemned him he replied: "Friends, this thing has been retarded long enough. The time has come when these sentiments should be uttered. And if it is decreed that I must go down because of this speech, then let me go down linked with the truth. Let me die in the advocacy of what is just and right."

The same year he pressed Douglas to answer the following question:

"Can the people of a territory, in any lawful way, against the wish of any citizen of the United States, exclude slavery from its limits prior to the formation of a State constitution?"

When he was warned by his friends that unless he desisted from his demand for an answer, he could never defeat Douglas for the Senate, he replied:

"I shall demand an answer. If ever Douglas answers me, either yes or no, he can never be elected President of the United States. I am after larger game. The battle of 1860 is worth a hundred of this."

In New York, in February, 1860, at Cooper Union, he made his greatest long speech. Here he set out the issue as it had never yet been stated by any other man:

"If it [slavery] is right, we can not justly object to its nationality—its universality; if it is wrong, they can not justly insist upon its extension—its enlargement. All they ask we can readily grant, if we thought slavery right; all we ask they could as readily grant, if they thought it wrong. Their thinking it right and our thinking it wrong is the precise fact upon which depends the whole controversy. Thinking it right, as they do, they are not to blame for desiring its full recognition as being right; but thinking it wrong, as we do, can we yield to them?"

Of this speech Choate said:

"His eye kindled, his voice rang, his face shone and seemed to light up the whole assembly. * * * It was marvelous to see how this untutored man, by mere self-discipline, had found his way to the grandeur and strength of absolute simplicity."

It was here where an auditor at the close of the address declared: "Lincoln is the greatest man that has appeared since St. Paul." To his enemies who charged him with favoring social equality he said:

"I protest against the counterfeit logic which says that since I do not want a negro woman for my slave I must necessarily want her for my wife."

Upon the question whether the Nation could safely deal with slavery, he said:

"It has long been a question whether any government which is not too strong for the liberties of the people can be strong enough to maintain itself."

His faith in the Nation as sufficient to perpetuate its liberties was well expressed at Independence Hall, Philadelphia, February 22, 1861:

"I have never had a feeling politically that did not spring from the sentiments embodied in the Declaration of Independence."

He then raised the question why the States had been held together so long, and declared that it was the "sentiment in the Declaration of Independence which gave liberty, not alone to the people of this country, but hope to all the world for all future time, * * * that in due time the weights would be lifted from the shoulders of all men and all should have an equal chance." He then declared he would rather be assassinated than to surrender that principle.

He was soon to assume supreme authority and he seemed to realize the test which was soon to be made, because he made it known that the laws of the Government must be respected and they would be enforced.

"The Constitution will be preserved and defended until it is enforced and obeyed in every part of every one of the United States. It must be so respected, obeyed, and enforced, and defended, let the grass grow where it may."

His views on secession were no less clear than his purpose was determined: "We won't break up the Union, and you shan't," was his dictum.

Upon taking the oath as President he said on this point:

"I hold that, in contemplation of universal law and of the Constitution, the Union of these States is perpetual. Perpetuity is implied, if not expressed, in the fundamental law of all national governments. It is safe to assert that no government proper ever had a provision in its organic law for its own termination. Continue to execute all the express provisions of our National Constitution, and the Union will endure forever—it being impossible to destroy it except by some action not provided for in the instrument itself."

And again:

"In your hands, my dissatisfied fellow countrymen, and not in mine, is the momentous issue of civil war. The Government will not assail you. You can have no conflict without being yourselves the aggressors. You have no oath registered in heaven to destroy the Government, while I shall have the most solemn one to 'preserve, protect, and defend it.' I am loath to close. We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection."

Henceforth the conduct of the leaders of rebellion compelled the chief stress to be placed upon the preservation of the Union rather than protection against the spread of slavery. To Greeley, who had caustically criticized him as an opportunist because he did not free the slaves, he wrote on August 22, 1862, just one month before his preliminary Emancipation Proclamation was announced:

"My paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union. If I could save the Union without freeing any slaves, I would do it; and if I could save it by freeing all the slaves I would do it, and if I could save it by freeing some and leaving others alone I would do that. I shall do less whenever I shall believe what I am doing hurts the cause, and I shall do more whenever I shall believe doing more helps the cause. I shall adopt new views so fast as they shall appear to be true views."

In the struggle for the life of the Union, emancipation had to be decreed, which was done to become effective January 1, 1863. Referring to the cause he said:

"The dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate for the stormy present. The occasion is piled high with difficulty, and we must rise to the occasion."

Soon after, on the field of Gettysburg, Lincoln delivered what is styled the "finest short speech in the English language"—the famous "Gettysburg Address."

The high-water mark of Lincoln's utterance is found in his second inaugural address. I quote that part of it which is properly styled a prose poem:

"Fondly do we hope—fervently do we pray—that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondman's 250 years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn by the sword, as was said 3,000 years ago, so still it must be said, 'The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.'

"With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the Nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves, and with all nations."

Much has been written about his religious convictions. Nothing can give greater meaning than his own utterances February 11, 1861, upon leaving home for Washington:

"My friends, no one, not in my situation, can appreciate my feeling of sadness at this parting. To this place, and the kindness of these people, I owe everything. Here I have lived a quarter of a century, and have passed from a young to an old man. Here my children have been born, and one is buried. I now leave, not knowing when or whether ever I may return, with a task before me greater than that which rested upon Washington. Without the assistance of that Divine Being who ever attended him, I can not succeed. With that assistance I can not fail. Trusting in Him who can go with me, and remain with you, and be everywhere for good, let us confidently hope that all will yet be well. To His care commending you, as I hope in your prayers you will commend me, I bid you an affectionate farewell."

His statement to Professor Brooks who had asked him whether he gave much thought to his obligations to God is as follows:

"I give more time to my obligations to my Maker than to all other questions combined."

Again he said to a group of well-wishers:

"But for those prayers I should have faltered and perhaps failed long ago. Tell every father and mother you know to keep on praying and I will keep on fighting, for I am sure we are on God's side."

On another occasion he said:

"I have been driven many times to my knees by the overwhelming conviction that I had nowhere else to go. My wisdom and that of all about me seemed insufficient for that day."

Next to his faith in God as a ruling passion came his faith in mankind. This was well expressed in his first inaugural:

"Why should there not be a patient confidence in the ultimate justice of the people? Is there any better or equal hope in the world?"

No better picture of his breadth of sympathy, another very dominant Lincoln characteristic, can be found than in his letter to Mrs. Bixby, of Massachusetts, November 21, 1864:

"DEAR MADAM: I have been shown in the files of the War Department a statement of the adjutant general of Massachusetts that you are the mother of five sons who have died gloriously on the field of battle. I feel how weak and fruitless must be any words of mine which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming. But I can not refrain from tendering to you the consolation that may be found in the thanks of the Republic they died to save. I pray that your Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and lost, and the solemn pride that must be yours to have laid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of freedom. Yours very sincerely and respectfully."

His rectitude of character is an inspiration for those who serve the public, and it was well expressed in the following language:

"I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be right; I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to be true; I must stand with those who stand right, but I must leave them when they stand for what is wrong."

Few characters have left so many basic principles of proper public conduct. I quote a few taken from his addresses and letters:

"No men living are more worthy to be trusted than those who toil up from poverty—none less inclined to take or to touch aught which they have not honestly earned."

"My greatest ambition is to be truly esteemed of my fellow men by rendering myself worthy of their esteem."

"Die when I may, I want it said of me by those who know me best that I always plucked a thistle and planted a flower when I thought a flower would grow."

"It rests me after a hard day's work if I can find some good cause for saving a man's life."

"It has been said that might makes right. It is for us and our times to reverse the maxim and show that right makes might."

"Let not him who is houseless pull down the house of another, but let him work diligently and build one for himself, thus by example assuring that his own shall be safe from violence when built."

When criticized because he had changed his mind, he replied:

"I do not think much of a man who is not wiser to-day than he was yesterday."

Lincoln's aspiration was his country's future. His ruling passion was that of love of country—patriotism—the religion of the state. He once said:

"This country with its institutions belongs to the people who inhabit it."

He pronounced it the rising hope of popular government throughout the world, and gave this hope its classic expression in literature. Whatever place his deeds may give him in history his words must signalize him as the Republic's finest product in leadership in that which is highest and best in American life.

Sixty years ago Lincoln came to the head of the Government when the times were pregnant with dire possibilities. Soon the Nation was put to the supreme test to determine whether popular government was possible. No man ever faced a more important mission. It called for the rare qualities of intellect, sympathy, and will. No leader of history displayed a finer talent of ability in a crisis. His grasp of the situation, his patience with discordant factors, his tolerance in dealing with men of diverse opinions, his boundless pathos as well as depth of good humor, his unerring judgment, his broad sympathy, his determined will, all tempered by the soundest common sense, expressed in the purest and simplest language, all combined to mark him as a man for the period.

Sixty years later the World War has brought its trials. It has left the world with new and unsolved problems. Readjustment to-day demands great leadership. It also demands a spirit of tolerance, patience, good will, and common sense. The leader to-day should have the Nation's sympathy as Lincoln deserved 60 years ago, but which was grudingly given if at all.

OH, WHY SHOULD THE SPIRIT OF MORTAL BE PROUD?

By William Knox

The following poem was a particular favorite with Abraham Lincoln. It was first shown to him, when a young man, by a friend and afterwards he cut it from a newspaper and learned it by heart. He said to a friend, "I would give a good deal to know who wrote it but have never been able to ascertain." He found out in 1864 that William Knox wrote it.

Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?
Like a swift-fleeting meteor, a fast-flying cloud,
A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
Man passes from life to his rest in the grave.

The leaves of the oak and the willow shall fade,
Be scattered around and together be laid;
And the young and the old, and the low and the high,
Shall molder to dust and together shall lie.

The infant a mother attended and loved,
The mother that infant's affection who proved;
The husband that mother and infant who blessed,
Each, all, are away to their dwellings of rest.

The maid on whose cheek, on whose brow, in whose eye,
Shone beauty and pleasure—her triumphs are by;
And the memory of those who loved her and praised
Are alike from the minds of the living erased.

The hand of the king that the sceptre hath borne,
The brow of the priest that the mitre hath worn,
The eye of the sage and the heart of the brave,
Are hidden and lost in the depths of the grave.

The peasant whose lot was to sow and to reap,
The herdsman who climbed with his goats up the steep,
The beggar who wandered in search of his bread,
Have faded away like the grass that we tread.

The saint who enjoyed the communion of heaven,
The sinner who dared to remain unforgiven,
The wise and the foolish, the guilty and just,
Have quietly mingled their bones in the dust.

So the multitude goes, like the flower and the weed,
That wither away to let others succeed;
So the multitude comes, even those we behold,
To repeat every tale that has often been told.

For we are the same that our fathers have been;
We see the same sights that our fathers have seen;
We drink the same stream and view the same sun,
And run the same course that our fathers have run.

The thoughts we are thinking our fathers would think;
From the death we are shrinking from they too would shrink;
To the life we are clinging to they too would cling;
But it speeds from the earth like a bird on the wing.

They loved, but their story we can not unfold;
They scorned, but the heart of the haughty is cold;
They grieved, but no wail from their slumbers will come;
They joyed, but the voice of their gladness is dumb.

They died; ay! they died; and we things that are now,
Who walk on the turf that lies over their brow,
Who make in their dwellings a transient abode,
Meet the changes they met on their pilgrimage road.

Yea! hope and despondency, pleasure and pain
Are mingled together in sunshine and rain;
And the smile and the tear, the song and the dirge
Still follow each other like surge upon surge.

'Tis the twink of an eye, 'tis the draught of a breath,
From the blossom of health to the paleness of death,
From the gilded salon to the bier and the shroud,
O, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?

LINCOLN AND THE GOOD-ROADS MOVEMENT—OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO THE FARMERS

At first thought, it may seem a far cry from Abraham Lincoln to good roads, but it should not be difficult to demonstrate that no more appropriate tribute could be paid to the memory of that great American and the principles for which he stood than the construction of good roads.

Abraham Lincoln stood for national unity and national development as against sectionalism with its fears, prejudices, and passions. He stood for public good as against selfish interests, for mutual understandings and forbearance as against class and sectional antagonisms and intolerance.

More honor is done the memory of Lincoln by the practice of his ideals than by their preachment. Whatever brings communities closer together, whatever stimulates friendly intercourse and interchange of ideas among people of different States and sections having varied interests, whatever encourages the study and discussion of problems from a public and national viewpoint rather than a selfish and provincial viewpoint, must help bind the Nation together, emphasize interests that are common, subordinate those which are local, promote national development, and breed a spirit of national unity.

The individual community, State, or section which is isolated becomes self-centered, selfish, suspicious, and usually antagonistic to the common good. Lines of traffic and travel which make communication easy and inviting and which provide for interchange of ideas as well as of goods which bring all kinds and conditions of people into daily common touch, break down this isolation, destroy this provincialism, and prevent sectionalism. This is so axiomatic that the development of civilization and the destiny of nations have been determined by lines of travel.

THE LINCOLN HIGHWAY

In view of this there is an intimate relation between the nationalism of Lincoln and the subject of good roads. It is especially apropos that the greatest highway in the United States—the old National Road, the first public highway to have been constructed by Federal aid—should have been rechristened and to-day bears the name, Lincoln Highway. It may be equally fitting that the national good roads convention should be held in Chicago this week which marks the anniversary of Lincoln's birth. The convention is said to be the greatest in point of attendance and interest ever held in the history of the good-roads movement. Plans for highway construction in 1921 and successive years, and the discussion of subjects closely allied with the problem of better roads, have brought together at this convention thousands of farmers, shippers, bankers, motor manufacturers, transportation specialists, engineers, and commercial and civic organizations.

The outlook is said to be favorable for more public-highway construction in 1921 than in any previous year. The two underlying reasons for this are: First, the practical suspension of public-highway construction during the last three years, because of war-time prohibitions against use of materials for road building and their shipment, as well as the scarcity of labor; second, the realization upon the part of both producer (of agricultural and industrial products) and consumer of the wisdom, if not the necessity, of having some fairly good substitute for the railroads in event of a great strike or unusual congestion of traffic. Altogether it is said between a billion and a billion and a quarter dollars are available at once for highway construction in the United States. This sum is represented in Federal, State, and county funds which have been collected and appropriated for good roads.

FUNDS FOR ROADS

The favorite method of supplying road funds is by bond issues. In the 1920 November elections five States approved legislation authorizing a total issue of $192,000,000 in highway bonds. Minnesota voted $75,000,000; Missouri, $60,000,000; West Virginia, $50,000,000; Colorado, $5,000,000; and Idaho, $2,000,000. In addition, Virginia voters approved an act permitting its legislature to fix the amount of a highway-bond issue, the limit being fixed at $50,000,000. In Kansas the constitution was amended so that the State may engage in road construction, and it will pay one-fourth of the cost of not to exceed 100 miles of roads in each county at not over $10,000 a mile.

California, which in 1919 authorized $40,000,000 in bonds for highway construction, was unable to carry out its program because the bonds could not be sold at the 4½ per cent interest which they carried. At the recent election the people approved a proposal to increase the interest from 4½ per cent to not over 6 per cent; and this, it is believed, will make it possible to sell the bonds and to proceed with the extension of the State's highway system contemplated when the bond issue was authorized.

In four States proposed highway-bond issues were defeated. These were Florida, $20,000,000; Montana, $15,000,000; Washington, $30,000,000; and New Mexico, $2,000,000. In each of these States the defeat of the bond issue is attributed to local conditions or to provisions in the respective measures which failed to meet the approval of the people. In New Mexico the issue was opposed by officials as unnecessary. In Florida and Washington it was the intention to use the motor vehicle registration money to float the bond issues and this was opposed. A proposal under which the State highway engineer of Arizona was to have been supplanted by a commission of five members was defeated.

AFTER THREE YEARS

The large amount of money to be spent during 1921 for highway work is in part the accumulations from previous years. During 1918, 1919, and 1920, first war conditions and then shortage of materials, lack of sufficient rail transportation, and the high cost of labor and materials were deterrent factors. Furthermore the condition of the bond market made it impossible to float many of the issues at the interest rates that had been fixed. Therefore comparatively little money was expended in those years and it has accumulated for use in 1921.

During the past three years State bonds for highway improvement aggregating $533,800,000 have been authorized. In 1918 the issues voted were $60,000,000 in Illinois and $50,000,000 in Pennsylvania. In 1919 the following issues were voted: California, $40,000,000; Oregon, $12,500,000; Nevada, $1,000,000; South Dakota, $4,500,000; Wyoming, $2,800,000; Maine, $10,000,000; Michigan, $50,000,000; and Utah, $4,000,000; a total for the year of $124,800,000.

In 1920 the grand total of road bonds authorized was $309,000,000. In addition to the issues mentioned above as authorized in the November elections, other bonds authorized include: Alabama, $25,000,000; Oregon, $10,000,000; and Maryland, $3,000,000.

Another sum, totaling $362,000,000, mostly in bond issues, was provided in 1920 by counties in States where the county is the principal unit in road building and maintenance.

There is still available approximately $160,000,000 of Federal-aid road funds, according to officials of the Bureau of Public Roads, Department of Agriculture, and this money will be allocated to different States as road-construction projects offered by them meet with the approval of the Federal officers. This money probably will be used during a series of years and will not all become available in 1921.

Beside this money there are large amounts to be used by States, counties, park districts, and municipalities, which will be raised by direct taxation rather than by bond issues, so that the estimate of between a billion and a billion and a quarter of dollars of road money authorized is not considered excessive.

THE EAST AND BOND ISSUES

In the eastern part of the country the bond plan for building State highways has not been received quite as enthusiastically as in the West and South, for the reason that the Eastern States have been building roads for many years and have seen them wear out in much shorter period than the life of the bond issue which financed them. But to-day roads are being constructed of concrete and are expected to wear at least until the bonds, with the proceeds of which they are built, are paid. In seven of the eight States that at the last election acted favorably upon bond issues or enabling acts, it was a novel experience, indicating that the bond plan of raising road money is gaining favor as an accepted method of financing good roads.

The good road may be a pleasure to the city man, but it is a necessity to the farmer. This was denied at one time. To-day it is no more disputed than is the multiplication table. Whatever a farmer may have, it is greatly depreciated if he be surrounded by bad roads. A splendid harvest may be sacrificed by inability to market it to an advantage because of bad roads preventing its transportation at the proper time. Whatever a farmer may lack he can easily obtain if he has a 365-day improved highway leading from his door to the market.

The value of almost any commodity is determined in a large measure by its accessibility to the market. The best farm or orchard or garden products in the world may be rendered valueless if they can not be marketed because of bad roads; they can easily be rendered unprofitable if they are marketed over roads so bad that the cost of hauling the product is excessively high. If his roads are so bad that he can only make one trip a day to his market the farmer thus situated pays twice as much to haul his products as the farmer who, because of good roads, can make two trips a day. Thus it works out that farms situated on good roads sell for far more per acre than farms situated on bad roads, although acre for acre the land may be the same as to fertility, drainage, etc.

EFFECT OF BAD ROADS

Nothing has contributed more to the drift from farm to town than the inability of the farmer and his family—particularly his children—to go to town when they should, or to go only under most uncomfortable circumstances. Bad roads mean difficult transportation; during some seasons of the year they mean practically no transportation. So long as man is a social animal, so long will he rebel against conditions which make difficult communication with his fellow man. So long as he strives for his mental and spiritual betterment, so long will he rebel against conditions which render it difficult for him to attend places of worship and send his children to school. So long as he strives to get ahead financially, so long will he rebel against conditions which handicap his marketing facilities and cut down, if not wipe out, his profit. Hence it is that bad roads drive people to the city and depreciate the value of land. The community of bad roads is also the community of poor schools, poor churches, poor farmers, and abandoned farms.

These facts have been brought home to the farmer with greater force since the introduction of the automobile and truck into rural life. The Bureau of Farm Management and Economics has just issued a bulletin upon Experience of Eastern Farmers with Motor Trucks, an analysis of the experience of 753 farmers of the New England States, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland who use motor trucks on their own farms. The farms studied were of all sizes and types—track farms, dairy farms, fruit farms, crop farms (raising no stock), and general farms, which produce all kinds of crops and raise livestock. There were more general farms studied than any other type, with truck farms second, dairy farms third, and fruit farms fourth. The farms ranged in size from the truck farm of a few acres to the general farm of several hundred acres. The average size of all farms studied was 173 acres. Only 18 per cent of the farms were 5 miles or less from market, while 25 per cent were 20 miles or more from market.

DAY OF THE TRUCK

Ninety-five per cent of the farmers said their trucks had proved a profitable investment; the trucks ranged in size from one-half ton to 5 tons. As compared with horses and wagons, the farmers reported the trucks saved from one-half to two-thirds of the time required for hauling. Four-fifths of the farmers reported their trucks enabled them to save on hired help. On the average this saving amounted to $324 a year. A very great number reported that since they had purchased trucks they had changed their market—going farther but to a larger market and thereby getting better prices.

But without any exception it was reported that good roads are essential to the economical use of trucks, and other motor vehicles. Sixty per cent of the complaints against motor trucks were on account of bad roads. The significance of this may be readily seen when the official figures of 1920 show that 60 per cent of the output of motor cars and trucks for 1920 were sold to agricultural districts; and over 2,500,000 motor cars and trucks registered in 1920 were owned by farmers.

The highway is the farmer's transportation system for both his passenger and freight traffic. It is absolutely as essential to him as the street-car lines are to the resident of the great cities and the steam railroads are to the great manufacturing industries. It is as deadly to agriculture to have the highways crippled part of the year or unfit for traffic at irregular intervals as it would be to industry to have no railroad transportation for weeks at a time or to a great city to have its street-car transportation out of business for days or weeks at a time.

THE GETTYSBURG ADDRESS

Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new Nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great Civil War, testing whether that Nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure.

We are met on a great battlefield of that war; we have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that Nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this; but in a larger sense we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract.

The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced.

It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial in the March of Events section of yesterday's Hearst newspapers in reference to Abraham Lincoln and the way his ideas and his policies and his career would fit into present conditions in the United States.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ships tied up, freight trains idle, passenger cars empty, 12,000,000 men without work, business at a standstill, the Treasury bursting with gold, granaries overflowing with wheat, gigantic and unsalable crops, mines shut down, oil industry in cut-throat competition, farmers desperate, taking the law into their own hands in many States, factories idle, an active smokestack a curiosity, industry paralyzed. * * *

That's the picture of the United States in 1933.

If Lincoln could come back and see this picture to-day, on his one hundred and twenty-fourth birthday, he would surely ask himself, "What in Heaven's name is the matter with them? Too much of everything, yet they are all weeping."

And that is what we ask ourselves, "What in Heaven's name is the matter with us?"

Nobody answers that question satisfactorily; nobody even tries.

Europe has welched and will probably swindle us out of ten thousand million dollars, stupidly lent; but what of that? It is a trifle more than 10 per cent of one year's income of this country, in good times.

We are told, and it is true: "You are now paying for the war into which you entered so blithely." But with brains and courage, we should be able to pay for and come out of that foolishness with a lesson learned. The country has reached the point of facing things as they are and talking plain truths. Deceiving ourselves is no longer fashionable, necessary, or possible.

The idiotic "just-around-the-corner" period and theory have come to an end.

That theory moves out of Washington on the 4th of next month. What then?

What, in your opinion, will change this picture?

What will make Uncle Sam take his handkerchief away from his eyes, straighten himself up, and do something?

What will make industry and finance, oil and commerce, agriculture and mining stop crying and get to work and do something?

Must we have some kind of new system to pull us out of this depression rut?

The finest automobile in the world has to get help from a team of horses sometime when it goes into the ditch.

Do we need something more primitive than our present altogether lovely kind of government?

What is the matter with us?

What is your answer?

Can the country continue to be run by the men, the interests, the theories, the old-fashioned failure ideas that have got us into the ditch?

Will politicians appointed by conceited incompetents continue to dispose of the people's money, the national funds?

Will the twelve millions remain idle, hopeless and desperate, while tens and even hundreds of millions are shovelled out to "reconstruct" and make happy some of the very organizations that with their recklessness, stupidity, and short-sightedness are largely responsible for the present trouble?

What is the matter with us and who will remedy the trouble?

Will some man rise above our national picture of incompetence and depression, as Lincoln rises above America in distress, in this McCay cartoon?

Will the new man, if he comes, represent wisdom, careful planning, and experience, or will he come as constructive rulers have often come in the past, suddenly, from nowhere, like Lincoln in his day, from the farm and the wood-chopper's ax, like Mussolini from the grime of the war trenches, or Stalin from secret conspiring against the hideous government of the czars?

In the national mind there should be no question of revenge or punishment.

The United States has been run by a collection of sleek gentlemen, about as near to genius as the prize 1-year-old Hereford steer in a cattle show. They were fat, they were rich, they were printing their billions in nice paper securities, and the foolish people were buying them.

They knew a little about golf and thought they knew something about finance, but they didn't.

They rolled together hundreds of millions and thousands of millions, and thought the rolling would go on forever.

It did not.

Suddenly the beautiful dream faded, as suddenly as when a child dreaming of cans filled with ice cream falls out of bed.

Who or what will put the national child back to bed?

Look at them now, those "best minds," in this picture.

Look at their Government weeping dismally on its piles of gold, the kind of Government that has been built up by the control of money, for money, by money, without any citizenship interest, without the slightest care as to what was happening and might happen to the 123,000,000 human beings making up the population of the United States.

Every American, the rich man who has lost his fortune, the inheritor of wealth who finds that inherited wealth has melted, the man who has lost his job, the farmer who feeds the Nation and finds that it can not pay a decent price for its food, not enough to pay him for growing it, all must realize that what has happened is nobody's fault.

Our system is wrong, in some detail, or fundamentally, we do not know which.

We were building up a mountain of prosperity, with no foundation of common sense and sane methods under it.

Our system created thousands of fortunes, "on paper," and our greedy politicians taxed those imaginary fortunes as though they had been real.

And as the amount taxable diminished the amount of the tax was steadily increased.

When the war began the debt of the United States was one billion. After paying heaven knows how many billions to retire bonds the Government still owes more than twenty thousand million dollars; and that represents frozen capital, a sort of financial cyclone cellar in which the money of the country has taken refuge.

Twenty billions not spent, twenty billions locked up, twenty billions on which the people are taxed to pay nearly one thousand millions a year in interest, to those that hoard Government bonds and do not spend.

What is the matter with us?

We have everything that we ever had, and more of it. We have more gold than any country in the world. Of almost everything we have too much.

What will bring these giants of business, finance, and Government out of their crying fit, back to the world of work and determination?

No superman will do it.

To run the United States successfully is the business of the people of the United States.

They have neglected that business, leaving it to dishonest or incompetent politicians, while they pursued the quickly vanished dollar.

It is only themselves they have to blame, and it is some one of them that must come forth as Lincoln and others have done in the past, to do the work that must be done.

Meanwhile this unpleasant picture that meets Lincoln's birthday in 1933 is a picture of the United States as it is.

Who and what will change the picture?

CHANGE IN DATE OF THE INAUGURATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Governor of Nevada, transmitting certified copy of a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress, and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEVADA, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Carson City, February 8, 1933.

Hon. CHARLES F. CURTIS,
Vice President, President of Senate,
Washington, D. C.

ESTEEMED SIR: In compliance with the terms of Assembly Joint Resolution No. 1 of the thirty-sixth session of the Nevada Legislature, I have the honor to transmit herewith certified copy of such resolution.

A similar copy has been transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Secretary of State of the United States.

Very truly yours,

F. B. BALZAR, Governor.

Assembly joint resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress

Whereas both Houses of the Seventy-second Congress of the United States of America, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress, and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of said Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided in the Constitution:

"'ARTICLE —

"'SECTION 1. The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

"'SEC. 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

"'SEC. 3. If at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

"'SEC. 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

"'SEC. 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

"'SEC. 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission'":

Therefore be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of Nevada, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the Legislature of the State of Nevada, and that certified copies of this preamble and joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the President of the United States of America, to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Secretary of State of the United States.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress of the United States to enact House Joint Resolution 191 commemorating the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen, in 1783, of Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, a hero of the Revolutionary War, by issuing special series of postage stamps in honor of Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko

Whereas on October 13, 1933, will occur the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen of Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, a hero of the Revolutionary War; and

Whereas the service rendered by him was of great value and assistance to the cause of American independence and of such high importance that on October 13, 1783, he was appointed brevet brigadier general of the Continental Army and was granted him naturalization as an American citizen; and

Whereas it is but fitting that proper recognition should be given to the memory of Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, whose illustrious service in the war for American independence is well known to all who are familiar with our history: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina hereby respectfully requests and urges his excellency, Hon. Herbert Hoover, President of the United States, Members of the House of Representatives and Senators of the Senate from the State of South Carolina be authorized to respectfully memorialize the United States Congress to enact legislation which will provide for the effective carrying out of the provisions of the said bill whereby the Postmaster General would be authorized and directed to issue a special series of postage stamps of the denomination of 3 cents, of such design and for such period as he may determine, commemorative of the hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen and appointment of Thaddeus Kosciuszko as brevet brigadier general of the Continental Army on October 13, 1783.

That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, Vice President of the United States, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each United States Senator and Representative in Congress from South Carolina.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Columbia, S. C., February 10, 1933.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of South Carolina and concurred in by the South Carolina Senate.

[SEAL.] J. WILSON GIBBES,
Clerk of the House.

He also presented a letter from Martin Krauss, of New York City, N. Y., inclosing copy of a night letter addressed to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] relative to his plan for the solution of present economic difficulties, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from F. G. Swanson, Esq., of Tyler, Tex., inclosing an editorial from the Dallas (Tex.) Journal of the 8th instant bearing "on what may be included under constitutional rights of freedom of thought and of speech and of the press in connection with an article recently published by a Sergeant at Arms of the Senate," and also making certain suggestions relating to publication of alleged "lists of clients on regular retainer and * * * securities" of Senators, etc., which, with the accompanying clipping, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Buffalo, N. Y., favoring the passage of legislation providing for the issuance of a special series of postage stamps to commemorate an anniversary of Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of the Leavenworth (Kans.) Rotary Club, protesting against the appropriation of Government funds for the purpose of devising, creating, and conducting a program of Government-supervised camp activities for the so-called wandering youth of the Nation, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented memorials of 65 citizens of Portland, 76 citizens of El Campo, 31 citizens of San Antonio, 137 citizens of Big Spring, 112 citizens of Beaumont, 24 citizens of Whittenburg, 246 citizens of Corsicana, 85 citizens of Pecos and Mentone, and 710 citizens of Galveston, all in the State of Texas, remonstrating against the passage of legislation legalizing the manufacture and sale of beer, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions adopted by the Independent Methodist Episcopal Sunday School, of Bayneville; the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of Burlington; the Baptist Women's Missionary Union, of Osawatomie; the Ladies' Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Topeka, and local chapters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Bayneville, Kismet, Ogallah, and Osawatomie, all in the State of Kansas, favoring the passage of legislation to regulate and supervise the motion-picture industry, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALCOTT presented petitions and papers in the nature of petitions from Milardo-Wilcox Unit, Post No. 75, of Middletown; Hayes-Velhage Unit, No. 96, of West Hartford; Gray-Dickinson Post, No. 59, of Windsor; Russell K. Bourne D. S. C. Post, No. 23, of Wethersfield; Horace J. Tanguay Unit, No. 80, of Thompsonville; and Tomalonis-Hall Unit, No. 84, of Simsbury, all of the American Legion Auxiliary, in the State of Connecticut, praying for the creation of a separate veterans' committee of the Senate, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Eddy-Glover Post, No. 6, the American Legion, of New Britain, Conn., favoring the carrying out of the provisions of the national defense act of 1920, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials and papers in the nature of memorials of Y D Post, No. 130, the American Legion, of New Haven; Brock-Barnes Post, the American Legion Auxiliary, of Plainville; and Milardo-Wilcox Unit, Post No. 75, the American Legion Auxiliary, of Middletown, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against reduction in the pay and allowances of officers and personnel of the Army and Navy, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Thomaston, Conn., protesting against the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution or the repeal or modification of the national prohibition law, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions and papers in the nature of petitions from Unit No. 4, Robert O. Fletcher Auxiliary, of Norwich; James J. Shea Unit, No. 19, of Willimantic; and Eddy-Glover Unit, No. 6, of New Britain, all of the American Legion Auxiliary in the State of Connecticut, praying for the passage of the so-called widows and orphans' pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I am in receipt of two certified copies of a resolution recently adopted by the Board of Directors of the City of Pasadena, Calif., expressing the attitude of that city toward proposed legislation by Congress on the subject of taxation affecting municipally owned public utilities.

I present these resolutions in the Senate and request that they be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be received and referred to the Committee on Finance.

(The resolution of the Board of Directors of the City of Pasadena, Calif., presented by Mr. SHORTRIDGE, protests against the passage of any Federal taxation measure which imposes or may be interpreted as imposing a burden upon the States, State agencies, or publicly owned utilities.)

RECOGNITION OF SERVICES OF WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I present a communication in the nature of a memorial from the Board of Supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., relative to recognition of the services of World War veterans, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: The Board of Supervisors of Pima County, State of Arizona, in regular meeting assembled on this 6th day of February, 1933, respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to consider the services rendered by the veterans of the World War and refrain from reducing or eliminating any of the benefits now accruing to them, as such reduction or elimination would result in untold hardship upon these worthy veterans and would increase the already heavy burden now being borne by this county and all other counties in this State.

Due to the fact that the ex-service men who would be affected are mostly either bedridden or unable to follow continuously a substantially gainful occupation it would be practically compulsory for the respective counties of the State to provide them with the proper hospitalization and the necessities of life. We feel that the Federal Government owes a moral obligation to these veterans and should continue to hospitalize them and compensate and pension them for their disabilities.

Therefore you are respectfully requested to submit this memorial to the Senate of the United States and request that it be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Respectfully submitted.

GEORGE H. ANKLAM,
Chairman Board of Supervisors.
JAY C. HICKS,
Member of Board.
W. R. DENISON
(Unable to attend meeting).

I hereby certify that Mr. W. R. Denison was unable to attend the above meeting, but gave me his verbal consent to this memorial.

[SEAL.] GLADSTONE MACKENZIE,
Clerk Board of Supervisors.

Mr. ASHURST also presented a letter embodying a memorial of the Tucson City Council from the mayor of Tucson, Ariz., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The City Council of the City of Tucson, county of Pima, State of Arizona, in regular meeting assembled on the 6th day of February, 1933, respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to consider the services rendered by the veterans of the World War and refrain from reducing or eliminating any of the benefits now accruing to them, as such reduction or elimination would result in untold hardship upon these worthy veterans and would increase the already heavy burden now being borne by the city of Tucson, by the county of Pima, and the State of Arizona.

Due to the fact that the ex-service men who would be affected under the proposed reduction or elimination of benefits put forth by certain organizations under the guise of economy are mostly either bedridden or unable to follow continuously a substantially gainful occupation, it would be practically compulsory for the city of Tucson, county of Pima, and the State of Arizona to provide them with the proper hospitalization and the necessities of life. We feel that the Federal Government owes them a moral obligation, and should continue to hospitalize, compensate, and pension them for their disabilities and their service in time of need.

Therefore you are respectfully requested to submit this memorial to the Senate of the United States and request that it be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Respectfully submitted.

Mayor City of Tucson, Ariz.

DELIVERY OF WATER FROM THE COLORADO RIVER

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred correspondence between the Secretary of the Interior and the Governor of Arizona relating to the form of a water-delivery contract.

There being no objection, the correspondence was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 10, 1933.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: Inclosed is a copy of a letter which I am to-day sending Governor Moeur. A similar letter has been written to Messrs. Ross, Favour, and Cragin, who, I understand, are members of the new Colorado River Commission. Inclosed also are additional copies of the press release of February 13 and my regulations of February 7, which will be released on that date.

Very truly yours,

RAY LYMAN WILBUR.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 10, 1933.

Hon. B. B. MOEUR,
Governor of Arizona,
Phoenix, Ariz.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR MOEUR: I am inclosing a copy of letter which I have written to each of the members of Arizona's Colorado River Commission, together with a copy of regulations which I have signed as of February 7, and which will be released February 13. I earnestly desire to see Arizona's interests placed on an assured basis.

The inclosed regulations will assure Arizona a part of what she has contended for, without prejudice to her right to acquire further interests in the Colorado later, and without requiring negotiations between Arizona and the other States.

I earnestly trust it will be possible to conclude such a contract while I am in office and while the personnel familiar with the background of these problems is available.

If you believe it feasible to attempt to conclude such an agreement, I will have representatives attend in Phoenix for that purpose.

Very truly yours,

RAY LYMAN WILBUR, Secretary.

BOULDER CANYON PROJECT

REGULATIONS—DELIVERY OF WATER IN ARIZONA

I. These regulations are promulgated to further the peaceful enjoyment by Arizona, California, and Nevada of the waters of the Colorado River. They state the form of a water-delivery contract which the United States will enter into with the State of Arizona, subject to certain conditions stated below.

II. The authorization for a contract provided in these regulations shall remain in force only for so long a period as the State of Arizona and claimants to the use of water therein do not interfere, by litigation or otherwise, with diversions of other holders, present and future, of water contracts with the United States and with diversion works constructed by or for them or the United States. In the event of such interference these regulations and the authorization herein contained shall thereupon become void.

III. The United States, subject to the foregoing conditions, will enter into a contract with the State of Arizona in substantially the form stated in Exhibit A, hereto annexed as a part hereof.

RAY LYMAN WILBUR,

FEBRUARY 7, 1933.

(Exhibit A; part of regulations of February 7, 1933)

UNITED STATES,
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF RECLAMATION.

BOULDER CANYON PROJECT

Contract for delivery of water

This contract, made this_____day of_____, 1933, pursuant to the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 388), and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, all of which acts are commonly known and referred to as the reclamation law, and particularly pursuant to the act of Congress approved December 21, 1928 (45 Stat. 1057), designated the Boulder Canyon project act, between the United States of America, hereinafter referred to as the United States, acting for this purpose by Ray Lyman Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior, hereinafter styled the Secretary, and the State of Arizona, acting for this purpose by _____

Witnesseth:

Explanatory recitals

2. Whereas pursuant to the direction of the said Boulder Canyon project act, the Secretary has caused to be let a contract for the contruction of a dam, known and referred to hereinafter as Hoover Dam, in the main stream of the Colorado River at Black Canyon, and said dam will create at the date of completion a storage reservoir having a maximum water-surface elevation at about 1,229 feet above sea level (United States Geological Survey datum) and a capacity of about 30,500,000 acre-feet; and

3. Whereas the Secretary is required by the said Boulder Canyon project act to use said dam and the reservoir created thereby, first for river regulation. improvement of navigation and flood control; second, for irrigation and domestic use, and the satisfaction of perfected rights in pursuance of Article VIII of the Colorado River compact, and third, for power; and

4. Whereas said Boulder Canyon project act authorizes the Secretary, under such general regulations as he may prescribe, to contract for the storage of water in said reservoir and for delivery thereof at such points on the river as may be agreed upon, and provides further that no person shall have or be entitled to have the use for any purpose of the water stored as aforesaid, except by contract made as therein stated; and

5. Whereas the Secretary has heretofore promulgated regulations dated April 23, 1930, amended September 28, 1931, authorizing the execution of certain other water-delivery contracts, and it is the desire of the parties to this agreement to contract for the storage of waters for use on lands in Arizona, and to assure the peaceful and uninterrupted performance of all such contracts, including this; and

6. Whereas by direction of Congress, water has been reserved and appropriated for lands within the Colorado River Indian Reservation in Arizona, unaffected by the Colorado River compact by virtue of Article VII thereof; and

7. Whereas the United States and the State of Arizona, contemplating the future construction of other reclamation projects, and desiring to avoid claims by foreign water users to waters stored by Hoover Dam to the detriment of said projects, desire to provide for the storage of certain quantities of water for the benefit of lands in Arizona without prejudice to whatever right the parties may have hereafter to contract as to additional quantities of water; and

8. Whereas the diversion works in the Colorado River contemplated for certain of the contractors under said regulations of April 23, 1930, amended September 28, 1931, particularly the proposed Imperial Dam, and the proposed dam for the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, near Parker, will be of service for delivery of waters covered by this contract, and it is essential to the purpose of this contract that the building of said works, when approved by the United States, shall not be interfered with:

9. Now, therefore, in consideration of the mutual covenants herein contained, the parties hereto agree as follows, to wit:

Delivery of water by the United States

10. From storage available in the reservoir created by Hoover Dam, the United States will deliver under this contract each year at points of diversion hereinafter referred to on the Colorado River so much available water as may be necessary to enable the beneficial consumptive use in Arizona of not to exceed 2,800,000 acre-feet annually by all diversions effected from the Colorado River and its tributaries below Lee Ferry (but in addition to all uses from waters of the Gila River and its tributaries), subject to the following provisions:

(a) This contract is without prejudice to the claims of the State of Arizona and States in the upper basin as to their respective rights in and to waters of the Colorado River, and relates only to water physically available for delivery in the lower basin under the terms hereof.

(b) The United States does not undertake by this contract to deliver water above Hoover Dam; but the obligation to deliver water below Hoover Dam shall be diminished to the extent that consumptive uses in Arizona effected by diversions from the Colorado River and its tributaries below Lee Ferry diminish the inflow to the reservoir.

(c) It is recognized by the parties hereto that differences of opinion may exist between the State of Arizona and other contractors as to what part of the water contracted for by each falls within Article III (a) of the Colorado River compact, what part within Article III (b) thereof, what part is surplus water under said compact, what part is unaffected by said compact, and what part is affected by various provisions of section 4 (a) of the Boulder Canyon project act. Accordingly, while the United States undertakes to supply water from the regulated discharge of Hoover Dam waters in quantities stated by this contract, as well as contracts heretofore or hereafter made pursuant to regulations of April 23, 1930, amended September 28, 1931, this contract is without prejudice to relative claims of priorities as between the State of Arizona and other contractors with the United States, and shall not otherwise impair any contract heretofore authorized by said regulations.

(d) This contract is without prejudice to the right of the United States to make further disposition of water available for use in the Lower Colorado River Basin not heretofore allocated by regulations nor herein contracted for, or to the respective claims of the States of Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, California, and Nevada, and of Mexico, to such additional water.

(e) The water provided for in this contract shall be delivered continuously, so far as reasonable diligence will permit, to the extent such water is beneficially used for irrigation and domestic purposes. The United States reserves the right to discontinue or temporarily reduce the amount of water to be delivered for the purpose of investigation, inspection, maintenance, repairs, replacement, or installation of equipment and/or machinery at Hoover Dam, but so far as feasible will give reasonable notice in advance of such temporary discontinuance or reduction. The United States, its officers, agents, and employees, shall not be liable for damages when for any reason whatsoever suspensions or reductions in delivery of water occur.

Subordinate contracts authorized

11. Deliveries of water subject to the terms of this contract may be made for lands within any Indian reservation in Arizona, and to any individual, irrigation district, corporation, or any political subdivision of the State of Arizona, which may qualify under the reclamation law or other Federal statute. Contracts with such water users for such deliveries, subject to the terms of this contract, may be made by the Secretary in his discretion. Such contracts and deliveries made thereunder shall be deemed as made in discharge, pro tanto, of the obligations of this contract.

Points of diversion—Measurement of water

12. The water to be delivered under this contract shall be measured at the points of diversion, or elsewhere as the Secretary may direct, by measuring and controlling devices or automatic gages approved by the Secretary, which, however, shall be furnished, installed, and maintained by the State of Arizona, or the users of water. Said measuring and controlling devices or automatic gages shall be subject to the inspection of the United States, whose authorized representatives may at all times have access to them, and any deficiencies or inaccuracies found shall be promptly corrected. The United States shall be under no obligation to deliver any water which may be diverted at points at which such devices are not maintained, but in the event that diversions are made at points where measuring and controlling devices or automatic gages are not maintained in accordance with this contract, the Secretary shall estimate the quantity of the diversions and his determination shall be final.

Records of water deliveries

13. The State of Arizona shall cause to be made by water users or otherwise monthly reports on forms to be supplied by the United States of all water diverted from the Colorado River. Such reports shall be made by the 5th day of the month immediately succeeding the month in which the water is delivered.

No charges for delivery of water

14. No charge shall be made for water or for the use, storage or delivery of water for irrigation, or water for potable purposes, in Arizona.

No Arizona diversions to be made except pursuant hereto—Diversions in other States

15. It is the object of this contract to assure to those (including the State of Arizona) who have contracted or may hereafter contract with the United States for delivery of waters stored by Hoover Dam, the quiet performance of their respective contracts. It is accordingly agreed that:

(a) The State of Arizona will hereafter grant no permits for, nor otherwise authorize, uses of the waters of the Colorado River and its tributaries (other than the Gila River and its tributaries), except subject to the terms of this contract.

(b) The State of Arizona and its permittees will not interfere by litigation or otherwise, with deliveries of water under any contract between the United States and water users in the State of Nevada, or any contract made pursuant to regulations dated April 23, 1930, amended September 28, 1931, nor with the construction of diversion works by or for the holder thereof, nor with diversions of other uses affected by such works, unless and until such contractor interferes, by litigation or otherwise, with the enjoyment of this contract. But in the event of such interference by any other such contractor with the enjoyment of this contract, the State may, at its election, either rely on this contract, or assert all rights which the State or any water user therein would have had against such party if this contract had not been made.

(c) Breach by the State of any of the provisions of this article shall entitle the United States at its option to cancel this contract and any or all subordinate contracts referred to in article 11.

Duration of contract

16. This contract is for permanent service, subject to the provisions contained in the preceding article.

Disputes and disagreements

17. Whenever a controversy arises out of this contract, and if the parties hereto then agree to submit the matter to abitration, the State of Arizona shall name one arbitrator and the Secretary shall name one arbitrator, and the two arbitrators thus chosen shall elect three other arbitrators within 15 days after their first meeting, but in the event of their failure to name all or any of the three arbitrators within 30 days after their first meeting, such arbitrators, not so elected, shall be named by the senior judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. The decision of any three of the five shall be a valid and binding award.

Rules and regulations

18. The Secretary may prescribe and enforce rules and regulations governing the delivery and diversion of water hereunder, but such rules and regulations shall be promulgated, modified, revised, and/or extended from time to time only after notice to the State of Arizona and opportunity for it to be heard.

Agreement subject to Colorado River compact

19. As required by section 13 (c) of the Boulder Canyon project act, this contract is made upon the express condition and with the express understanding that all rights hereunder shall be subject to and controlled by the Colorado River compact, being the compact or agreement signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., November 24, 1922, pursuant to act of Congress approved August 19, 1921, entitled "An act to permit a compact or agreement between the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming respecting the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Colorado River, and for other purposes," as approved by the Boulder Canyon project act, but is without prejudice to the respective contentions of the State of Arizona and of the parties to said compact, as to interpretation thereof.

Effective date of contract

20. This contract shall take effect when an act of the Legislature of Arizona ratifying it shall have become effective, but within two years of the date hereof.

Interest in contract not transferable

21. No interest in or under this contract shall be transferable by either party without the written consent of the other.

Member-of-Congress clause

22. No Member of or Delegate to Congress or Resident Commissioner shall be admitted to any share or part of this contract, or to any benefit that may arise therefrom. Nothing, however, herein contained shall be considered to extend to this contract if made with a corporation for its general benefit.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have caused this contract to be executed the day and year first above written.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

(Memorandum for the press, released for February 13, 1933)

Secretary Wilbur announced to-day promulgation of regulations assuring to Arizona a share of the water of the Colorado River.

Negotiations between Arizona and California for an allocation of main-stream waters, although undertaken on several occasions under the department's auspices, have been unsuccessful.

Arizona has heretofore insisted in negotiations with other States upon 2,800,000 acre-feet of main-stream water plus one-half of any excess.

These regulations state the form of a contract to which it is proposed that the United States and Arizona be the sole parties.

The proposed contract would be an undertaking by the United States to deliver from Hoover Dam enough water each year to enable total main-stream uses in Arizona of 2,800,000 feet, leaving without prejudice and to future negotiations the disposition of any water available in excess of that amount. In the form of a water-delivery contract, this agreement would parallel generally the water contracts previously made or approved by the Secretary between the United States and California interests. The proposed contract recites the existence of a controversy between Arizona and the other States over the proper construction of the Colorado River compact and the Boulder Canyon project act, and as to how much water is available to Arizona under the various classifications made by the compact. It leaves these questions of priorities to future agreement or adjudication, assuring Arizona the delivery of a total amount of water, but without assigning its relative priorities.

Hoover Dam, the construction of which was authorized after the Colorado River compact was executed, has introduced an entirely new factor in the apportionment of waters in the lower Colorado Basin. It will provide about 30,000,000 acre-feet of storage or two years' flow of the river. This makes it possible to arrange for this distribution of water at the present time.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5190) to amend the description of land described in section 1 of the act approved February 14, 1931, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to establish the Canyon De Chelly National Monument within the Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz.," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1211) thereon.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5302) to amend the act entitled "An act to grant to the State of New York and the Seneca Nation of Indians jurisdiction over the taking of fish and game within the Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Oil Spring Indian Reservations," approved January 5, 1927, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1217) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4380) for the relief of Patrick Henry Walsh, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1212) thereon.

Mr. BRATTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13655) to amend the act of May 10, 1928, entitled "An act to provide for the times and places for holding court for the eastern district of North Carolina" (45 Stat. 495), reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1213) thereon.

Mr. GRAMMER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 5470) authorizing the sale of certain property no longer required for public purposes in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1214) thereon.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY LAW

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary I report favorably the bill (S. 5394) to amend section 57 of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended and supplemented, with respect to proof and allowance of claims by trustees for bondholders, with amendments, and submit a report (No. 1216) thereon.

Also, from the same committee, I report favorably the bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto. I report the bill with an amendment and submit a report (No. 1215) thereon.

The report on the House bill has not yet been completed, and I ask unanimous consent to file the proposed amendment to that bill, and that I be given another day or so in which to file the necessary report.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will not the able Senator indicate just what the bills are?

Mr. HASTINGS. The first one is a bill which amends the general bankruptcy law in a way everybody seems to think is desirable. There is no controversy about that. The other is the House bill providing for amendment of the bankruptcy law, about which there is a great deal of controversy. It was ordered favorably reported by the Committee on the Judiciary this morning.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, as I understand it, that bill has eliminated all reference to the railroads. Is that true?

Mr. HASTINGS. The subcommittee submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary a bankruptcy bill involving four new sections, one relative to individual debtors, one relative to corporate reorganization, one to railroads engaged in interstate commerce, and the fourth section, being section 77, pertaining to farmers alone. The Committee on the Judiciary did not have an opportunity to consider the corporate reorganization section and the railroad section sufficiently to enable the Senate, in its judgment, to pass upon those questions at this time, and therefore reached the conclusion that we should report the first and last sections, the one pertaining to the individual debtor, and the other to the farmer, as a substitute for the bill which had been passed by the House.

Mr. COUZENS. As I understood the Senator, he said the Committee on the Judiciary had abandoned the bill to reorganize the railroads during the present session?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is true.

Mr. COUZENS. That would indicate that we ought to suspend the lending of money to the railroads, if that is to be the recommendation of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 5627) to repeal the act entitled "An act to authorize the acquisition for military purposes of land in Orange County, N. Y., for use as an addition to the West Point Military Reservation," approved March 3, 1931; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FRAZIER (by request):

A bill (S. 5628) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIS (by request):

A bill (S. 5629) to provide for needy blind persons of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 5630) to authorize the payment of taxes and assessments on family dwelling houses in the District of Columbia in quarterly installments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

(By request.) A bill (S. 5631) to authorize the delivery of surplus forfeited vessels of the Treasury Department to the Boy Scouts of America for use in sea scout training; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BLACK:

A bill (S. 5632) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a railroad bridge and/or a toll bridge across the water between the mainland at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, Ala.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FRAZIER:

A bill (S. 5633) to restore to national farm-loan associations commissions illegally withheld by Federal land banks and to assure payment of such commissions hereafter; and

A bill (S. 5634) to reimburse national farm-loan associations for losses sustained on account of illegal denial of the privilege of obtaining their funds in the form of farm-loan bonds instead of cash; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 5635) to further extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Niobrara, Nebr.; to the Committee on Commerce.

LEASES OF NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVES

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read at length and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 253) authorizing the Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, to release claims of the United States upon certain assets of the Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California, and others in connection with collections upon a certain judgment in favor of the United States against the Pan American Petroleum Co. heretofore duly entered, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Attorney General of the United States, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized, in connection with collection of amounts due the United States of America under a certain judgment for $9,277,666.17, entered in the office of the clerk of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, at Los Angeles, on January 14, 1933, against the Pan American Petroleum Co., a corporation, to release from claim or lien under said judgment such part or portions of the property and assets of the said Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California, in such manner and with such reservations as shall seem to him proper and advisable, in consideration of payments to the United States to apply upon said judgment of not less than the sum of approximately $5,000,000, and, in connection therewith, to release any claim of the United States against purchasers of oil and petroleum products from the leases commonly known as "E," "I," and "G" leases, or also known as Visalia 010042, 010043, and 010097 leases in naval petroleum reserve No. 1, Kern County, Calif., and to consent, in the premises, to the assignment of other oil and gas leases in said naval petroleum reserve No. 1, now part of the unmortgaged assets of Pan American Petroleum Co., with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy and to the assignment of other oil and gas leases, also part of the unmortgaged assets of Pan American Petroleum Co., of the United States outside the said naval petroleum reserve No. 1, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, said assignments to be authorized only to assignees otherwise duly qualified under existing laws.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 5261) for the relief of Sard S. Reed, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a bill (S. 5189) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931, was introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. An identical bill, the bill (H. R. 13817) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931, came over from the House of Representatives and was referred to the Committee on the Library. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Library be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill and that it may be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT TO WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BROOKHART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 14199, the War Department appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 61, after line 6, to insert the following:

"NATIONAL BOARD FOR PROMOTION OF RIFLE PRACTICE, ARMY NATIONAL MATCHES

"For the national matches and other competitions and the Small Arms Firing School, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved May 28, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. III, title 32, secs. 181a, 181b), $450,000."

APPLICATION FOR LOAN BY CAMELBACK WATER CONSERVATION DISTRICT

Mr. ASHURST submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 356), which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Whereas the Camelback Water Conservation District, organized under the laws of the State of Arizona, made application to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan; and

Whereas the loan thus applied for by the said Camelback Water Conservation District has been refused by the said Reconstruction Finance Corporation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the said Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby respectfully directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of all of the protests and objections, if any, that were filed with the said Reconstruction Finance Corporation in opposition to the said application of the said Camelback Water Conservation District for a loan.

APPLICATION FOR LOAN BY VERDE RIVER IRRIGATION AND POWER DISTRICT

Mr. ASHURST submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 357), which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Whereas the Verde River Irrigation and Power District, organized under the laws of the State of Arizona, made application to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan; and

Whereas the loan thus applied for by the said Verde River Irrigation and Power District has been refused by the said Reconstruction Finance Corporation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the said Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby respectfully directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of all of the protests and objections, if any, that were filed with the said Reconstruction Finance Corporation in opposition to the said application of the said Verde River Irrigation and Power District for a loan.

EMPLOYEES AND SALARIES OF FEDERAL FARM BOARD AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a simple Senate resolution, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 358), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Federal Farm Loan Board is requested to furnish the Senate, on or before March 1, 1933, with a report showing the total number of employees at the end of each fiscal year since its establishment, and on February 1, 1933, the aggregate salaries paid to employees of the board in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and estimated to be paid to them in the current fiscal year and in the fiscal year 1933–34; the total number of employees of the Federal land banks on December 31, 1931, and February 1, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid in 1932 to employees, full or part time, of the Federal land banks; the total number of employees of the joint-stock land banks on December 31, 1931, and February 1, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid in 1932 to employees, full or part time, of the joint-stock land banks; the total number of employees of the intermediate-credit banks on December 31, 1931, and February 1, 1932; and the aggregate salaries paid in 1932 to employees, part or full time, of the intermediate credit banks.

SEC. 2. The secretary of the Federal Farm Board is requested to furnish the Senate, on or before March 1, 1933, with a report showing the total number of employees at the end of each fiscal year since its establishment, and on February 1, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid to employees of the board in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and estimated to be paid to them in the current fiscal year, and in the fiscal year 1933–34; the total number of employees in the grain and cotton stabilization corporations and in any other corporations formed under the provisions of the agricultural marketing act of 1929, on December 31, 1931, and February 1, 1933; and the aggregate salaries paid by each of said corporations to its employees, part or full time, in 1932.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture is requested to furnish the Senate, on or before March 1, 1933, with a report showing the total number of employees on January 1, 1933, and on February 15, 1933, in the seed-loan office; the aggregate salaries paid to employees of the seed-loan office in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and estimated to be paid to them in the current fiscal year, and in the fiscal year 1933–34; the total number of employees in the crop-production loan office on January 1, 1933, and on February 15, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid to employees of the crop-production loan office in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and estimated to be paid to them in the current fiscal year, and in the fiscal year 1933–34; the total number of employees in the agricultural credit corporations and in any other corporations set up under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act of 1932, as amended, on January 1, 1933, and on February 15, 1933; and the aggregate salaries paid to employees of said corporation or said corporations in 1932 and estimated to be paid to them in 1933.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask what date is fixed for the submission of the information requested?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. March 1, 1933.

Mr. McNARY. I think, personally, the information sought might be very useful to the Senate and to the House of Representatives in the formation of legislation in the future, but I doubt very much whether it can be furnished by the 1st day of March. I think it would be futile to attempt to get it by that date, and I suggest to the Senator that he extend the time to April the first.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Very well, I accept the amendment. I suggest that the words "or as soon thereafter as possible" be inserted instead of April 1. I think that would be better.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Minnesota to amend his resolution in each place where the date March 1, 1933, appears by adding the words "or as soon thereafter as possible."

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield for a question?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The Senator asks for the total sums paid as salaries?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. DILL. I think it would be valuable information, in that connection, if we could get a statement of the positions, and the persons filling them, paying more than $3,000 a year. I am informed that there are some unnecessarily high salaries paid in a number of these agricultural organizations, and I wish the Senator would submit an amendment providing that the names of the positions and the persons holding the positions where the salary is more than $3,000 a year should be stated.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have no objection to that amendment, provided it will not jeopardize the passage of the resolution.

Mr. DILL. I think that is information we should have, because I note that the reports indicate that some of the officials and employees of these agricultural organizations are receiving what seems to be unconscionably high pay at this time. I offer an amendment to the resolution to insert at the end of the resolution the words "the names of the positions and the officials holding them where the pay is more than $3,000 a year."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair suggest that the resolution is drawn in such a form that the amendment, in the manner in which the Senator from Washington proposes it, would require practically a complete rewriting of several of the paragraphs?

Mr. DILL. I think not.

Mr. McNARY. Let me suggest to the Senator that he confer with the Senator from Minnesota, and that the resolution be withheld for the present.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Very well; let it go over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Minnesota to request that the resolution go over for the present. That order will be entered.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD's resolution, as modified (S. Res. 358), is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Federal Farm Loan Board is requested to furnish the Senate, on or before March 1, or as soon thereafter as possible, but not later than March 15, 1933, with a report showing the total number of employees at the end of each fiscal year since its establishment and on February 1, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid to employees of the board in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and estimated to be paid to them in the current fiscal year and in the fiscal year 1933–34; the total number of employees of the Federal land banks on December 31, 1931, and February 1, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid in 1932 to employees, full or part time, of the Federal land banks; the total number of employees of the joint-stock land banks on December 31, 1931, and February 1, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid in 1932 to employees, full or part time, of the joint-stock land banks; the total number of employees of the intermediate-credit banks on December 31, 1931, and February 1, 1932; and the aggregate salaries paid in 1932 to employees, part or full time, of the intermediate-credit banks; and the positions and names of the employees receiving more than $2,000 per year on February 15, 1933.

SEC. 2. The secretary of the Federal Farm Board is requested to furnish the Senate, on or before March 1, or as soon thereafter as possible, but not later than March 15, 1933, with a report showing the total number of employees at the end of each fiscal year since its establishment, and on February 1, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid to employees of the board in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and estimated to be paid to them in the current fiscal year, and in the fiscal year 1933–34; the total number of employees in the grain and cotton stabilization corporations, and in any other corporations formed under the provisions of the agricultural marketing act of 1929, on December 31, 1931, and February 1, 1933; and the aggregate salaries paid by each of said corporations to its employees, part or full time in 1932, and the positions and the names of the employees receiving more than $2,000 per year on February 15, 1933.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture is requested to furnish the Senate, on or before March 1, or as soon thereafter as possible, but not later than March 15, 1933, with a report showing the total number of employees on January 1, 1933, and on February 15, 1933, in the seed loan office; the aggregate salaries paid to employees of the seed loan office in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and estimated to be paid to them in the current fiscal year, and in the fiscal year 1933–34; the total number of employees in the crop production loan office on January 1, 1933, and on February 15, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid to employees of the crop production loan office in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and estimated to be paid to them in the current fiscal year and in the fiscal year 1933–34; the total number of employees in the agricultural credit corporations, and in any other corporations set up under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act of 1932, as amended, on January 1, 1933, and on February 15, 1933; and the aggregate salaries paid to employees of said corporation or said corporations in 1932, and estimated to be paid to them in 1933, and the positions and the names of the employees receiving more than $2,000 per year on February 15, 1933.

CLARENCE R. KILLION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2148) for the relief of Clarence R. Killion, which were, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "honorably discharged" and insert "discharged under honorable conditions," and on page 1, line 10, after "no," to strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert "bounty, back pay, pension, allowance, or any payment provided under the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, the World War adjusted compensation act, 1924, as amended, or other benefit whatsoever to which said person may be or become entitled to by law, shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. REED. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. REED, Mr. CUTTING, and Mr. FLETCHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF RADIO ACT OF 1927

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. COUZENS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. COUZENS, Mr. WATSON, Mr. FESS, Mr. SMITH, and Mr. DILL conferees on the part of the Senate.

A CENTURY OF PROGRESS—CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 561) amending section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the President, under certain conditions, to invite the participation of other nations in the Chicago World's Fair, providing for the admission of their exhibits, and for other purposes," approved February 5, 1929, and amending section 7 of the act entitled "An act to protect the copyrights and patents of foreign exhibitors at A Century of Progress (Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration), to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933," approved July 19, 1932, was read twice by its title.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], speaking for his committee, I yield to his suggestion in moving to have this joint resolution sent to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

FARMERS' HOLIDAY AND FARMERS' MORTGAGES

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask leave to have published in the RECORD an address by Hon. HENRIK SHIPSTEAD, of Minnesota, over the National Broadcasting System, on February 11, 1933, given under the auspices of the League for Industrial Democracy, on the subject of "Farmers' Holiday and Farmers' Mortgages."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

The so-called farmers' holiday which is spreading in the West means the farmer is declaring a holiday on foreclosures of mortgages and tax sales. They want a holiday in these matters because they have not the money to pay interest on mortgages nor the money to pay taxes. Court orders and sheriffs' sales are more and more frustrated by direct action of the farmers. The farmer is fighting for his home. He believes that his home is threatened as a result largely of policies that have been pursued by his National and local governments. He knows that even during the years of paper prosperity from 1920 to 1930 his income gradually declined until it totaled an annual loss of 50 per cent. He also knows that during the same period of time, when his income was disappearing until he had only one-half of the income that he had in 1923, industry was permitted to pursue policies that gave it an increase in income of 72 per cent. During that period of time the price of his products gradually declined and the price for the things he had to buy gradually increased. On his back were placed inflated bond issues of railroads as reflected in high freight rates, inflated industrial capitalization as reflected in watered stock, stock dividends, and monopoly prices wherever he had to buy. Industry and finance took so much out of the farmer in that period that they "killed the goose that laid the golden egg," and now both industry and finance are suffering and unemployment increasing. The farmer feels that he has had no part and no authority in formulating and executing these policies. He feels that he has had to pay for the mistakes of his business and political leaders, and now, through foreclosure sale and court orders, he believes that he is expected to pay for some more mistakes of these leaders by giving up his home, and that is a price he will not pay without protest. He is therefore joining with his neighbors to protect his home and theirs from what he considers confiscation of his home under the guise of law.

Leaders in finance and government have made the farmer pay for so many of their mistakes they seem to think he will pay some more. But the farmer is at the end of his rope. He refuses to continue to pay. He is now determined to have a showdown. He refuses to carry all the burdens of the world on his shoulders and he paid by losing his home. He is losing faith in the integrity of political leaders and parties. He is beginning to believe that political party organizations are a form of racketeering to get the faithful party workers on the Government pay roll. He no longer accepts on faith the doctrine that his party is infallible and can do no wrong. He is beginning to see that is another slogan to keep him quiet so his pockets can be robbed. He has been pinched so hard he is beginning to wake up and look around. If he stays awake, good-by party politics and party slaves in high office. He will demand men who serve the Nation rather than the party and those who control it by controlling its leaders and its press. The farmer believes that what his newspapers call the country's "best minds" have been best only in concocting policies that are wrecking agriculture, commerce, our financial system, and causing unemployment of labor. The farmer is always conservative. He has accepted the leadership of the "best minds" because the newspapers have told him they represented economic soundness. He now discovers this is all a gigantic swindle either by design or stupidity. He is beginning to believe that instead of representing safety and security these "best minds" represent the most destructive forces in this country since its birth. He is not sure whether they are destructive through malice or ignorance and does not care. He demands security—something for his labor and the right to keep his home. He will pay his debts if given a chance.

The farmer is the victim of economic forces which he may not have understood and which were not within his control. But, when it is a matter of losing his home, he is confronted with a problem that he understands as clearly as the Massachusett's farmers did when at Lexington and Concord they are recorded in history as "the embattled farmers who stood and fired the shot heard round the world."

That is the spirit in which America was born, and that is the spirit that will permit America to live. Creditors are beginning to take notice of that spirit, because they have to some extent given public notice they are going to stop foreclosures for the time being, and in the meantime efforts are being made at Washington to provide for a moratorium and a refinancing of farm mortgages at a lower rate of interest. Congress has failed to anticipate present conditions and in the last three years has been concerned with administering palliatives, like the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the home-loan banks, crop-production loans, and seed loans, etc. This is not getting rid of debt, it is merely increasing debt and the burdens on the back of the farmer and other debtors. He has other burdens besides his mortgage. These are too numerous to mention here in detail, but I can mention high freight rates levied to pay interest on railroad bond issues piled one upon the other for 50 years without provision for amortization. The inequality of the farmer's dollar as compared with the dollar of industry must be eliminated. The farmer buys in a protected market and sells in an unprotected market. He has to sell cheap and buy dear. He borrowed a cheap dollar and is expected to pay in a dear dollar.

The wages of capital like telephone rates, gas, electric lights, freight rates, price of farm machinery, have not come down. These are fixed charges that consumers are expected to pay. To preserve the integrity of bonds and stocks and mortgages the producer is being pauperized. The farmer of the West says he will fight before they shall take his home.

To-day I desire to speak to you particularly about the necessity of reducing the interest rate on his mortgages in order that the present avalanche of foreclosures shall be stopped and that the mortgages can be paid.

You people in the cities who are listening to me may not think that the plight of the farmer and his mortgage is any concern of yours. But you had better begin thinking about the farmers' plight, because his plight is now yours. His mortgages are in your savings banks and your life insurance companies to protect your savings. If the farm mortgages go to default and become worthless, your savings bank accounts and your life insurance policies will become worthless, too.

As I think over this complicated question, I see the paramount necessity of getting interest rates down at all costs, for all the Nation. I am convinced that a sound and lasting public policy can be worked out to provide for low interest rates at the same time that quickened and stimulated industry leads to a gradual reabsorption of the unemployed, and a gradual rise in commodity prices, and a gradual increase in the volume of traffic and trade. I am convinced that the key log in the jam will continue to be the farm-credit situation until we provide some comprehensive scheme for lowering rates on such a scale as will be calculated to fix the standard interest rates of the country for at least 8 or 10 years. And we will need that long to repair the damage and recover equilibrium.

We must get through this operation soon. Time is important in this matter. We must act quickly. Delay is fatal. It will not do, in my opinion, to start some elaborate process of revaluation. We have no William the Conqueror to ordain the preparation of a doomsday book, in which would be the revaluation of all land, farm or city, and all improvements thereon. Theoretically I accept the idea of revaluation of the capital structure of the Nation, but practically I find it quite impossible. There is now no foundation upon which to base values. No basis for valuation exists. We must stop liquidation and foreclosures at once and anticipate a return of values. I am prepared to take mortgages at their face value, and provide so low a rate of compensation upon the security we give for them as to reduce carrying charges by at least one-half. By so doing we preserve capital and savings at expense of income. By doing so I believe that we will achieve much more than merely to solve the farm problem, serious and indispensable as this is. We hold down interest rates generally and contribute to make recovery possible upon a basis that does not involve too much mortgaging of future income for the Nation as a whole. We will loosen up billions of dollars of frozen assets. Writing down capital sums and letting interest take care of itself would probably lead to a scramble for funds and a very high interest rate. Holding down the interest rate, but leaving the capital unimpaired, would have the effect of freeing funds for industry without asking the farmer to carry a loan which in a few years might again paralyze his efforts.

These mortgages are in large part in savings banks and life-insurance companies where liabilities are held against them. If you write off their face value at 50 per cent, what becomes of your life insurance and savings in savings banks? If you preserve savings at face value at expense of income by giving a 50-year 2 per cent bond in exchange for a 6 per cent mortgage, you preserve the people's savings, restore confidence, and stop foreclosures and liquidation.

For the protection of life-insurance policies, savings-bank deposits, and to relieve the farmer of an interest burden that he can not pay and stay on the farm, I have introduced S. 5562. This bill is now before the Subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. Hearings have been held. This bill provides that the seven agencies created by the Federal Government loaning money to farmers shall be consolidated into one agency. This will eliminate duplication of administration, and, therefore, expense. Provision is made for the rewriting of farm mortgages to draw interest at 2¼ per cent a year. A rate of 1¼ per cent will be added for the purpose of paying off the principal of the loan. This small annual charge will pay off the mortgage in 46½ years. Two and a quarter per cent interest and 1¼ per cent payment on the principal makes a total charge of 3½ per cent a year. Thus the carrying charge to the farmer of his mortgage is reduced by 50 per cent. He now pays 6 per cent or more.

For the creditor the bill endeavors to save his capital at the expense of income. He sacrifices part of his income to save the face of his mortgage. Instead of getting 6 per cent he will get 2 per cent. Under the provisions of the bill he can exchange his mortgage for a 2 per cent Government bond due in 50 years. The Government agency will take in exchange for this bond the mortgage on the farm. This Government agency will then write a new mortgage under the terms I have previously outlined. This mortgage, as I said, will draw 2¼ per cent interest. The 2 per cent interest that the farmer pays will pay the interest on the Government bond. The one-fourth of 1 per cent interest will pay the cost of administration. The money already appropriated for these various agencies already loaning money will be withdrawn and what is needed will be appropriated for this new agency. Under this arrangement very little and possibly no new money will have to be appropriated. The Government merely lends its credit to give security and stability and a low rate of interest on farm mortgages. The carrying charge is so low it is expected the farmer can easily pay all costs involved and stay on the farm.

I expect that if this bill passes, liquidation of farm mortgages will cease; foreclosures will cease. The smashing of farm values will stop. Confidence will be restored, and billions of dollars of frozen credit will be loosened up. Time is important in this matter. Congress has for years delayed facing this issue. The descending avalanche of falling prices must be stopped. A depression is like an avalanche. If you are going to stop it you must have the speed and courage to get in front of the avalanche. You can not sit on the hind end of it and ride along with it. That is what we have been doing, and if we continue these policies the bottom is zero. Temporary measures and economic shots in the arm have only postponed the day of reckoning and aggravated the situation. Heroic action for a permanent policy of the kind outlined is now needed, and I hope this bill will have the support of the American people without regard to party politics. The number of the bill is S. 5562.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 188. An act for the relief of Tampico Marine Iron Works;

S. 222. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of B. F. Hart;

S. 1586. An act for the relief of the estate of Peter Paul Franzel, deceased;

S. 4339. An act repealing certain provisions of the act of June 21, 1906, as amended, relating to the sale and encumbrance of lands of Kickapoo and affiliated Indians of Oklahoma; and

H. R. 11461. An act for the relief of C. N. Hildreth, jr.

VAN CAMP SEA FOOD CO. (INC.)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 220) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Van Camp Sea Food Co. (Inc.), which was, on page 2, line 7, after "claim," to insert ": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LINDLEY NURSERIES (INC.)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3438) authorizing adjustment of the claim of Lindley Nurseries (Inc.), which was, on page 2, line 3, after "claim," to insert ": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I move that paragraph 4 of Rule XVI be suspended, according to the notice given on February 9, so that I may offer an amendment to House bill 14199 which is now lying on the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS].

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I want to recall the Senate now to the matter immediately before it, namely, the motion of my colleague, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], to suspend the rules for the purpose of considering the amendment which he has submitted to the pending War Department appropriation bill, for the purpose of caring for the itinerant youth of the country which has been driven by economic necessity to take to the road.

It will be recalled that I was holding the floor at the time of the recess on Saturday evening, and that I was addressing myself to the analogy partially existing between citizens' military training camps and the concentrations of itinerant young men at Army posts as is contemplated by the plans submitted under the pending amendment.

Mr. President, I want to pursue that analogy for a few moments, because I think it is fundamentally essential to a correct viewpoint of the possibilities inherent in the prospectus which now invites the Senate's approval.

I want to say again, as a basis for these observations, that I am a profound believer in the reserve system of the national defense, and I am a great believer in the citizens' military training camps. It seems to me that they inevitably produce better citizens. It seems to me that the results in terms of soldiery, while important in themselves, are utterly secondary to the results achieved in terms of citizenship and character, and that these are the more important crops that are raised from these seeds.

It occurs to me that there is unusual opportunity in the proposal submitted by my colleague to broaden the advantages which we seek through our annual appropriations for these citizens' military training camps, that there is an opportunity here to broaden the scope and to broaden the influence of these great factors in character building and patriotism and manhood to which I have adverted. How important it is that these assets should be capitalized by us in respect to this itinerant young manhood of America in its hour of distress and disaster and woe. It seems to me that the opportunity is as appealing as it is urgent.

The purpose of the citizens' camps in the final analysis, so far as I am concerned, has always been not to make warriors but to make citizens. It is in terms of that analagous purpose that I contemplate a great public utility in the proposition submitted by my colleague. Therefore, since it has this public utility, it is lifted out of the ordinary scheme of relief proposals and comes to us with a character analagous to the precise thing which we are undertaking to do in that other section of the bill which again sets up citizens' military training camps.

Mr. President, I repeat, so there may be no misunderstanding, that there is no intention to induct these boys into the actual military service, and that there is no intention to bind them with a military commitment. Nevertheless, the door is open to bring them under all of these secondary influences which I insist are the prime benefits of citizens' military training camps. The door is open and the warrant is written in the amendment itself in this aspect of the adventure. I want to invite attention again to the precise language of the amendment, on page 2, referring to these itinerant young men who are now without home, without subsistence, without opportunity in life, without a fair chance in the presence of this terrific catastrophe of the present moment. I want to invite attention to the fact that when these young men are gathered into these camps and these military posts they enter under the following rule, and I quote from the proposal:

> Any person admitted to any military post pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 1 of this section shall, so far as practicable, be subject to the customary military discipline maintained at such post and shall participate in all forms of beneficial and healthful exercise.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DICKINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to his colleague?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. I want to modify the amendment before we vote on the question by adding, on page 2, at the end of line 10, after the word " exercise," the words " and vocational training so far as practicable with the available facilities," which I think will improve it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator adds one more exhibit to the bill of particulars respecting available resources that can be capitalized at the various posts for the benefit of this adventure.

The thing I was particularly emphasizing is the fact that beneficial and helpful exercise, using the language of the amendment, may properly include drills—may properly include the fundamentals which, I repeat, I find in these citizen's military training camps as being of prime advantage to the creation of citizenship and of fidelities of the Nation. These boys, in my conception of the thing which is proposed by my colleague, are invited analogously into the wholesome and useful atmosphere of citizens' military training camps.

Mr. President, I am very sure that if the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate confronted a direct opportunity to expand the influences of citizens' military training camps to touch 90,000 additional young American lives it would be highly enthusiastic over the prospect. It would conceive that a contribution was about to be made not only to the fundamental defenses of the Nation but to the fundamental character of the United States. I submit that my colleague is proposing in net results precisely that thing.

The sympathetic use of the authority which is granted to the War Department and to the military post commanders who shall be over these concentrations of boys is bound to produce a régime which, while falling short of military training in the technical sense, can make better men and better citizens. At least it means subjection to discipline and order. These influences are of incalculable advantage to youth. Youth needs them in the process of molding dependable maturity. The citizenship of to-morrow is better and safer and wiser in proportion as these influences have been brought to bear in its development. It seems to me that these advantages to the Government and to organized society are inherent in the proposed program precisely as they are inherent in citizens' military training camps. I am speaking now solely of the public advantage adherent in the plan. I am not speaking at all as yet of our social responsibility to these itinerant young men. I shall advert to that in a moment.

But I submit that if public money spent upon building sound Americans in citizens' military training camps is justified, then so is public money spent under like auspices upon the emancipation of 90,000 itinerant American young men who to-day are at the mercy and disposition of utterly untoward and malignant influences as a result of the economic depression in which we find ourselves.

The boys about whom we are talking are not hoboes. This is a very important phase of the matter, because if we were simply proposing to deal with the well-known tramp the proposition would be of a totally different nature. That is not the type of young men who are involved in the problem which my colleague has brought to the bar of the Senate. We are not dealing with bums or hoboes in any sense of the word. The conclusive testimony available upon this subject is that by tens of thousands these boys are worth-while lads who are among the innocent victims of this economic debacle. Indeed, many of them have become nomads because they have so much character that they decline longer to burden their own distraught hearthstones with their unproductive presence. That is the type of young man whom it is proposed to save under this régime. Such a type is everlastingly worth while.

Now, let us be quite sure that that is so. I want to read briefly from page 92 of the Monthly Labor Review published by the United States Department of Labor for the month of January, 1933, an official Government document bearing the imprimatur of the Government:

> Type of boys on the road.

This is the paragraph which I read, and it is the boys on the road for whom my colleague is stressing his amendment. What is the type of boy on the road? I quote:

> There is much testimony that these boys, who come from practically every State in the Union, represent in the main substantial American families.

I repeat, not hoboes, not bums, not flotsam and jetsam, but the representatives of substantial American families.

> High-school students are not uncommon among them, and the class of professional wanderers is not conspicuous. Social workers, police, and railroad men who are in constant touch with these boys assert their belief that the overwhelming majority of them are young men and boys who would normally be in school or at work, that they are on the road because there is nothing else to do, sometimes because sheer pride will not permit them to sit idle at home, sometimes because support for the whole family came from a relief agency and was highly inadequate properly to feed the younger children, that they are on the whole not of the habitual hobo or criminal type.

This is the testimony of an official Government source. Now let us look a little further into the type of boys on the road.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before the Senator does that will he yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Gladly.

Mr. REED. What is there in the proposed amendment that confines its application to these migratory young men? What is to prevent any farm hand in Mississippi, for instance, giving up his work and going to live in a Government training camp?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should think the thing that would prevent it would be a sympathetic administration of the proposal as it is submitted. It speaks for itself in its own language. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I was about to invite the Senator's attention to the language of the amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; it speaks for itself in its own language. It applies to—

> Any unmarried male person between the ages of 17 and 24, both inclusive, who is without means of support and who shall apply at any such Army post within one year after the date of the enactment of this act and give satisfactory evidence to the commanding officer thereof that he is unemployed at the time of application—

And so forth.

The persons admitted under the terms of the amendment as stated in the amendment thus fall under the complete discipline of the post. I suppose a literal translation of the language might qualify those of whom the Senator from Pennsylvania speaks.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. From my knowledge of the condition of the farm hands in Mississippi, and practically all the other States, I think that probably they could about all qualify as unemployed. They are practically unemployed, they are not getting enough for a decent living, and if we had enough Army posts I would be willing to take care of them all.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I dislike to be detoured into a discussion of the agricultural problem. If delimitation is necessary, in the language of the amendment, to determine more safely the boundaries to which it should be confined and to which obviously my colleague addresses his amendment, I am perfectly sure that there would be no objection to the limitation, because the objective is clear and obvious, and it is the precise objective which I have been discussing; it is the objective which has been described in all the addresses that have been made by my colleague the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] upon this proposition. It is the boys upon the road, and it is particularly the character of the boys on the road which has challenged the interest that results in the introduction of the legislation; and I want to speak again about the character of the boys on the road.

I want to remind the Senate that out of a group of 1,140 boys who were contacted at Phoenix, Ariz., according to the testimony on page 178 of the hearings of the committee on the La Follette-Costigan bill—out of this group of 1,140 boys—22 had college training, 470 had high-school training, and 648 had training in the grade schools. That is not the hobo; that is not the bum or the tramp.

I want to read also from the same hearing, a sentence from Mr. Paul V. Robinson, superintendent of the Wayside Mission at Anderson, Ind., on page 164 of the testimony.

Mr. Robinson is speaking of a group of 400 transients, including about 27 per cent less than 25 years of age. I quote:

> Regarding the type of men who are on the road, this survey reveals that the cream of our American manhood and young manhood are on the road at the present time.

I repeat, "the cream of American manhood and young manhood are on the road at the present time."

> The more enterprising men and boys are on the road, and the more worthless stay at home and get local relief. Many boys leave home because that leaves more food at home for those who are at home.

Mr. President, the testimony available respecting the character of the boys who are on the road is the thing that primarily challenges my interest and my support for the pending proposition. If the language of the resolution is too broad to create and identify and maintain priority for those particular boys, the language can be changed; but there is——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired on the amendment. He has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will speak on the bill. If amendments to the pending proposal are desirable, let them be offered and determined upon their merits. But let us not dismiss the whole contemplation simply because we challenge some detail. The objective which we are seeking to reach is perfectly plain, and everybody knows what it is. It is to reach the type of boys on the road concerning whom I have been speaking. They are not hoboes as yet; they are not bums as yet; they are not tramps as yet. It remains to be seen whether or not their classification must change under the pummellings of circumstance in the difficult days which lie about us.

The Senator from Pennsylvania asked me on Saturday when we were debating this phase of the problem what I would do with a thousand boys of this character at Fort Myer on a stormy, bitter Saturday afternoon. Well, we discussed what might be done with a thousand boys at Fort Myer.

I am wondering, Mr. President, however, whether the question as to what could be done with a thousand boys gathered together under such wholesome auspices on such a bitter day is not utterly secondary in the purview of our responsibility to the much larger question of what would become of that same thousand boys if they have no Fort Myer at which to concentrate, if they have no shelter under which to gather, if they have no even meager subsistence except the "break of luck" upon the road in the cruelties of a bitter, cold, snowy afternoon. Since we are dealing with a type of boy who is inherently the good citizen of to-morrow I think the question is not so much what the commander of the military post will ultimately do in developing his responsibility under the pending amendment, because I have ample confidence in the military genius and imagination in control of these camps amply to answer that question successfully. I think the question is what happens to the boys if they have not these places to which to go. It seems to me that that is a question in government and in sociology which can not be ignored, nor is it one that can be subordinated to the mere contemplation of how the mechanics of this scheme shall operate after we have asked a competent Army to take charge of the situation.

Mr. President, there was a further implication involved in the inquiry made by the Senator from Pennsylvania a few moments ago which I would not want to avoid. Among other implications to be drawn from it is the implication that in this proposal we are invading the realm of local responsibility for the relief of those who are in distress.

The Senator well knows my view upon that subject; it is entirely and completely his own view. I am a believer in the theory that the American system requires reliance upon home resources in the home communities to the point of exhaustion before there is any responsibility either upon the State governments or ultimately upon the Federal Government; and the Senator from Pennsylvania will find me constantly defending that viewpoint upon this floor, as he always has found me voting consistently with it. But this, Mr. President, it seems to me, is the precise exception that proves the rule. There is an interstate responsibility upon the Federal Government, always acknowledged; there is an interstate responsibility which is an inherent part of our constitutional theory of government, and I submit that this itinerant and roving army of young men, homeless young men, jobless young men, moving up and down the country to-day presents an interstate problem inevitably, and that there is no violence done to the fundamental theory of things to which both the Senator from Pennsylvania and I subscribe when we undertake in this instance to acknowledge our interstate responsibility and serve it under Federal auspices.

The question of the cost of the proposal has been argued against it at some length, and I want to speak briefly about the question of cost. It is very essential to get a correct perspective in regard to the cost, precisely as it was essential to get a correct perspective in regard to what should be done with those thousand boys at Fort Meyer. Of course, it is necessary to assess the cost in money, though there is another cost to be assessed which is far more important; but even the cost in money, Mr. President, I can not believe, will remotely approach the figures that were submitted originally by the War Department on the basis of a possible population of 300,000 in these Army concentration camps.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in making its reply and in submitting its estimate the War Department, while figuring upon 300,000 boys, indicated that it is already equipped to care for about 90,000 boys with existing facilities. When the War Department made the assessment as to what this adventure would cost, it estimated the cost not only in terms of 90,000 boys for whom facilities already are available, but also in terms of 210,000 boys, for whom no facilities whatever are available. Therefore, Mr. President, when we eliminate the 210,000, for whom no facilities are available, and when we propose to confine the enterprise to those boys for whom facilities are available, we inevitably eliminate the element of major cost, because the element of major cost must have been that element which attaches to the care of boys for whom entirely new facilities would have to be created. So the figure found in the War Department estimate, to wit, $109,000,000 for 300,000 boys, even when relatively broken down to $33,000,000 pro rata to care for 90,000 boys, unquestionably will become a substantially smaller figure because of the differential to which I have adverted. The actual cost of the adventure inevitably, I submit, would be infinitely less than the figures which were submitted by the War Department.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. If we limit the proposed legislation to boys for whom we have facilities, how can we bar the boys who are just on the outside of the group that can be cared for with existing facilities?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should say that was a practical question which arises in respect to any undertaking upon which the Federal Government might embark in respect to its citizenship in times like these. I do not believe it is any argument against making the initial step with respect to a useful and sound experiment simply because it is impossible to embrace the entire field of service which might be prospectively involved. Neither do I think that there is any validity in the argument of the able Senator from Arkansas along the same line, as it was submitted on Saturday last to the Senate; namely, that the relief problem is so large that this particular contribution becomes, in turn, so small that it is scarcely worth while proceeding with it. I think it is worth while proceeding with any practical program which promises practical results. I do not subscribe to the "all or nothing" theory.

Now, I submit, Mr. President, as Exhibit A, that we face this particular problem, to wit, the boy on the road, and that it is essentially a Federal responsibility because it involves an interstate movement.

I submit as Exhibit B that it is practical to contemplate handling these boys as proposed by the pending amendment through the use of the unused military facilities of the Nation scattered up and down, North, East, South, and West, and available to all sections of the land.

I submit as Exhibit C that we have a right to believe, based upon what has happened in our citizens' military training camps, that the result of these contacts will be not only to relieve distress, not only to meet a difficult social problem, not only to answer an interstate responsibility which rests upon the Federal Government, but also to create better citizens in respect to those who are thus served.

So we are finally back again to the question of cost; and I submit that there is another and a larger cost problem than that which is involved in the mere mathematics submitted by the War Department in respect to the expenditures that would have to be made to implement this program. What would it cost not to do this thing; or, if this particular thing be not done, what will it cost except as we find some other and better alternative method in which to deal with the problem?

The larger cost problem is not the cost problem relating to doing the thing proposed by the amendment submitted by the senior Senator from Michigan. The major cost challenge is, What will it cost if we do not do it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Michigan has expired.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. With an amendment pending, and a motion pending, and the bill pending, am I entitled to speak 45 minutes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no amendment pending. There is a motion pending. Under that, the Senator would not be entitled to speak 15 minutes more at this time.

Mr. GRAMMER. Mr. President, I rose to ask the Senator from Michigan a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Michigan answer the question of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. VANDENBERG. If I can answer it in the Senator's time. I have no time of my own.

Mr. GRAMMER. I rose merely to ask this question:

On the question of cost, which the Senator so recently discussed, has he taken into consideration what the potential cost might be in case those young men are taken under the wing of the Army of the United States for protection; for instance, in case of accident during that time which might cost life or limb, or in case of disease, and so forth, which might be contracted during that time, which might partially or permanently disable the young man? Will he come under the pension laws, and must he be taken care of during life because of the fact that he happened to be a ward of the Government during this particular 12 months or so? Has that phase of the matter been taken into consideration? If so, I should like to have whatever information the Senator has regarding it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. With the Senator's permission, and intruding upon his time, I reply as follows, if I can remember the complete question:

In the first place, the amendment specifically excludes any enlistment in the Army or any relationship to the Army which would create a basis for any such subsequent claim as the Senator has in mind.

In respect to the cost of caring for the young man in the event of disease or accident, evidently the War Department has contemplated that factor, because in the schedule of prospective expense submitted by the able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] was included an item of $18 per man per year for medical attention.

I think that covers the cost questions which the Senator affirmatively submitted; and, if he will be good enough to permit me to say in his time what I was precluded from saying at the conclusion of my remarks, I should like to say to him that the larger cost which we are inevitably confronting in respect to this army of itinerant, homeless boys is the cost that is involved in the broken characters of to-morrow's citizens; the cost that is involved in broken physical and moral resistance; the cost that is involved in accidents and deaths upon the road; and the cost that is involved in crimes to-day, to-morrow, and as long as this heritage persists.

Those may seem to be abstract things. They are unrelated to precise mathematics; but the Senator is a heartful man, and he knows that there is reality in those exhibits, and that they do represent terribly tangible costs in the final analysis. My judgment would be, if I may conclude my answer to the Senator, that the balance sheet will show in the Government's favor if we undertake to meet this problem as my colleague has suggested.

Mr. GRAMMER. I thank the Senator for his explanation of the matter about which I asked.

However, it occurs to me that there has not been fully taken into consideration an obligation which without question will come to the front in case of accident—and there will be accidents—in case of fire and that kind of thing, or, in some cases, explosion. In those cases the Government of the United States will recognize and accept that responsibility and pay for it. My question was based upon that idea, as to how much the Senator figured that portion of the cost would amount to. The $18 for medical attendance to which reference has been made, of course, would probably be sufficient to take care of the boarder, the young man, during the time he was actually receiving that assistance. Then, when the time comes that he must leave the protection of the Army, is that to be based upon the time limit that the hammer falls that day, and he must go out in the world without a job and with a condition prevailing that is not any better, or perchance even worse, than at the time when he entered the institution?

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GRAMMER. In just a moment.

There is another point which I should like to mention, and that is the qualifications for a young man to enter one of these training camps. He must be six months without employment—six months without employment. Perhaps a man has been without employment for several months, and he thinks, "Well, I am not going to take this job because I can go over to the military training camp if I remain idle for a little bit longer."

Senators, this legislation may be all right. I am not saying whether it is or not. There are young men who will not participate even though they qualify. Others will court participation, and they will partake of it as long as it is possible for them to do it, and they will malinger in every way to try to continue it as long as it is possible for them to do so. The question in my mind is whether or not it is possible for us to formulate laws that will cause men—some men, young men—to decide that they will start out with their own initiative, and try to make a living in this country for themselves, rather than throw themselves utterly upon the taxpaying people of the country for support.

We are talking about questions before this Congress that were not recognized a few decades ago. Questions are coming up here that are of such a socialistic nature that they would have surprised the Congress of the United States a few years ago.

I am not classifying this bill as purely socialistic; but, Senators, it is taking quite a step along that line. Our present form of government is not a socialistic government. Our present form of government is not a paternalistic government. If we are going to keep taking these steps within the socialistic field, ultimately it will be necessary for us to change entirely our form of government, and have a socialistic government with which these measures may square. They do not fit in our present form of government.

FIVE PER CENT CUT IN DEPARTMENTAL EXPENDITURES

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate passed the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill, which is in conference. I intend to discuss the situation that now presents itself to the Senate and to the country as a result of the so-called Bratton amendment contained in that bill as it left the Senate.

Because of its importance, I am taking the liberty to use 15 minutes of time that ordinarily should be given to debate on the pending question. I shall not discuss that any more than to say that I am in sympathy with the purposes of the amendment and with what the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] hopes to accomplish by the camps for boys.

Mr. President, perhaps it is a little late to discuss the so-called Bratton amendment and the general 5 per cent cut. Ordinarily I should think it would be; but the situation here is unique. It develops now that this amendment—this 5 per cent general cut—would practically annihilate the American Navy and reduce it to one of third-class power. Because of that fact, it is very important that all the facts be taken into consideration by the conferees in the conference between the two Houses to the end that the Bratton amendment may be eliminated from the bill before it is sent to the White House for signature.

Mr. President, I think much of the evil of that general 5 per cent cut has been brought to our attention through the medium of a letter written by my very able friend the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] to the Secretary of the Navy, which elicited from the Navy Department a response which tells the story very eloquently and in a few words. With the consent of the Senator from Connecticut, I would like to have that letter incorporated in the RECORD, unless indeed the Senator from Connecticut may have some objection to such procedure, or unless he desires to have it incorporated himself.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAMMER in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. The so-called Bratton amendment was not brought to the attention of the Economy Committee during our rather prolonged study of various measures of economy. Nor was it presented to the Committee on Appropriations when we had under consideration that part of the Treasury-Post Office bill which deals with amendments to the economy act.

As a conferee on the part of the Senate, of course, it is my duty to support whatever action the Senate took. In order to secure facts in regard to the effect of different parts of the bill, I have been endeavoring to post myself, and on February 9 I wrote to the heads of the various departments, among them to the Secretary of the Navy, this letter:

FEBRUARY 9, 1933.

The Senate has adopted the so-called Bratton-Costigan amendments to the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill requiring the heads of departments to cut at least 5 per cent from the amount allowed them by their annual appropriation bills.

So many claims have been circulated regarding the impossibility of carrying out the Senate amendments without serious consequences, I am anxious to know what will be the effect on your department and the manner in which it will be possible to carry out the wishes of the Senate.

As a member of the conference on behalf of the Senate, I need this information in order to be able to explain to the House conferees the effect of the proposed amendments.

Sincerely yours,

HIRAM BINGHAM.

Mr. President, had the amendments been suggested to the Economy Committee before we concluded our recommendations to the Committee on Appropriations, we should have endeavored to secure from each department a statement of the probable effect on that department of the proposed 5 per cent cut. That was not done, and since I was appointed a Senate conferee, I felt that it was necessary to find out exactly what the results might be, so that there might not be any rumors in conference as to what the effect would be, and in order that the conferees might have the facts before them. Therefore I asked the departments for their views, as I have said in this letter, and in reply to the letter I have received a number of communications, all of which have been printed in a memorandum for the use of the conferees. Therefore I have no objection whatever to the Senator from Indiana referring to the letter, or using it in any way he sees fit to, since it was an effort on the part of the chairman of the Economy Committee to secure exact information for the use of himself and other conferees in presenting the case to the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, that being the case, I take this opportunity to read the letter addressed to the Senator from the Secretary of the Navy, which in very concise form gives figures which I think the country ought to have at this time, and certainly figures which should be brought forcibly to the attention of the conferees of the two Houses when they confer on the particular measure now pending before them.

The letter is dated February 10 and reads:

The Navy budget, now in the hands of the Appropriations Committee of the House, provides $308,669,562 direct appropriations. To make a 5 per cent cut with the least possible disaster, the Navy would be obliged—

1. To keep the fleet on the west coast; close certain east coast navy yards; slow down the work on ships now building and modernizing, at great loss of time and increase of cost. This would necessitate the discharge of about 4,500 civilians, and would save approximately $7,500,000.

2. Restrict reserve activities, at a cut of about $1,500,000; stop now further regular Navy enlistments, reducing Navy enlisted personnel by 9,000 men by the end of the fiscal year 1934, resulting in a cut of approximately $5,000,000. This would result in putting out of active commission additional ships, as shown by column 2 in the following table, which refers only to combatant troops:

| Total number ships in class | Number additional to be placed out of active commission | Ships already out of commission | Total to be kept out of active commission |
|---|---|---|---|
| 15 battleships | 3 | 2 | 5 |
| 4 aircraft carriers [1] | 2 | 0 | 2 |
| 15 heavy cruisers [2] | 4 | 2 | 6 |
| 10 light cruisers | 2 | 2 | 4 |
| 103 destroyers | 13 | 31 | 44 |
| 54 submarines | 6 | 12 | 18 |
| 4 light mine layers | 2 | 0 | 2 |
| 2 dirigibles [3] | 1 | 0 | 1 |
| | 33 | 49 | 82 |

[1] Includes 1 under construction.
[2] Includes 6 under construction.
[3] Includes 1 under construction.

This leaves in full commission about 66 per cent of the number of British and 56 per cent of the number of Japanese ships which are in full commission, or fully manned.

3. Reduce Marine Corps by about 1,150 men, resulting in a cut of about $1,000,000.

Our Navy is already 20,000 men short of the number necessary properly to man our ships in commission.

It is evident that this further cut of 10,150 enlisted men would cripple our national defense for years, seriously injure the morale of the service, and, taken together with the discharge of 4,500 civil employees, result in an increase of 14,650 unemployed.

Sincerely,

C. F. ADAMS.

Mr. President, that would bring about a most deplorable situation, of course. It would simply make us a third-class power. We would be 66 per cent as strong as Great Britain on the sea, and 56 per cent as strong as Japan, though we are supposed to sustain the ratio with the latter power as 5 to 3.

I am sure the Senate must never have comprehended just how far this 5 per cent general cut would take us. The situation in the world to-day is chaotic in the extreme. One never knows what a day may bring forth, and that is particularly true on the Pacific and in the Far East. We have an empire out there to safeguard, the Philippines, for instance, during the next 10 to 14 years, in any event. We have Guam, and American Samoa, and the Hawaiian Islands, to say nothing of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands in the Atlantic, with the Panama Canal Zone, and the canal itself; and, at a time like this, utterly to emasculate the Navy it seems to me would be unthinkable.

Then there is the additional fact that, instead of alleviating unemployment in the slightest degree, this 5 per cent general cut would increase unemployment all along the line. In the Navy Department alone it would increase unemployment to the extent of 14,650 persons. I submit that is not sane economy; it is economy gone wild. It seems to me that the conferees should give these facts, recently come to light, the most serious attention.

Mr. President, of course we do not desire war with any other nation. We have never desired war with any other land. Yet in the course of our history we have been engaged in 6 major conflicts, and I take it that in the next 150 years, unless human nature changes completely, we may be engaged in 6 additional major conflicts, whether we like it or not. So we must be prepared for emergencies, and especially in times like these; not for aggressive warfare, of course, since no nation has anything we desire. All we wish is to be let alone. But we must be able to defend ourselves and our institutions and our sovereignty if attacked from without, and this 5 per cent general cut would make it impossible for the United States of America to be able actually to defend herself in case of trouble with any other nation in the world.

Mr. President, I was impressed this morning by a statement in the Washington Herald attributed to my very distinguished friend, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], which upon inquiry he confirms, and I will read the statement. The Senator from Pennsylvania said:

While America has no hostile designs against any nation, I am afraid that is not true of the feeling of other nations toward us. So this cut may have grave consequences.

I submit that the Senator from Pennsylvania states the fact succinctly and in few words. We have nothing against any other nation, but from all the indications we can get, from the press and otherwise, other nations are not so amicably inclined toward us. Therefore we must look after our own interests.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time on the motion has expired. He has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, before I resume my seat I want to quote from another letter addressed to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM]. That Senator is not here, but I assume it will be satisfactory to him for me to read excerpts from this letter. It is signed by the Secretary of War, and refers to the same 5 per cent cut about which I have been speaking. I quote from the first paragraph of the letter the following:

However, to anyone cognizant of the extent to which our preparations for national defense have been emasculated during the past two years the calamitous import of this undirected compulsory attrition is unescapable.

Again, the last paragraph of Mr. Hurley's letter is as follows:

A further arbitrary cut of 5 per cent is now proposed after everything loose in the Military Establishment has been thrown overboard. Only a few items are left to which such a cut could be applied without creating deficiencies, and these are of such vital importance to the military structure on which our system of national defense rests that successive reviewing authorities have preserved them despite the admitted necessity for cutting public expenditures to the bone. To destroy them at this time, when the larger nations are increasing their outlays for military preparedness, is to expose the Nation unjustifiably to the most serious of consequences.

That is signed by Patrick J. Hurley, Secretary of War.

Mr. President, I note a quotation this morning also from General MacArthur, which I read as follows:

We are already below the danger line in trained personnel—the most vital factor in the Army. We are short in everything—clothing, motors, horses. We'll be short of food if we aren't careful. We may be forced to go on depression rations for the Army.

I submit, Mr. President, that that suggests a grave situation which will ensue if this additional cut of 5 per cent should go into effect.

Consequently, I have taken these few minutes to try, if I may, to impress upon the Senate and the conferees, both of the Senate and of the House, the real gravity of the situation, trusting that they may agree to eliminate this general cut of 5 per cent.

There are additional reasons why it should be eliminated.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I suppose the Senator's mail, like mine and probably like that of other Senators, brings many letters relating to this subject matter. Every citizen of the country, realizing how much we are running behind, is becoming almost hysterical about our inability to balance the Budget by avoiding any taxation and by merely reducing expenses. How does the Senator get the information to the average citizen in Indiana that we can not possibly reach what he wants done by merely cutting the expenses?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. All any Member of the Senate can do, so far as his constituents are concerned, with reference to any question they propound, is to give them the facts, the actual facts, and show them that under the situation at present obtaining it is impossible to balance the Budget by so-called economy measures. Other methods must be resorted to.

Mr. FESS. The average citizen is under the impression that it can be done by our dismissing or cutting the salaries of employees to the point he asks. I had several letters this morning inquiring, "Why keep loafers on the pay roll?" What does the Senator do in reply to a letter of that sort?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would ask them to point out the loafers. I would not hesitate to ask them to do so. So far as my own knowledge goes, I could not agree that that is true. The Senator from Ohio doubtless would feel the same way about it. If he does, the only thing the Senator can say to his constituents is that it is not true and state the facts to his constituents, and trust and hope that they will understand the real situation.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit another question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. A Senator recently introduced a resolution to keep our appropriations within our income. Information of the introduction of that resolution was widely circulated all over the country. I am constantly being asked why the Government does not do what any other substantial business concern would do and that it is to cut our expenses in accordance with our income and not go beyond our income.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It seems to me the Senator should simply state the facts to his constituents, namely, that to keep up an adequate national defense in this country costs approximately $1,000,000,000, without waste; that to take care of the bonded indebtedness and interest and sinking fund requires more than $1,000,000,000 annually; and that it takes approximately $1,000,000,000 to take care of the disabled veterans of the various wars and their dependents, and that leaves only about $750,000,000 or $800,000,000 with which to pay the overhead, operating expenses of the Government. Consequently the Government is being economically managed at the present time, and it is impossible to take 25 per cent off of that figure, as everybody knew and as Mr. Roosevelt must have known at the time the suggestion was made, without putting the Government out of business entirely. It seems to me if the Senator would say that to his constituents he would but state the facts and that would end it.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me further, I dictated a letter this morning stating that the interest on the public debt and sinking fund amounts to about $1,250,000,000; that the services to the veterans amount to very nearly $1,000,000,000. I put the figure at $928,000,000. I said that the War Department and Navy Department appropriations would be less than $700,000,000, although we are cutting $106,000,000 out of the War Department appropriation bill, leaving about $648,000,000 to care for all proper expenses of administration, and that we would have to take the cuts about which we are talking out of the $648,000,000, unless we change our whole policy in regard to contracts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. A cut of 25 per cent would take out the entire $648,000,000.

Mr. FESS. I wondered how the Senator deals with these complaints. They are sincere and honest, but the whole country is suffering under a misapprehension.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. REED. It seems to me the country has not been sufficiently told of the economies which have been made. We have reduced the Department of Agriculture appropriations $200,000,000 this year under last year. Last year we appropriated for that department $300,000,000, and this year we are appropriating only $100,000,000. The country does not know that. Last year there was a reduction as against the preceding year.

In the War Department appropriation bill pending to-day we are appropriating $106,000,000 less than last year. The country does not know that. They think that the Army costs about $500,000,000 and the Navy costs about $500,000,000, but that is not so. The military activities of the War Department actually total approximately $276,000,000, a very great reduction under what it used to be. The country does not know it. All we can do is to tell the people the facts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I agree with the Senator and am very grateful to him for his contribution to the discussion.

Mr. President, I assume that my time has about expired, but I wish to mention one other feature of the 5 per cent general cut, and that is that it would take away from the Veterans' Administration $47,000,000. So far as our hospital and hospitalization program for the disabled veterans is concerned, that would be a tragedy. It is impossible to bring about a cut of that extent without doing a grave injustice to the disabled veterans.

Finally, and because the facts are stated so well and so succinctly, I ask in connection with my remarks that an editorial appearing in the Washington Post of yesterday may be incorporated in the RECORD. It is entitled "Navy in Jeopardy."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sunday, February 12, 1933]

NAVY IN JEOPARDY

Congress threatens to reduce the United States Navy to a position of hopeless inferiority to the naval forces of Great Britain and Japan and to add nearly 15,000 men to the ranks of the unemployed. It is well that Senator BINGHAM inquired of Secretary Adams what the proposed 5 per cent cut in all appropriation bills would mean to the Navy. Otherwise the Navy bill might have slipped through without the public becoming aware of the drastic change in policy which the Senate contemplates.

The proposed cuts would force the Navy to suspend enlistments and reduce the enlisted personnel by 9,000 men. It would be necessary also to reduce the Marine Corps by 1,150 men, and 4,500 civilians would have to be discharged. Such a program could not be justified on any ground in view of the fact that the Navy is already 20,000 men short of the number necessary to man the ships in commission. How can Congress think of such action when the Government is endeavoring to induce private establishments to retain their employees and avoid aggravation of unemployment?

What is still more important is the effect of this proposed reduction on the naval building program. It would be necessary, says Secretary Adams, to "slow down the work on ships now building and modernizing, at great loss of time and increase of cost." A number of navy yards on the Atlantic coast would have to be closed. Thirty-three more ships would have to be put out of commission, bringing the total of inactive naval vessels to 82. Instead of maintaining parity with Great Britain and a ratio of 5 to 3 with Japan, the United States would then have barely one-half as many ships in service as Japan and about two-thirds as many as Great Britain.

Economy can be realized without crippling the Navy, as the Bratton amendment would do. The Senate was evidently ignorant of what the measure would mean to the Navy when it voted for this mutilation. Congress should exempt the Navy from the provisions of the Bratton amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I trust that the conferees of the two bodies will give careful consideration to the very grave problems which have arisen.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement prior to the vote on the motion of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] to suspend the rule. I shall vote in favor of the Senator's motion, but I do not wish that vote to be taken as an indication of my approval of the method which he seeks to employ to meet the problem of the transient youths. In order that I may indicate that many of the people who appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Manufactures in connection with the hearings upon the bill introduced by the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], I wish to read briefly from testimony bearing upon the particular method which the Senator from Michigan seeks to employ as a means of solving in part the problem of the transient youth.

Miss Grace Abbott said:

Now, of course, if we say that it is a national responsibility the question arises as to whether the National Government itself should undertake direct care or whether it should do what it does in cooperation with the State or local community. It seems to me that it will be better done if it is done by the Federal Government in cooperation with the States.

There are several reasons for this. Of course, the first objective is that we should not encourage them to wander; we should not pull them out of their homes. Federal camps, agricultural camps, forestry or any other kind of work camps, if maintained by the Federal Government would, of course, get a great deal of publicity and attract many who would otherwise stay at home. Whereas, if the money is given to local communities through a responsible State agency, we would get more done with less publicity that might draw the boys away from their homes.

So it seems to me what the Federal Government can do is to supply the money and assist the States by making available to the State agencies information as to what is being done successfully in other States. It can cooperate in that way or occasionally lend personnel in developing plans, etc.

The testimony will be found on page 34 of the hearings. I also wish to invite attention to a statement made by Miss Judge, of Baltimore, connected with the Travelers Aid Society. She said:

Municipal aid, and even State aid, might well be given to those agencies to do this general type of care which from long experience they have been able to work out for this group, which means studying where they come from, if they can go back, and the State establishing them through agencies in those cities. If every possible extension of private agency and care will not give individualized care to all these groups, some camps of some sort or another may be necessary, but it seems to me that the extension of the social agencies which have been long experienced in this care is by far the most necessary thing to push to its utmost limits before we go over into the adoption of camps.

I also wish to quote briefly from the testimony of Mr. J. Prentice Murphy, of Philadelphia, who has long been connected with the activities of social agencies and the care of the underprivileged of that city. He said:

It has been suggested by some that the way to handle this problem is to put it on a country-wide basis under Army control as indicated, the probabilities being that the Army would use a number of large camp sites, the location being determined in part by weather conditions and centers of population. I have listened with amazement to some of the details of such a plan. If, for example, we were to set up camps of twenty or ten or even five thousand males between, as has been suggested, the ages of 17 and 25, we would instantly have created all of the problems surrounding military camps during the late war and we would instantly find ourselves lacking any of the technical training and education which would be required to conduct these camps on a civilian basis. If one will consider the different types of humanity which will be certain to present themselves for care, one can see that large scale or mass control, if continued beyond a very few days, would have disastrous effects on many of those in care.

There is a body of experience developed in the professional field of social work by those who have cared for children, both in and out of institutions, children of average conduct difficulties, and those presenting unusual conduct difficulties, which does have a bearing on this situation.

On the basis of any camp program, which thinks of the transients as simply in need of 6 or 9 or 12 months of care, and then dismissal, and assuming that these camps should, at the very outside, not exceed a capital of 500, I would have to tell you that there is not enough technical social-work ability and training in the whole United States which could be tapped for this job. These camps call for skilled personnel. The larger the camps, the greater the certainty of difficulties in the matter of training and discipline, the greater the certainty that large numbers of boys will be in danger of staying too long.

Further on he said:

The handling of the problems of social relations between camp inhabitants and the resident communities in which the camps are located will be profound and not easy of solution.

I wish to quote from a statement of E. L. Worthington, chairman of the farms committee of the Cleveland Employment Commission and president of the Cleveland Boys' Bureau. I may say in explanation that in Cleveland, under Mr. Worthington's direction, a conscientious effort has been made to meet in part at least, in so far as the funds were sufficient, the problem of the transient youth. Referring to experiments near Cleveland, Mr. Worthington said, among other things:

We believe that small farms or work units of this kind scattered around the country would be far more effective than centralized camps with their attending problems of demobilization and discipline, to say nothing of transportation of men to and from these camps.

I might say just the other day I had a talk with Mr. Newton D. Baker and he now seems to favor the small unit as opposed to the large concentration camp, fearing, just as we do, the problems of demobilization and discipline.

I wish to refer to the statement made during the course of the testimony by Gen. Pelham D. Glassford. It might be well to state that General Glassford, prior to his appearance before the committee, had traveled through many sections of the country, but particularly through the southeastern section of the United States, making a study of the type of men and boys who are "on the road" and endeavoring to gather information upon which to predicate the suggestion of a solution of this most distressing problem. I now quote from his testimony:

Senator CUTTING. Would you care to express any opinion about the size that those camps ought to be?

General GLASSFORD. Not over 750. I think a good average size would be around five or six hundred.

Senator CUTTING. That, I suppose, would vary largely with the conditions in the States.

General GLASSFORD. It would.

His testimony is found on page 131. In further explanation, it might be appropriate to suggest that the camps which General Glassford had in mind were camps composed solely of transient youth.

I refer to the testimony to be found on page 169 of Mr. Eric H. Marks, chairman of the Welfare Council of New York City, New York. Mr. Marks has had a great deal to do with the administration of the experimental camps in the Bear Mountain Park, to which men taken from the city lodging houses were sent so that they might work in the woods in that park. He testifies as follows:

Senator CUTTING. Under such a system, I suppose in New York you could provide camps of this same kind for transients?

Mr. MARKS. Yes; we could. We are hoping to be able to do so with the limited funds available. Mr. Hopkins tells us he thinks he can help us to take care of 1,000 men. When you figure there are over 15,000 homeless men in New York City alone every night, and we are taking 1,000 out of that list, you can see we are just beginning to make a dent in the whole problem.

We see no reason whatsoever why camps of this type can not be established far and wide.

Referring, of course, to the camp which I mentioned before quoting from his testimony. He continues:

We do not believe in large concentration camps. We do not think you can do the same type of work with the men in large camps. We feel that frequently the expense of getting men up to those camps is out of line with the amount of good you can do with the money in other ways. But, if you have a large number of camps in various communities where a public improvement can be accomplished, it costs very little more than feeding and housing the men. The men are paying back a good part of the wages for their maintenance and are delighted to do it. These men are paid for 12 hours a week work in the park. They are working on an average of seven to eight hours a day, and no question has arisen as to where the money is coming from, how much work they are doing, whether they should get more money or not. They are going out cheerfully and happily and are delighted.

I have cited excerpts from the testimony of those who are well informed concerning the problem of the care of transient youths and men, women, and girls because I wanted to indicate that there is not full approval among those individuals of the particular method which the Senator from Michigan seeks to employ as a solution of a part of the problem of destitution relief. But, Mr. President, I can not vote against the motion to suspend the rule proposed by the Senator from Michigan, for, after 69 or more days that this Congress has been in session, this is the first time that any legislation has come before this body which bears directly upon the suffering of millions of persons in the United States. I have endeavored since I have been a Member of the Senate not to make rash or exaggerated statements; but I say, after listening to the testimony of men and women who are in the front-line trenches of this losing battle against human misery in the United States, that I am unable to find words in the English language adequately to picture the mass suffering on the part of innocent men, women, and children in the United States to-day. The cold wave which has just swept over the United States has added to the untold misery of millions in this country. Therefore, Mr. President, I shall vote for the motion submitted by the Senator from Michigan, because I want his proposal to be considered upon its merits. I wish to pay tribute to the Senator from Michigan for the sympathy which he has indicated in the solution of this problem. It is consistent with his actions not only as a public servant but as a private citizen in his own community and in his own State.

The bill introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and myself, seeking to deal with the entire problem of unemployment relief, is pending upon the calendar. I have waited patiently, day after day, in the hope that an opportunity would be presented whereby that measure could come up and be considered on its merits. I was encouraged on Saturday to hear the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the minority leader, state that the unemployment relief bill must be taken up by the Senate within a day or two.

I realize, Mr. President, that in a legislative body there must be some cooperation in evolving a program, and, therefore, I have endeavored to coperate with the leaders on both sides of the Chamber in facilitating the consideration of business pressing before the country and the Congress. However, I wish to state, upon my responsibility as a Senator, that I believe the failure of the present Congress to deal with problems directly affecting the welfare of the people of the United States is destroying the faith of those people in their Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator on the pending question has expired.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then I will take additional time on the bill. If the present session of Congress shall adjourn, Mr. President, without the enactment of legislation for the relief of the millions of men, women, and children who are hungry, destitute, cold, and desperate, it will destroy the faith of millions of innocent victims of the depression in their Government.

The Senate of the United States should begin to meet regularly in night session in order that unemployment-relief legislation, legislation affecting the relief of agriculture, and legislation providing for relief in the way of establishing new procedures in bankruptcy cases in the courts may be given a hearing at this session.

We have spent all of the days of this session upon legislation which has no direct bearing upon the acute distress of millions of the people. We spent the first part of the session on the Glass bill. With many provisions of that measure I am in sympathy, but that bill, if enacted, will not put bread into the mouths of hungry children; it will not provide fuel to protect against cold.

In the city of Pittsburgh, for example—and Pittsburgh is not exceptional—fuel has been provided during the winter only once, and that was in the cold spell of last December. People are living in crowded quarters, without provision for fuel, and in many instances without provision for light or running water. We have spent the remainder of the time considering appropriation bills which do not take effect until the 1st of July next. It is high time that the attention of Congress should be turned to legislation designed to stop the spread of hunger, starvation, want, destitution, cold, and the breakdown of health in the United States.

I hope, Mr. President, that the leaders on both sides of the Chamber will agree shortly that the Senate must meet, as a regular procedure, in night session. I hope also that no further appropriation bills will be taken up for consideration by this body until some of the general legislation affecting the welfare of millions of men, women, and children in the United States shall be given a hearing. As I stated a moment ago, I realize that cooperation is necessary in formulating a legislative program. I shall go just as far as I can in the effort to cooperate; but the time will come, Mr. President, when we will have to raise the question as to whether or not the Congress is to adjourn without passing legislation affecting the welfare of the millions of helpless men, women, and children, and when that hour arrives I shall take whatever responsibility may be necessary in order to force the issue in this Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to suspend the rule.

Mr. COUZENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that motion?

Mr. COUZENS. For what purpose?

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to say a word about the matter.

Mr. COUZENS. Let us have a quorum first.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, no.

Mr. COUZENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is always an uncomfortable part to play to oppose an amendment that is offered for the purpose of relieving distress. I feel it my duty, however, to oppose this amendment for reasons that I ought to be able to explain very briefly.

To begin with, every one of us must appreciate the sincerity and depth of feeling that inspires the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] in proposing this amendment. By his own amazing private philanthrophies he has proven his interest in the young people of the country, and his desire to help them.

I share his feelings with regard to this group of young men who are rapidly becoming tramps. Whether or not the numbers are exaggerated, I have no means of knowing. It certainly must be that the same young men appear in the charity rolls in several communities, because they are migratory; they are demanding help first here, and then there; and it would give the impression that there is a larger number than actually exists. At the same time, there doubtless is a considerable number; and I am not inclined to be a stickler on the method that is adopted to help them.

I understand that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has a bill pending for an appropriation to the States in aid of relief for this class of young men; and, while I do not know the details of that bill and have not had a chance to study it, my impression is that I will support it. I understand that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] has introduced a somewhat similar bill, and I should not be a stickler when the question comes to voting on those bills.

Coming now, however, to the amendment that is before us, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to just what it provides:

That any unmarried male person may apply without enlistment to any military post of the United States; and, if he is between 17 and 24 years of age, and if he gives satisfactory evidence that he is unemployed and has been for six months, then he must be admitted.

Mark you, Mr. President, there is no limit as to number. There is no limit as to citizenship. These may be aliens who apply, and doubtless in our coast cities many of them will be aliens. There is no limit to the number to be taken in at each particular post, and we can readily imagine the flood of applicants that will show up at Governors Island, for example. There is no limit as to health; and under this amendment as it stands a young man with a contagious disease might apply and he would be bound to be accepted, and, of course, would immediately go into the military hospital, or else run the risk of spreading infection in the camp.

When they are admitted, there is nothing said as to their occupation or their discipline except the general statement that they shall "be subject to the customary discipline maintained at such post." That is very nice; but it is impossible to enforce it without more than that. Would they be subject to court-martial? Apparently they would not, because they would not be enlisted.

As for their occupation, all that is said in the amendment is that they "shall participate in all forms of beneficial and healthful exercise and vocational training as far as practicable with existing facilities."

Very well. Who is going to peel the potatoes? Who is going to scrub the floors? Who is going to cook the meals? Who is going to do all the police work of keeping their camps in order? It is not "beneficial and healthful exercise" to wash dishes, and it is not "vocational training" to scrub floors; and no method is provided for that.

It will be said that I am inventing difficulties. I am in full sympathy with almost everything that was said by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] and by his colleague [Mr. VANDENBERG]; but we are not called upon to vote on their speeches. We are called upon to vote on the amendment as it lies before us.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. COUZENS. Is it not a fact that if the rules are suspended, this proposal may be amended in any form?

Mr. REED. Surely.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator is rather unfair to talk about the amendment as it is, when it may be amended, especially in view of the fact that his committee made no effort to amend the measure so as to make it more adaptable to the requirements.

Mr. REED. I shall explain in a moment just how the Senator's ends can be more properly attained, I think; but we have no text to speak to except the amendment as he has presented it, and I am offering my reasons for objecting to it.

I can not imagine anything more demoralizing in the Southern States than to tell the young boys, white and black, who live in those States that all they have to do is to stay idle for six months, and then the Government will take care of them and house them and feed them and clothe them, without any effort on their part except "beneficial and healthful exercise."

I was down in South Carolina for a few days at Christmas week, and I made some inquiries about the rate of wages that was prevailing there among the colored folk in the country districts. I heard of some who were working for as little as a dollar a week in cash, plus a bare cabin to live in and an occasional bushel of corn, worth down there about 25 cents. Imagine how it would appeal to youngsters of that group to be told that they are going to be taken into an Army camp, not have to work, and be maintained by the Government at a cost of $250 a year. I use that figure because I have an estimate from the Army this morning which says that if the number be limited to 88,000, as the Senator from Michigan indicated he would do, so that no new encampments would have to be constructed, the total cost of maintaining them would be about $250 per year, or about $22,000,000 for the 88,000 young men who would be taken in.

Imagine the problem, then, that would confront the commandant of each of these military posts. He would have more of these young boarders on his hands than he would have of enlisted men, because at the present time in continental United States there are only 83,000 enlisted men, and there would be 88,000 of these guests at the Army posts.

What would be the effect upon the military personnel of the Army of having this great group of practically idle young men visiting there at the post, not charged with any of the duties that go to make the life of the average enlisted man a fairly hard one? What would be the effect upon the young men themselves of that prolonged idleness at Government expense?

As was pointed out by the Senator from Washington [Mr. GRAMMER] a little while ago, many a youngster who had been idle three or four months, and who was offered a job, would refuse it in order to qualify with the six months of unemployment that is necessary to take advantage of this proposal.

Then the Senator from Washington also made an interesting suggestion with regard to pensions. When we remember that half of the American Army in the World War never got abroad, and that their average service in the Army was much less than a year, and when we remember the throng of them who now crowd our pension rolls and who are drawing compensation from the Government for diseases supposed to be connected with that short peaceful tenure of life in the Army, we can easily imagine that we will lay ourselves open to a host of similar applications from this group.

Mr. President, I have told what I do not like about the Senator's amendment. I am now going to offer some suggestions as to plans which would attain the same end in a better way, which I would be glad to vote for.

First. I would be glad to vote to provide that these young men might be taken in by regular enlistment in the Army so that they would be on a parity exactly with the enlisted men with whom they would associate at the Army posts. I would be glad to vote for an amendment seeking to bring that about, and the way to accomplish it would be to raise the amounts appropriated in this bill for pay of the Army, subsistence, and what not.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Would the Senator require the same qualifiations which are necessary now to enable one to enter the Army?

Mr. REED. Of course, we would. The process of enlistment to-day implies selection and strict examination, and those only are taken who appear to be of good moral character, and who appear to be physically fit and mentally fit. The pending amendment has in it no restrictions whatever like that. A man might take advantage of this amendment if he were feeble-minded, he might go in if he were far gone in tuberculosis. Of course, any such process of enlistment would have to be subject to the restrictions which now apply.

Mr. FESS. The Senator will understand that my inquiry is based on the suggestion of the duty of the Government to take care of the men from a humanitarian standpoint. That is why I was asking whether the Senator would include everybody, or just those fit.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Michigan proposes in his speech, though he does not say it in the amendment, to take care of 88,000 young men. Obviously, if we take care of 88,000 healthy young men, we will be doing just as much to relieve distress as if we took the least effective of this group to the same number. Eighty-eight thousand individuals would be taken care of either way. What I propose is that the Army shall be given 88,000 healthy ones, and not just 88,000 assorted individuals. That is the first thing I would be willing to agree to.

I realize perfectly well that neither the country nor the Congress would sanction an increase in the enlisted strength of the Regular Army of 88,000 men. At the present time our total enlisted strength, at home and abroad, is 118,750.

Obviously, 88,000 would be about an 80 per cent addition, and I doubt whether the country would stand for it. But if we want to take care of the young men in the right way, that is one way of doing it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I have not made any study of the character of persons who are "floating," looking for work. What proportion does the Senator think would be cared for if it depended upon enlistment under the present Army regulations and with the discipline that would be required?

Mr. REED. Of course, a good many of them are tramps. A great many of them are not tramps; they are just youngsters who, with no occupation, are unhappy at home and may go out to see the world. I have no means of knowing the numbers. I have letters from social workers who tell me that they are not all admirable characters by any means, but I do not suppose they are getting any better leading this kind of a life. That is one of the reasons why the Senator from Michigan wants to take care of them, and very properly.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that the evidence submitted to the subcommittee of the Committee on Manufactures was that, on the whole, about 10 per cent belong to the so-called hobo or tramp type, and that about 90 per cent were genuine seekers for employment when they started out on their wanderings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Pennsylvania upon the motion has expired. He now has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we must remember that this restriction of the amendment to these migratory young men is only in the speeches which have been made on it, and not in the amendment itself. There is nothing in the amendment which would prevent any youngster who is now living happily at home, if he has reached the age of 17, from picking up and going over to Fort Myer and saying, "I am here to stay." While the speeches refer to the migratory group, the amendment refers to every unmarried man in the United States between 17 and 24, provided he has been out of work six months. Both migratory and stationary citizens are included, and aliens as well.

The second way in which these young could be taken care of, if it is the will of the Congress that they should be, is by an extension of the citizens' military training camp principle, and while the Senator from Michigan said on Saturday that military training for these young men was not contemplated by him, his colleague said to-day that the improvement in citizenship which came from the citizens' military training camps was so great that he favored the application of that system to this group of young men.

Mr. President, I would cheerfully vote for that. That, too, involves the process of selection. A young man with a criminal record, a young man with a contagious disease, a young man who is feeble-minded, is not taken into the citizens' military training camp. He is not acceptable there. We do not want those healthy in body and mind to be thrown with those who are diseased in body and mind. Consequently, we take only the good ones to the citizens' military training camp, and reject the others.

If the Senator from Michigan would propose that, it would be very easy to accomplish what he desires. Let him simply add to the item in the pending appropriation bill for the citizens' military training camp. Under the national defense act there is ample authority to take in the young men to whom he refers, to house them, to feed them, to clothe them, and to give them military training.

Mr. COUZENS. For how long?

Mr. REED. The time is not limited. The national defense act prescribes no limitation of time whatsoever. That process, which would take care of the young men just as well as any other, would do it subject to such restrictions that they would not run the risk of being more harmed than helped. I would be glad to vote for an amendment looking to that end, and that is the way to do it, just add $22,000,000 to the bill, or $250 per man, to this appropriation, and, as far as the money goes, that group will be taken care of.

The citizens' military training camps are operated now for four weeks apiece, but there is nothing in the national defense act which prescribes that limit of four weeks. The Secretary of War would have power, under the present law, to operate the camps for 12 months, or 6 months, or whatever our wish or his decision should be, considering the best interests of these young men.

Mr. President, what I have suggested can be done. The system is in existence, the buildings are provided, and the War Department knows how to handle it.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, how many in number would the citizens' military training camps take care of?

Mr. REED. They have taken as high as 40,000 during the summer period. They have barracks and tentage sufficient to take care of 88,000, according to the War Department, and if the Congress wants to do it, and wants to do it in the best-established method, which is entirely satisfactory to these young men who do attend in the summer time—and I may say they are all enthusiastic about it—what I have suggested is the shipshape, workmanlike way to do it.

Mr. President, all the restrictions would apply which I have urged should apply. In the first place, only American citizens would be taken, and not aliens, as would be the case under the amendment. In the next place, only young men of good reputation would be taken, and that is the kind we want to save. In the next place, only those who are sound of mind would be taken, and the other kind belong in asylums and not in camps. Next, only those who are healthy of body would be taken. We do not want to spread contagion among these young people under the guise of helping them.

Mr. President, if the Senator would move to suspend the rules in order to increase the appropriation for the citizens' military training camps I doubt whether there would be a vote cast against it; but as to his amendment as it stands, I should feel it my duty to vote against it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, what would the Senator do with the other boys—those who would not qualify?

Mr. REED. Just what the Senator from Michigan would do with them; they would have to get such relief as they could at their own homes. Under any plan we could take care of only 88,000.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I thought the proposal of the Senator from Michigan assumed that the boys could not be taken care of at home.

Mr. REED. Of course, I do not mean at their own homes; I mean in their home communities. Those of unsound mind would have to be taken to the asylums, for example.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not know the Senator had the floor. I desire to address the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long, and I hope the Senator from California will go on with his remarks very soon.

I am very much interested in the plan proposed by the Senator from Michigan. I know the difficulties, and I realize the reluctance of the War Department and the reasons for that reluctance. I appreciate that it is embarrassing to military discipline to have in the same encampment soldiers and civilians.

I was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia which tried to devise some means of dealing with the bonus army when it came here and, as a member of that subcommittee, went to call upon the Secretary of War. We suggested to him that it might be possible to take care of the bonus marchers in some of the near-by military establishments. The Secretary of War pointed out, very properly, the difficulty he would have if there were a mixture of civilians with soldiers. He spoke of Fort Hunt, I think it was, which he said had been abandoned as a place of military occupation in the sense of having large numbers of troops there, but which, he stated, was in the hands of caretakers. I do not quote what the Secretary said; but the impression I got was that in a place like that, with some hard-boiled Army sergeants to maintain discipline, civilians, probably those who had had military training—and that was the group we were discussing at the time—might be taken care of, or might take care of themselves.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in order that the Senator may be accurate, Fort Hunt has been discontinued as a military post, and has been turned over to Colonel Grant, the head of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad to be corrected.

Mr. REED. Fort Hunt has been abandoned by the War Department as an obsolete post.

Mr. COPELAND. That is the type of institution which I have in my mind at this moment. There are in my State several more or less abandoned Army posts, among others old Fort Ontario at Oswego, N. Y., Fort Niagara which has been recently restored, near Niagara Falls. I am not advised how many there are of such posts around the country, but I have no doubt there are a good many of them.

I think I share the feeling of the Senator from Pennsylvania regarding the difficulties involved in taking these young men into any establishment to which they might apply, but, Mr. President, we are dealing with a very critical situation in this country. I sometimes think we are so sheltered and sequestered here in the Senate that we fail to realize the physical sufferings of millions of our citizens. I was in New York on Saturday and yesterday. I saw thousands of men shoveling snow. Many of those men, I was told, had not had any work of any sort for a long, long time. Really, Mr. President, I felt ashamed of myself as I rode in a comfortable taxicab, wearing a warm overcoat and a pair of gloves, when I saw many of those men without overcoats and without gloves or mittens in the nipping air of New York yesterday morning; I was truly ashamed.

There is something about age, and perhaps that is one of the compensations of age, that hardens us physically and mentally to the deprivations of life. We come to expect these things. But youth has no such philosophy. Whence come the revolutions and the uprisings of history? Did they come from old men? Youth!

It is not a good thing for our country to have so many youths roaming the country. If I remember the record, I think the Senator from Michigan said there are 300,000 itinerant boys floating around the country to-day, 300,000 just at the turning point of life. These are the years when the nature of the men and their attitude toward life will be determined. They are at the age when they may become tramps and possibly criminals, but on the other hand, with proper encouragement, they might develop into citizens of the highest character and in the future might render great service to the country.

In Europe two or three years ago I saw marching clubs, great groups of young people were marching about the country. I believe in marching clubs so long as they march on peaceful errands. But I do not want to see grow up in our country revolutionary thoughts in the minds of our youth. That is why I have such sympathy for what the Senator from Michigan proposes, and why I hope there may be found a way to overcome the practical objections to the plan.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] called attention to the defects of the proposal of the Senator from Michigan. I agree with him that there are serious defects, but the Senator from Michigan has suggested that if we give him the right to present the matter it can be perfected.

The Senator from Pennsylvania points out that no provision is made regarding the health of the men who are to go into these camps, the implication of his remarks being that they need to be men of prime physical make-up. Of course we differ always about things here. So far as I am concerned, the man who is lacking in food and emaciated and debilitated by reason of the poverty which he has suffered during the past two or three years, is the very kind of a man I want to help, and presents the very reason why I want him to be given the benefits of this plan. I would not have him go into camp with a specific disease or illness which might be passed on to the detriment of others, but so far as concerns the disabilities which are associated with lack of nourishment and lack of proper clothing and lack of shelter, we should take pride in doing what we can to restore the men to health.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad to yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to me one of the very serious objections to the procedure is that there is no plan made whereby the boys may do any work. They ought to be busy at some occupation and trained in some vocation. They ought to be at work a little and not simply enjoying a vacation at the expense of the Government without doing anything at all, or without doing those things which would be really beneficial to them. That is what I am afraid of, as well as the objection about a rotten apple in a barrel of sound apples. We are liable to mix up some rotten apples with the good apples and do more harm than good and spoil the whole plan.

I was reading last night a very interesting book by Frederick Van Wyck, entitled "Recollections of an Old New Yorker." At page 267 of the book he said:

> From 1873 to 1879 the depression was in full force, although not called a depression. The bread line was long and men stood all night in the bitter cold in hopes of getting a morsel to eat, with no stockings on their feet, holes in their shoes, no underwear, no overcoats, many with only a shirt and a pair of trousers to cover them.

That was in the great city of New York in 1873 to 1879. That city seems to have survived and come through pretty well, everything considered.

> To-day you do not see one man without an overcoat—

That may not be entirely true, although he is speaking from personal knowledge.

> To-day you do not see one man without an overcoat, hat, underwear, and nearly everyone with a package of cigarettes in his pocket.

At another place he said:

> Young boys and girls by the thousands roamed the streets and slept in doorways or alleys huddled together to keep warm.

Continuing, he said:

> The financiers and bankers lost their heads, as they always do in case of panic.

They called it a panic in those days, and not a depression. It might be of interest to the Senator if he would read the book. These conditions obtained in those days, and yet they managed in some way without Federal aid, and I do not think they even had State aid to conquer the situation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Florida. I agree with some of the suggestions he has made, but perhaps I disagree with others. Certainly when we compare the conditions of 1933 with the conditions of 1873 to 1879 mentioned by the author quoted, we are not dealing with two problems which are identical in any real sense. There was poverty in those days, and there is poverty in these days; but in my State of New York there are to-day 1,000,000 families being taken care of by charity—almost one-half the families in that State.

Never before in our history was there another situation such as this. I admit that it resembles the other one in one particular—that the bankers lost their heads then and they have lost their heads now. If we could get the bankers to resume activities and have the banks function as banks instead of pawnshops, we might hope for some recovery; but the bankers have hysteria. As the result of it their banks are not functioning. We have all sorts of schemes to inflate the currency, to lessen the amount of gold in the dollar, and all sorts of schemes to get more money.

But, Mr. President, we do not need more money in the banks. We need more money in circulation. Those schemes will not help to cure poverty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from New York on the amendment has expired.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I will continue on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York is recognized for 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. The problem is to get the money into circulation. If I knew a doctor who had failed as miserably in the practice of medicine as the bankers have failed in the practice of banking, I would appear against him myself in court and hope to have him sent to jail for 10 years for malpractice. I agree with the Senator from Florida about the bankers.

But, Mr. President, we are talking about opening camps to these young men. I agree with the Senator from Florida that we must not make them idlers in the camps. If they go into these camps they must go there to maintain and observe the same routine that the soldiers observe. I would have them do practically everything in the camps that the soldiers do. I think I would be willing to have them drill even with wooden guns. I do not care about that part of it. But I would have them peel the potatoes and do the serving and that sort of thing. At the same time I would give them setting-up exercises and guard their health and try to restore them to vigorous manhood. There is nothing that causes a man to think straight except to have a straight and healthy body. Unless good red blood courses through the veins of these men they can not think straight.

I hope that we will give the Senator from Michigan an opportunity to have his measure perfected in order that it may be presented to the Senate in a form which will be acceptable.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator. I think the Senator from Michigan ought to be given an opportunity to present the amendment on its merits; but in connection with the amendment, it seems to me the key to a successful dealing with the question presented is to find something for these boys to do while they are in control of the Government, some activity in which they would take some interest. When that difficulty shall be worked out to a reasonable degree, I shall be heartily in favor of the pending proposal.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator for what he has said. This is my thought about it; and I would like to say this to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], because he knows better than most of us here about the practical difficulties. I have thought that if we would give permission to the Senator from Michigan to present the subject so that it could be dealt with in connection with the bill we might then perfect his amendment as best we may on the floor; and then in conference, with the officials of the War Department present, there might be worked out a practicable plan. The Army men are wise; they have learned how to keep men in camps happy and contented and engaged in physical activities which make for health and vigor; and I believe it would be possible to work out a plan here which would do what the Senator from Florida and also the Senator from Idaho have in mind, namely, put these men in Army camps not as loafers but to accomplish something in the way of education and development which would make them better citizens by reason of their experience in the camps.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. REED. What the Senator from New York suggests may very easily be done by enlarging the amount appropriated and applying the restrictions which govern the citizens' military training camps. There we have the element of selectivity; the unfit, the "rotten apples," about which the Senator from Florida spoke, are excluded. Nobody has a vested right to enter the citizens' military training camps; only boys of sound mind and body, with good reputations, are accepted. I do not mean to say that they have to be physical giants, by any means, because they do gain weight, they are all built up physically, by attending these camps.

The way to do then, the way to provide that selectivity, the way to insure the power of discipline, which is necessary, the way to exclude aliens, and all that, is to follow the citizens' military training camp example, which has been tested and proved to be successful. The way to accomplish it is to increase the item of appropriation on page 59, line 12, by $22,000,000. That is what the War Department now estimates it would cost to take care of 88,000 young men.

Mr. COPELAND. To what page did the Senator refer?

Mr. REED. I referred to page 59, line 12, where the appropriation is made for the citizens' military training camps.

It will be objected that the practice is to limit those camps to one month during the summer, but I have just refreshed my recollection by looking at the national defense act, and I find that that limitation is not statutory; and, if the appropriation is increased in the way I suggest, the War Department will have authority to keep those camps open 12 months in the year; the money thus appropriated will provide for them, and the established system will furnish all the precautions we need.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] a question in the time of the Senator from New York. What kind of work or mental entertainment or mental exercise would these boys have? Would it be confined entirely to military discipline and training?

Mr. REED. Oh, by no means. The citizens' military training camps have classes in government, classes in a number of subjects about which all citizens ought to know. Their class work is nearly as important as is their physical drill. They have time for sports, but not too much time; they have time for drill or are given drill, but not too much drill. The effort is to turn them out as rounded citizens when they leave the camps.

Mr. BORAH. If a boy had a desire or a taste for a particular vocation, to equip himself for a particular vocation, is the latitude such that he might be able to do so?

Mr. REED. I should think that could easily be arranged. Of course, they are not perfect trade schools, but if a boy wants to learn anything that the Army has facilities for teaching, I am sure they will be glad to teach him.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, just one word.

Mr. WAGNER and Mr. SMITH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield further; and if so, to whom?

Mr. COPELAND. I shall yield in just a moment. The only objection I have to the regulations of the citizens' military training camps is that I think they require too much on the physical side for the men we have in mind, but I suppose that matter could be arranged by the regulations of the Army itself.

Mr. REED. Quite so. After all, we are only planning to take care of 88,000 young men, and it does not matter which individuals out of that group we take.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. I now yield to my colleague.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator will yield, I wish to make the suggestion that to employ the selective system would be to exclude the very men who most need this aid. We all know that in the case of most of these men and boys there has been a deterioration, both moral and physical, in process, and we want to arrest that deterioration. Those of the younger men who need this aid most are those whose deterioration has extended furthest.

Mr. REED. If the senior Senator from New York will yield to me to answer that suggestion, let me say that the Army is not a reform school and never will be, and it would be a great injustice to the better ones of the group to take in men of criminal tendencies. We could not undertake to do that.

Mr. WAGNER. I am not speaking about men of criminal tendencies; I would not make such a reflection upon these men. I am speaking of the men who, because they have been out of employment for several years, wandering around the country, have become physically debilitated; they have undergone physical hardships and have deteriorated.

Mr. REED. They are undernourished.

Mr. WAGNER. They are undernourished.

Mr. REED. Undernourishment is not going to exclude anybody.

Mr. WAGNER. Those are the men who mostly need this aid, and that is the type of individual we are trying to reclaim who would be excluded by the selective process.

Mr. REED. The Senator has not understood me. I think when we get on common ground we will agree. Surely the Senator will agree with me that we ought not take individuals far gone in tuberculosis, we will say, and put them into barracks, sleeping in close contact with healthy boys. That is all I mean.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, there would have to be a restriction in that aspect of the matter.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does not the Senator think that we should limit the membership in these camps to boys who are not economically self-sufficient? In other words, instead of limiting it to healthy boys who may have parents in a position to provide for them, the intent of the Senator from Michigan is limited to that class of young men who are forced out of their homes through economic disaster?

Mr. REED. I have no doubt in the world that after the debate that has gone on here the Secretary of War would feel himself obliged to use this money in exactly that way.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would not the Senator feel that, without being too rigid, we should provide a definition in the amendment and make certain that the boys who go into these camps are the class of boys who have no families or who, for one reason or another, are wanderers, rather than to allow to enter these camps boys who have homes?

Mr. REED. We might exclude some deserving cases if we provide such a limitation unless the language was very carefully guarded.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to say just a word further. I am sure my colleague realizes that I am in the fullest accord wtih him regarding the admission to these camps of men who may be physically unfit from a military standpoint, for such a restriction would be calamitous. I think it would be absurd to open our camps for men who are so fit as to meet the military standard; but we should admit to the camps men who have become deteriorated through years of distress, not men with tuberculosis or physical diseases, of course, but men who are simply undernourished by reason of the lack of food and the distressing conditions under which they live.

Mr. President, we are so close together in this matter that I think it would be a pity, indeed, if we did not permit the Senator from Michigan to present the amendment in perfected form in order that we may get final action.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, it is a matter of very deep regret to those who hold views similar to my own that until this time in the present session we have not in reality dealt with any bill which is designed to relieve human distress. We have been very ready and alert to deal with the banking situation; we have dealt, indeed, with other problems that have been confronting us; but until now, Mr. President, we have not in any respect dealt with just human misery; and, sir, to me that is not only the most absorbing but is the most important problem with which legislatures ought to be concerned. Now, sir, we have presented for the first time a measure that touches at least a problem of grave consequence to us, and touches it in a fashion that affects the hearts of all of us, for we are dealing with boys, boys who, without fault on their part, have been compelled to go forth upon the highways and the byways, from dire necessity seeking some way in which they may merely exist; and that problem, appealing as it is, though it presents itself in a form which may not be acceptable to all of us, even though in an amendment to which all of us could object upon certain specified details, is nevertheless a problem that we ought in some way endeavor to solve.

I had hoped that by this time in this session the La Follette-Costigan bill or the Cutting bill or the Wagner bill—to me all important measures, with which I am in sympathy—would be before this body and we would act upon them. I had hoped, as was suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] in the speech he made to-day, that there would have been time in this session to have dealt with problems of that sort. I can not feel any optimism as to Congress dealing with them in the remaining days of the present session. We have, if you will recall, Mr. President, the realism of this particular situation, two weeks more of this session. We follow, as I understand the program that has been agreed upon, the pending measure with a measure involving the prohibition law. If anybody here labors under the delusion that the measure in reference to the prohibition law will be finished in 15 minutes or in 15 hours, he has, it seems to me, "another think coming," for we will then be dealing with something as to which our experience has taught us we can not reach a conclusion in any brief period.

So here in reality is the first and here is the last opportunity that this Congress has to deal with the question of human misery in this land. I will deal with it in any way, and I will take almost any chance in the endeavor to relieve a bit of the distress that now afflicts the youth of our country.

I do not care whether it is a serious problem for the military authorities or not; I readily concede that it is; but they must have their problem in this time, as all the rest of us have our problems and as these young men have their problems; and there is no more important problem confronting the people of the United States to-day than the problem of relieving want and cold and starvation and hunger and destitution; and that problem comes to us now in this particular measure.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I am a little bit apprehensive because of the description by the Senator of the hopelessness of the situation. Does not the Senator feel that there is ample time left in this session if we are determined to deal with this grave problem of relief for the destitute and employment for the unemployed?

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope so; but, sir, my experience has taught me that my hope will be quite in vain, because it is obvious to the Senator that with but two weeks more of this session remaining and with the prohibition measure to come before us next it will be well nigh impossible to put over a real measure dealing with the problem of human distress and have it passed by the other House and become a law; and perhaps there are other reasons, too, with which the Senator is familiar, which will preclude the possibility of laws like he and I have been advocating upon this floor from becoming actualities and becoming laws of the land. And so, Mr. President, having presented to us this problem to-day, let us solve it as we can.

The debate has been of inestimable value. It is not now a question wherein there is a very marked diversity of opinion, for the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] readily and kindly and generously concedes that he is ready to go forward in any fashion that may be appropriate in order to accomplish the desired result. So we may start with the premise, in any discussion of what we are dealing with now, that all admit the necessity for action; that all admit that there is a problem of superlative importance to be dealt with by us; that all want to solve that problem; and it may be that we are required to take the old Roosevelt ian theory of trial and error. If that be so, let us take it, and let us try; and if we err, well and good. The problem requires and demands the particular effort.

I became conscious of this problem some time ago, and I began to investigate it as best I could. In the State of California, from which I come, the idea of camps for transients has been in operation now for more than a year. It is true those camps are not in large units, and there are but 4,000 or thereabouts that are accommodated in the camps; but they do exist, and they have done a most remarkable work there.

All of the fears that the communities near by might have felt concerning those camps have been dissipated by the experience respecting them. Young men and old, it is true, are taken into those camps. It is quite true that they provide employment of a certain sort—sometimes 2 days a week, sometimes 4 days a week, of 6 hours a day. No salaries are paid; but the men who are in those camps have grown happy in them, and they have been prevented from starving in a land of plenty.

The camps were rendered necessary in our State because of the ability of those men to come quickly into the State and because they found there at times not the same rigors of climate that they had in the places from which they came. From every State in the Union over the line, during this terrible time, have they come. They have come in such numbers that it is estimated on actual count that about 1,200 a day have come during certain periods. Of these transients the best records have been kept that were available, and 20 per cent of them are under 21 years of age.

There has not been an instance of disorder, there has not been an instance of crime in the camps; and the work that has been done there has been well done, efficiently done, and has saved those who came within them.

Last October I saw in the photogravure section of the New York Times—a very great newspaper but for its editorial page [laughter]—pictures of itinerant boys who have gone about in this country, taken in East St. Louis. They were singularly instructive and remarkably appealing. Some of us are old enough to have grandchildren of the age of these boys. I can not imagine anything more tragic than for a parent to see those whom he loves and those for whom he can not provide going out upon the highways, little lads—that is all they are—and there hiking along, subjected to influences to which under ordinary circumstances they never would be subjected, misfortune being their only fault, the poverty of their parents their only crime. These lads, to the number of 300,000 or more, going about in this country, present an appealing subject for legislation by this body at the only time in this session it has had the opportunity to legislate for human beings at all.

Here are the pictures as described in this paper:

A tragic aftermath of the days of prosperity: The army of homeless boys now roaming the country.

Youthful victims of a calamity which has spread throughout the world: Boy wanderers, one of the many flitting groups from a pathetic army of more than a quarter of a million lads under 21, having dinner at a Salvation Army relief station in East St. Louis, Ill.

Look at those pictures! You can not look at them without a heart throb, and you can not look at them without feeling that if we can do anything in their behalf in this day it ought to be done; and here is the only mode presented to us. Not the best mode, perhaps; I grant you that. Not the only mode, perhaps; I grant you that. But it is the one mode that is before us now; and the Senator from Pennsylvania, with a generosity that does him infinite credit, says that he is willing this bill shall be amended so that these lads may be taken care of either in the citizens' military training camps of the country or in the Army itself.

I do not care how we take care of them. I realize the objections that there are upon this floor to increasing the Army appropriations and the difficulty that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] will have in accomplishing that result. I realize what may be said about putting them in the citizens' military training camps, and I realize that those difficulties may be almost insuperable. But whether they are or whether they are not, let us try for some relief for these young men; and that many of the objections are merely fanciful I think the amendment that is presented here demonstrates beyond a doubt.

First, it is declared in this amendment that any person admitted to any military post pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 1 shall be subject to the customary discipline maintained at such post. Therefore you have him under discipline.

Secondly, you have the right in the Secretary of War, authorized directly by this amendment, to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section. Under that provision he can make such rules and regulations as may be essential to protect the Regular Army, to prevent any of the ills that have been suggested here, and generally to execute and administer, in the fashion that we care to have it administered, this particular law.

Problem it is for the Army; but it is our problem, too. Problem it is for the commandant, as is suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania—admitted; but it is our problem, too. The problem that is presented to-day to our legislative assembly here is whether we will do what lies in our power at the moment, in the only way that is suggested to us, to remedy an evil—an evil that none of us would tolerate in times of prosperity, and that is due solely to the economic crisis confronting us to-day.

So, let us act—act upon the only bill dealing with human misery and with want and suffering and hunger and destitution that has come before the Senate in this whole session. Let us act, and let us try even though we fail to provide a wholly adequate remedy.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, as the sponsor of an alternative measure dealing with this problem, I desire to associate myself with the remarks just made by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

The Senator perhaps is aware that the legislature of his own State unanimously indorsed the proposal which I introduced in the Senate dealing with this particular problem.

Everyone who has been a Member of this body for any length of time will realize that the easiest way to defeat any worthy cause is to induce the proponents of that cause to quarrel among themselves on questions of method.

The proposition which I have made is that the Federal Government should appropriate a sum of $15,000,000 to be granted to the States, first, upon the showing of need, and, secondly, upon the showing that each State has a definite plan for dealing with the problem.

If these two proposals—the one made by the Senator from Michigan and the other which I have proposed—were on the floor of this body to be pitted against each other, I should be very glad to show, from the evidence of the witnesses who appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Manufactures, what I conceive to be the superior merits of my proposal. Some of them, I believe, were taken up to-day by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The main argument of these witnesses was that each one of these transient young men and young women—for there is a large number of itinerant young women whose problems are equally grave—constitutes an individual problem. They have to be handled as individuals. It is very difficult to treat them in such large units as would be necessary under the present proposal.

I think there is force in many of the objections made by the Senator from Pennsylvania; but I must say that when the Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to have the problem handled through the citizens' military training camps he is simply, to my mind, adding to the difficulties before us.

The Senator from Pennsylvania has stated that by his plan it would cost $22,000,000 to take care of 88,000 cases, a very small proportion of the total number of cases with which we are going to have to deal.

The proposal made by me, which is now a part of the Costigan-La Follette bill, and is on the Senate Calendar—and the same thing applies to the proposals embodied in the bill of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]—deals with the problem as a whole and not with any one special angle of it, and deals with that problem at very much less cost than has been suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I feel, furthermore, Mr. President, that the Army is not ideally suited to take care of a problem of this kind. We have seen in the past the difficulties involved in allowing the Army merely to present a course in American citizenship at these citizens' military training camps, and how unsatisfactory that has been in many ways. I do not think the Army can handle the problem. I do not think it can handle more than one small bit of the problem. But I do agree with the Senator from California that, when this is the only proposal before us, we ought to suspend the rules, give the Senator from Michigan a chance to bring his proposal onto the floor of the Senate, and then perhaps amend it so that it will be more satisfactory to the majority of the Senate membership.

Mr. President, as the question stands it is not a problem of one of two methods; it is a problem of getting the question before the Senate.

I can not add to the very graphic picture which the Senator from Michigan drew on Saturday of the conditions in the country. The problem is one of enormous magnitude. It can hardly be overstated. The statistics which have been furnished are not accurate, they are largely a matter of guesswork; but when we consider that the testimony of these expert witnesses placed the number of transients, at the minimum, at 800,000, and, at the maximum, in figures away up in the millions, we realize that the problem has to be handled in one way or another at this session of the Congress.

Mr. President, these transients are not members of the tramp or hobo class. Ninety per cent of them are the best of the youth of the country. By delaying we are developing the 90 per cent who started out with the intention of getting jobs into a generation of hoboes.

For that reason, Mr. President, I think we should sink any personal differences involved and vote to suspend the rules and bring the proposal of the Senator from Michigan onto the floor of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] to suspend the rules.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think we should have a quorum present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Cutting | Kendrick | Shipstead |
| Austin | Dale | Keyes | Shortridge |

Mr. CUTTING. I desire to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] to suspend the rules.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to lay the motion aside temporarily while I offer an amendment to the bill in the form of a substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I offer as an amendment, to overcome some of the objections which have been stated to my proposal, on page 59, line 12, to strike out "$2,500,000" and to insert in lieu thereof—

> Twenty-four million five hundred thousand dollars, of which $22,000,000 shall be available only for camps of at least 12 months' duration in which applicants are accepted only if over 15 years and under 21 years of age, and if unemployed at the time of application and for six months previous thereto.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not rise to object to this proposed amendment, but I would like to know what we can expect from the administration of the appropriation in the way of giving these boys something to do.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I did not hear the whole of the Senator's question.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to know what we may expect in the way of rules and regulations which will really give the boys something to do after they are taken into these camps. Of course, I would rather have them in the camps than out on the road, no matter what they were doing; but I think it is highly important that those who are to administer the appropriation have in mind that this body expects them to make the administration broad enough to give the boys something to do in the way of mental occupation, some activity that will enable them to improve themselves in that respect, as well as the physical training and discipline.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think the best assurance that that will be the attitude of the Army is in the experience with the camps heretofore established. I have never heard any criticism from any parent of the course of study that was given in these citizens' military training camps. On the other hand, I have had many letters from fathers and mothers of these young men saying that their boys had been improved, that they had learned a great deal outside of the narrow military discipline and military tactics, and I think that the best evidence of what they will do is in what they have done.

I agree with the Senator that to take these young men in and spend 12 months teaching them how to do squads right would be a waste of time and Government money, and a waste of a great opportunity to better these youngsters in every way.

Mr. BORAH. Secondly, if these boys go into the camps, as would be permitted under the amendment, would they be held there in opposition to their wishes?

Mr. REED. Not at all. If one of them desires to go home for any reason, or if he finds employment, or has any other reason for leaving, he will be free to do so at any time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment?

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan wish to withdraw his motion to suspend the rule?

Mr. COUZENS. I ask unanimous consent for leave to withdraw the motion to suspend the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and without objection the motion to suspend the rule is withdrawn. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] whether any provision was made to take care of the situation in the library at West Point?

Mr. REED. Yes; an amendment was offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to provide that a retired officer might be retained or engaged there as librarian.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, on page 60 of the bill, I move to strike out, beginning with line 11, the balance of that page, all of page 61, and down to and including line 9, on page 62. That means striking out the appropriation for the civilian instruction in rifle practice. The total amount, as I understand it, is $188,215, in a way a trifling amount and yet a saving should be made in every way possible.

I will say that I had intended to move to strike out the citizens' military training camp appropriation, but inasmuch as an amendment has been adopted to include the plan of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] I shall be very glad to see that put into operation.

We are spending more money than should be spent for war purposes, in my estimation. I want to read a short article for the benefit of those present and also for the RECORD. It is under a release headline of January 6, 1933, being an authentic statement by Roger W. Babson, "How the Federal Budget Could Be Balanced," under date line of Washington, D. C., January 6, 1933. It is copyrighted 1933 by the Publishers Financial Bureau and reads as follows:

No one realizes more keenly than I the necessity for balancing the Federal Budget. The credit of the United States must and will be kept intact, because upon it rests the whole confidence of our financial and business structure. I do not, however, agree with the crazy methods advocated by the "econo-maniacs" of the National Economy League and similar organizations who are attacking earnest and conscientious employees engaged in necessary Government work. First of all, let me say that the real cost of government is not $3,929,000,000 (as people say) but only $678,098,000. This is demonstrated by analyzing the Budget for the fiscal year to end June 30, 1933.

WHERE THE TROUBLE REALLY LIES

The Federal Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, is approximately $3,929,000,000. This amount is divided as follows:

|---|---|
| (1) Interest and sinking fund on public debt | $1,136,700,000 |
| (2) Cost of veterans, etc | 928,000,000 |
| (3) Cost of Army and Navy | 648,300,000 |
| Total | 2,713,000,000 |
| (4) Remaining expenses of entire United States Government | 1,216,198,000 |

Of the $1,216,198,000 remaining expenses there is a $538,100,000 expenditure for public works, which can not be properly charged to regular operating costs of government. These public works are important unemployment relief measures. Deducting them from the total remaining costs:

| Remaining expenses | $1,216,198,000 |
| Public works | 538,100,000 |
| | 678,098,000 |

This leaves only $678,098,000 actual running expenses of Government departments, concerning which everybody is shouting "economy."

Mr. David Lawrence figures that the present tax on tobacco, cigars, and cigarettes will bring in $500,000,000, which is three-fourths of the $678,000,000 ordinary cost of running the Government. The customs duties are bringing in another $290,000,000. In other words, the tobacco tax and customs duties alone would more than take care of the entire regular expense. Do you wonder that I decry the foolish talk about economy of Government and "technocracy of management"? The real trouble lies in three things: (1) Enormous interest and sinking-fund charges on Federal debt; (2) the cost of past wars; and (3) the preparation for future wars. Also, remember that the Federal debt is almost wholly the result of wars! That is where your heavy income and profits taxes, your estate taxes, your gasoline taxes, and all of the big taxes are going. That's where some people now propose to throw in a general sales tax.

WHAT CAN BE DONE ABOUT IT?

Now let us analyze these three big expense items: First, interest and sinking fund on debt, $1,136,700,000. This can be cut only by defaulting on interest and sinking fund, or by revaluing gold, or by some conversion plan which would reduce interest charges. Something may be done along one or more of these lines, but how much can practically be done is a moot question. Second, cost of veterans' aid, $928,000,000. Of course there may be inequalities and abuses in this matter. If so, they should be corrected. Yet how can cutting the veterans improve business? In most cases reducing Federal aid to veterans would result in increasing local aid to their families. Third, cost of the Army and Navy, $648,300,000. This can be cut only through disarmament plans; but can we ever bring about disarmament by raising tariffs, fighting about debts, and making ourselves generally hated abroad? With the present antiforeign attitude on the part of Congress we are headed for another world war instead of world peace.

This all means that the hullabaloo about "economy" is like a dog barking at the moon. It doesn't get us anywhere. It may be well to consider reduction of aid to veterans, but why not say so? Why beat about the bush and persecute honest, hard-working Federal employees, many of whom are habitually underpaid? Why is the Budget out of balance? Because of war. About $3,000,000,000 of our $4,000,000,000 Budget for 1933 goes to pay for past wars and to prepare for future wars. Hence our real job is to get behind the peace societies instead of economy leagues. Elimination of war is the only way the world can ever hope to balance its budgets. That must be the real aim, even though it requires time. Meanwhile, until we have a more unselfish world spirit the only sane and worthwhile way of balancing the Budget is to improve general business. This means increasing purchasing power. If the Federal Government would spend only 2 per cent of its Annual Budget on a sane publicity campaign to increase purchasing power from the ground up it would have no trouble balancing the Budget.

The last paragraph is one that I think will be agreed to and approved by a great many people:

CHRISTIANITY, NOT ECONOMY, NEEDED

In other words, there are two things necessary to balance the Budget and keep it balanced. The first is to start a great national advertising campaign, paid for by the Federal Government, to create a demand for goods and to bring business back to normal. This would have been impossible before now because the deflation was necessary, but now such a campaign would work. The second is to substitute international good will for war. Reduction in world budgets is awaiting a substitution of the Christ spirit of tolerance, good will, and righteousness in place of the present-day spirit of hate, nationalism, and selfishness. It's not economy nor technocracy the world needs to-day, but, rather, simple Christianity.

Business as registered by the Babson chart now stands at 15 per cent below a year ago.

Mr. President, that is a sentiment expressed by Roger W. Babson. He is supposed to be one of the best authorities we have in the country on business conditions and business interests. It is rather an amazing statement. According to his figures, approximately 20 per cent of the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30 next, after we deduct the amount for public works, go for the actual running expenses of the Government. The 80 per cent is for war purposes—past, present, and future. We have been working here for days and days trying to cut the 20 per cent of actual expenses of running the Government. When it comes to the War Department bill, it is true there is a little cut under last year's appropriation, but nothing like a sufficiently large reduction. In fact, the Senate Committee on Appropriations has increased the amount as carried in the bill as it passed the House by about $1,660,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, may I suggest that we just now added $22,000,000 more?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; that is true. In my opinion, the last addition may bring about some good results in relieving the present deplorable unemployment situation. But there are many other items in the bill which in my opinion are not only absolutely useless, but the money is practically wasted, and wasted at a time when there is great need for curtailment of expenses and great need for money being expended for other purposes.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a statement from the New York Times of February 6 of this year headed "Five Peace Groups Join at Philadelphia in Plea to Instruct Geneva Delegates." It is in reference to a letter to President Hoover from the five peace groups.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The statement is as follows:

[From the New York Times, February 6, 1933]

ASK HOOVER MOVE TO DISARM WORLD—FIVE PEACE GROUPS JOIN AT PHILADELPHIA IN PLEA TO INSTRUCT GENEVA DELEGATES

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 5.—President Hoover is asked to instruct the American delegates to the Geneva conference "to propose a multilateral treaty for immediate total disarmament" in a joint message sent to him to-day by five peace organizations and made public here by the Pennsylvania Committee for Total Disarmament.

Pointing out that the present Geneva conference, like its predecessors, aims "only to limit, not to eliminate, warfare," the message warns that such efforts "are foredoomed to fail."

"The bridge," it says, "must be built not half way but all the way across the abyss of war."

The signers of the message, in behalf of their organizations, are Dr. William I. Hull, chairman of the Pennsylvania Committee for Total Disarmament; Mildred S. Olmsted of the National Board, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, United States section; John Nevin Sayre, executive secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation; Anne E. Gray, director of the Women's Peace Society; and Mary B. Orr, director of the Women's Peace Union of New York.

The statement reads, in part, as follows:

"On February 6, 1932, a great petition for total world disarmament, signed by millions of men and women in many countries, was presented to the disarmament conference in Geneva.

"A year has passed. These petitioners, with other millions all over the world who demand from their governments international disarmament and peace, have watched the long sessions of the Geneva conference, and with profound disappointment have seen its failure so far to achieve any degree of actual disarmament. Four conferences for the reduction of armaments have been held in the last 10 years. These conferences failed even to stop the growth of world armaments.

"Vigorous effort and leadership must break the strangle hold of national armaments, the international traffic in arms, and armed alliances which are making for war. Four precious weeks of office remain to you. The solution can not be delayed.

"Mr. President, we ask you now to instruct your delegates at the Geneva conference to propose a multilateral treaty for immediate total disarmament. Proposed by the United States, such a treaty would revivify the conference and be an invitation which governments would find it hard to disregard in the face of world-wide unrest."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota has one minute remaining on the amendment.

Mr. FRAZIER. Very well; I will continue on the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is recognized for 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. From a report of Gen. Douglas A. MacArthur, Chief of Staff of the War Department, I want to quote a brief paragraph, as follows:

To sum up, governmentally we have to-day, from the standpoint of national strategy and policy, the strongest possible organization for war. It seems almost incomprehensible that this organization, which incidentally has been the envy of soldiers, sailors, and statesmen abroad, should be tampered with in the major elements in favor of a highly speculative experiment.

That is a quotation from Gen. Douglas A. MacArthur admitting that we have the largest war-purpose forces we have ever had in peace times. Although we talk about world peace and disarmament, yet we have the largest preparations for war that we have ever had in peace times in both the Army and the Navy.

I have an editorial which was published in the Brisbane column of the Washington Herald of February 9 last, which I desire to read, as it is along the same line:

Stalin, in Russia, drafts tens of thousands from the cities, peasants from farms, sends them into the cold Arctic to cut trees and provide lumber that the second 5-year plan calls for. Our "best minds" shake their heavy heads and say, "How horrible, to force tens of thousands of men to cut down trees in Arctic weather."

They didn't shake their heads when our Government forced 3,000,000 men to go to Europe into a quarrel not our own. To stand around in trenches is less pleasant than cutting wood in cold weather.

Stalin's men cutting wood will produce wealth.

Our men were gassed, some of them shot, and the bill in pensions, bonus insurance, and hospitalization, involved in their enforced absence abroad, their heroism, and patriotism, will cost taxpayers of the United States $50,000,000,000 before the bill is all paid.

Some countries are more foolish than Russia, and some kinds of stupidity worse than drafting men to cut lumber.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the able Senator from North Dakota let me interrogate him upon a matter for information?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. Recognizing the Senator as an authority upon all questions affecting agriculture and particularly the needs of the farmers of the Northwest I should like to ask the Senator this question: Under the amendment by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] and adopted in the sense which we understand it to have been adopted, providing for the care in Army camps of a vast number of young men who may be found here and there unemployed, does the Senator from North Dakota feel that that will draw men from the farms of the Northwest? Will they leave the farms and their cultivation in order to avail themselves of the privilege accorded under that amendment, and go to the Army posts and camps there to live and leave their work upon the farms?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I should not say that that would be the effect at all; I do not feel the amendment, if enacted into law, will have that effect. As a matter of fact, at the present time there is not very much farm employment; the farmers can not afford to hire anyone; they can not get enough money for their products to enable them to pay their running expenses, let alone hiring help; and so they themselves are doing what work they can and are not hiring men. The amendment, if it shall finally become effective, may take some of the young men from cities who normally would go to the farm and work there during their vacations during the summer, but I do not believe it will take very many, and practically none, from the farms themselves.

Mr. LEWIS. Let me, Mr. President, anticipate. In the Senator's judgment, will the sons of the owners of the farms, members of farmers' families, remain on the farm to do farming work, with this opportunity afforded, or will they leave their households and their homes to live at Army posts and camps under the provisions of the amendment referred to?

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, there are a few of the farm boys who now go to citizens' military training camps just as a summer vacation, and I presume more may go under the provision referred to than have gone in the past; but I do not know about that.

Mr. LEWIS. What would the Senator say, Mr. President, would be the effect upon the farm work in getting out the crops if those who are members of farm families should leave the farm and enter Army camps as suggested? How does the Senator think that would affect the planting and harvesting of crops among those who are so poor as not to be able to employ outside help?

Mr. FRAZIER. We have an oversupply of farm products, anyway, and if it is cut down, according to economists, it will relieve the situation so that perhaps the farmers may get better prices for their products. However, I am not worrying about the lack of workers on the farms, even if farm work shall be neglected and the quantity of commodities produced cut down.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator for his suggestion.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in my opinion an amazing situation confronts the Congress. As I have stated from the Babson article, only 20 per cent of the money actually expended this year for governmental purposes of all kinds goes for the actual ordinary running expenses of the Government. If that 20 per cent could all be wiped out entirely, our present revenue would not be sufficient to pay the balance of the 80 per cent expended for war purposes past, present, and future, and for the deficit that now exists. I repeat, we have an amazing situation confronting us. I do not know what the outcome is going to be. We have millions out of employment; we have farmers by the thousands going broke and out of business. We have read in the newspapers during the last few days about farmers organizing throughout the country to prevent themselves and their neighbors from losing their farms and their property by foreclosure sales. I have a clipping here from the Washington News of February 9, which shows a picture taken in the great old State of Ohio. Under the picture is the following statement:

Three thousand of Ohio's militant penny-bidding farmers burned communist literature, unfurled the American flag, hung up two nooses in a barn, and paid $1.90 for a neighbor's chattels that were mortgaged for $800. Here is a part of the crowd saluting the flag after chasing communists away. The two tractors in the background were bid in for 17 cents. The Ohioans returned his goods to Walter Crozier, Haskins farmer, defeating another foreclosure.

That occurred in the old, conservative, sane, and sensible State of Ohio. In the newspaper there is another story right under it:

Farmers hold United States official and force mortgage action.

This incident happened in the great old State of Michigan. The dispatch is dated Ithaca, Mich., and reads:

ITHACA, MICH.—A crowd of 1,000 angry farmers held a Federal official prisoner near here late yesterday while they were bidding $3.80 for the mortgaged livestock and farm tools of Roy Marzolf.

The farmers seized Peter A. Holman, 40, United States Treasury official and receiver of the defunct Ithaca National Bank, holder of the mortgage, when he arrived on the Marzolf farm 3 miles from Ithaca.

After the sale they compelled him to accept the $3.80 and sign a release of the $9,000 mortgage. When Holman informed them the mortgage note was in the bank the farmers forced A. A. Borsum, clerk, to get it from the vault and turned it over to Marzolf.

Sheriff Jacob D. Helman, of Gratiot County, an auctioneer himself, started the sale with the announcement he had a sealed bid of $400 from George Davis, auto dealer. Davis withdrew the bid when the irate farmers threatened to boycott him.

Attempting to sell the property separately, the sheriff asked for $10 to start the bidding on a grain binder. A farmer bid 2 cents. Holman announced the sale would be postponed 10 days. The farmers countered by seizing Holman, who was in the crowd.

Resuming his rôle as auctioneer, the sheriff accepted bids of 15 cents for the binder, 20 cents for an auto, and 25 cents for a cow. One farmer bought a wagon for 10 cents.

Holman said to-day he is reporting the attack on his person to the United States Comptroller of Currency in Washington. He will await a reply, he said, before taking action against the farmers.

That incident occurred in the great old State of Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I could tell the Senator worse stories than that about conditions in the State of Michigan.

Mr. FRAZIER. That one is bad enough.

Mr. COUZENS. And I assume the Senator from North Dakota could likewise tell some pretty bad ones about conditions in his State.

Mr. FRAZIER. This one is bad enough. So it seems that even in States like Michigan and Ohio farmers are organizing and taking the law in their own hands to prevent the sale of their mortgaged property. After all, Mr. President, self-preservation is the first law of nature, and always has been, and these farmers are taking the law in their own hands to prevent the loss of their property.

There is a rather encouraging note in this situation, and that is that when the American farmers become sufficiently well organized they are going to have power enough, in my opinion, to demand from the United States Congress the legislation they want, and to get it, too. They are the people who produce the food with which to feed the Nation; they control the very lifeblood of this Nation, and when they become well organized they will bring about a change.

Mr. President, the expenditures for military purposes should be reduced. I hope that the few thousand dollars proposed to be appropriated for civilian training in rifle practice may be cut out of this bill and that the amount may be saved. There are numerous other items that should be cut out of the bill, that might be cut out just as well as not, in my opinion; but I am not going further to take up the time of the Senate. I trust, however, that the amendment which I have offered may be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

PAYMENT IN SILVER OF NEXT BRITISH DEBT INSTALLMENT

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I propose by a bill which I shall introduce to-day to make it possible for Great Britain to pay in silver its interest installment amounting to $74,950,000 due the United States June 15, 1933.

The bill authorizes the President to accept from Great Britain silver not to exceed $100,000,000 in value at the market price of silver at the time of acceptance as a payment upon the British war debt.

The Government of India owes Great Britain approximately $85,000,000. It has been reported with some authority that the Government of India is desirous of paying this debt to Great Britain with silver. The acceptance by the United States of $74,950,000 worth of silver at the world market price of silver of approximately 25 cents an ounce, which is probably lower than it ever will be again, would not only be profitable to the United States but advantageous both to the United States and Great Britain.

Under such a settlement the United States would receive 299,800,000 ounces of silver at the present market price of around 25 cents an ounce. Under the provisions of the bill our Government out of such silver would coin 74,950,000 standard silver dollars. It would deposit such standard silver dollars in the Treasury, and issue and circulate against them $74,950,000 in silver certificates similar to those now in circulation in the United States.

As it requires only seventy-eight one-hundredths of an ounce of silver in the coinage of standard silver dollars, there would remain therefore in the Treasury, in addition to such 74,950,000 standard silver dollars, 241,339,000 ounces of silver to be held in the Treasury as additional security for the maintenance of a parity of the silver certificates so issued.

The issuance of $74,950,000 in silver certificates would not overbalance our silver currency as against our gold currency in circulation. In fact, even with this addition, our silver currency in circulation in the United States would be proportionately less to gold than it was in 1913. There has not been in this century any threat of depreciation of our silver currency, although during all that time, except for the years 1920–1923 when silver currency was temporarily reduced by sales to India, there has been in circulation in the United States silver currency in the form of silver certificates, standard silver dollars and subsidiary coinage in amounts varying from $648,000,000 in 1900 to $850,000,000 in 1930. The only addition to our silver currency during the present century has come through subsidiary coinage.

The currency so issued would be in no sense fiat money, as there would be supporting it a sufficient amount of silver to insure at all times the intrinsic value of the silver certificates issued, while at the same time it would meet to a certain extent the growing demand in this country for an expansion of currency circulation available for our domestic trade.

The consummation of the plan proposed in the bill would relieve Great Britain from a further burden upon her gold reserves in the payment of her interest installment on June 15 and at the same time relieve her credit situation pending results of intergovernmental conversations and the coming international economic conference.

It would also enable the Government of India to carry out its fixed policy of disposing of three or four hundred million ounces of its Government silver without further pursuing the practice of dumping such alleged oversupply of Indian silver upon the markets of the world, which has been and is now so destructive of the exchange value in international trade of silver currencies throughout the world. There is little doubt, from the statement made by the Government of India, that with the disposal of such an amount of silver the practice put in effect by the Government of India, based upon the policy of 1926 of melting up Indian silver coins and selling the silver derived therefrom on the markets of the world, would be abandoned.

The bill requires, as a condition of the acceptance of such silver by the United States, that the Governments of Great Britain and India shall agree not to debase or melt up silver coins for a period of five years. As India is now practically the only country pursuing the policy of debasing and melting up silver coins, the abandonment of such policy by India would restore the price of silver, as the market would then be based on normal mine production and normal demand.

The return to normal mine supply and normal demand would undoubtedly restore the price of silver to between 60 and 70 cents an ounce, where it remained stable for many years, and thus raise and stabilize the exchange value of silver money in international trade.

May I at this point, for the benefit of some of our citizens who are not familiar with the definition of the terms, state what I mean by the "exchange value of money or currencies in international trade"? The exchange value of all currencies in international trade is measured by the amount of gold for which such currencies may be exchanged. Our country, for instance, is on the gold standard. Our dollar may be exchanged for so many grains of gold. When the currency of another government can not be exchanged for as much gold as called for under the terms of issue we term that currency "depreciated," although it may circulate at its nominal or par value in the country of issue.

Returning to the question of the value of the silver proposed to be accepted: It is true that the demand for silver has to a certain extent decreased, owing to the debasement and melting up of silver coins, and also to the stagnation of international trade. Yet, on the other hand, the stagnation in trade, particularly in respect to copper, lead, and zinc, has decreased mine production of silver throughout the world from 261,511,985 ounces in 1929 to 160,000,000 ounces in 1932. The reason for this is readily understood when we are informed that 70 per cent of the silver produced in the world is a by-product of the mining of such metals. This natural fact provides an automatic control of the mine production of silver.

While there are probably 12,000,000,000 ounces of silver in existence, it was estimated by Mr. Francis H. Brownell, chairman of the board of directors of the American Smelting & Refining Co., at a recent hearing before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures of the House of Representatives, that a substantial rise in the price of silver would not bring into the markets in excess of 350,000,000 ounces of silver. The reasons for this estimate were very definitely given by Mr. Brownell, whose company has been buying and selling silver in all parts of the world for over 30 years.

While there are probably 12,000,000,000 ounces of silver in existence, it must be remembered that most of this silver has been hoarded by the people of China and India throughout the ages. They do not acquire and hold it for the purpose of speculation. They give their labor and products for it, and they hold it as long as possible as the most valuable of all things and as the measure and reservoir of their wealth. The people of these countries have always purchased, and are even now purchasing, two-thirds of all the silver produced. While the Government for India was selling silver, the people of India were buying it. The rise and fall of the price of silver has had little effect upon this habit of the people of India and China. For instance, in 1920, when silver was selling in the world's markets at $1.38 an ounce, which is above the parity price of silver with gold in our own country, and in fact in all countries, the people of China and India were not selling silver, but were buying more than their customary quantities.

Our bankers and business men, and in fact our citizens generally, have commenced to understand the destructive effect upon our trade and commerce of the depreciation of the exchange value of the currencies of those countries that have gone off the gold standard. They do not seem to realize, however, that the silver currencies of China and of other countries, embracing over half of the people of the world, have depreciated 56 per cent since 1928. They do not seem to realize that this depreciation in the exchange value of such silver currencies is due to the depreciation of the price of silver.

In 1928 China could exchange two of her silver dollars for one of our dollars with which to purchase our products. To-day she must exchange five of her silver dollars for one of our gold dollars with which to buy our products. In December, 1928, the low price of silver was 57.5 cents an ounce. At the present time it is around 25 cents an ounce.

The effect on our exports to China since 1928 is definitely disclosed in the report of the Department of Commerce issued February 11 of this year. The report says:

> Compared with 1929, total imports showed a slump of 75 per cent, and exports 60 per cent, while they were 34 and 43 per cent, respectively, below the average imports and exports for the years 1915 and 1919, inclusive.

The report further says:

> This decline shows the effects of prevailing economic conditions at home and abroad, of fluctuating exchange rates, and the reduced purchasing power of the masses in most oriental countries.

The statement "reduced purchasing power of the masses in most oriental countries" means, of course, purchasing power abroad—that is, purchasing power in countries of a higher money standard, such as ours, because the purchasing power of the masses of the orientals in their own countries has remained practically unchanged. In other words, a Chinaman receives the same amount of money for a day's labor or for his products to-day as he received in 1929. He buys as much in his own country with his money to-day as he could buy in 1929. It is only when he buys in foreign countries where the value of his money is measured by gold that his purchasing power has decreased.

We have suffered since 1928 from the depreciation of the silver currencies of China and other silver-using countries. We have suffered only since September, 1931, from the depreciation of currencies of other governments that were formerly on the gold standard. We will probably find it quite difficult to discover means to aid in the restoration of the depreciated currencies of those governments that went off the gold standard; but it is obvious to me that it will be quite simple for our Government successfully to aid in the restoration of the depreciated currencies of China and other silver-using countries.

The restoration of the exchange value of such currencies will restore our normal trade with those countries and greatly accelerate its increase. I need cite but one illustration in support of this assertion. It will be remembered that in November of 1931 silver suddenly rose in price from 26 cents an ounce to 36 cents an ounce in response to a general belief that our Government intended to take steps to restore the price of silver. As no action was taken by our Government, the price of silver immediately fell. Here is what the Department of Commerce says with regard to that incident. I quote from page 29 of the China Monthly Trade Report for December, 1931, issued by our Department of Commerce, as follows:

> The rapid rise in the price of silver during the earlier part of November brought the price in American raw cotton in local currency to still lower levels than it was previously and resulted in large sales of the American staple. Arrivals during the month are estimated to be larger than any previous month, and importers state that December arrivals will be still greater. Many Chinese mills are reported to have purchased or contracted stocks sufficient to last them for many months in the future. In certain instances it is believed that stocks sufficient for two years operations have been contracted.

What the statement says with regard to "bringing to lower levels" does not mean that the price of cotton actually fell to lower levels, but that it was lower to the Chinese by reason of the increase in the exchange value of their currency.

It will also be observed that the Chinese, anticipating a rising market, laid in supplies of our product to meet their needs for many months. This, to my mind, and in the opinion of experts with whom I have conferred, leads to the conclusion that any action by our Government tending toward the restoration of the exchange value of silver currencies will start immediately large purchases in our country by peoples using silver currencies.

I call attention to the fact that this bill, like the bill heretofore introduced by me for the purchase of American silver at the market price of silver with silver certificates, approved by the Banking and Currency Committee and now pending in the Senate, will in no way disturb our gold standard system, while accomplishing the restoration of the exchange value of the money of our customers in silver-using countries.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this point to introduce the bill which I have described, and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The bill (S. 5636) to authorize payment of foreign debts in silver under certain limitations, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to accept silver in amounts not to exceed in value in United States currency $100,000,000 in payment of the whole or any part of any amount of principal or interest due from Great Britain or her dominions or dependencies on account of any indebtedness to our Government, such silver to be accepted at the market price in the United States as determined by the United States Treasury Department as of the date when the President shall notify such foreign government of such acceptance: Provided—

(a) That such market price shall not at the time of such acceptance exceed the price of 45 cents an ounce, and (b) that such foreign government so making such tender shall, before the acceptance thereof by the President as herein authorized, agree and bind itself in a manner satisfactory to the President not to debase or melt up its own silver coins or permit the debasement or melting up of such silver coins except for the purpose of recoinage by such government or its dominions or dependencies for their circulation, during a period of five years from and after the acceptance by the President of such silver.

(c) That the authority of the President to accept silver as herein authorized shall be limited to a period of not to exceed five years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. The silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the requirements of existing law and the regulations of the mint service governing the methods of determining the amount of pure silver contained, and the amount of the charges or deductions, if any, to be made; but such silver bullion shall not be counted as part of the silver bullion authorized or required to be purchased and coined under the provisions of existing law.

SEC. 3. The silver accepted and received under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to be held. used, and disposed of as in this act provided.

SEC. 4. The President shall cause silver certificates to be issued in denominations of $1, to the total number of dollars for which such silver was accepted in payment of debts. Such silver certificates shall be used by the Treasurer of the United States in payment of any obligations of the United States.

SEC. 5. The silver so accepted under this act shall be coined into standard silver dollars and subsidiary coins sufficient, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, to meet any demands for redemption of such silver certificates issued under the provisions of this act, and such coin shall be retained in the Treasury for the payment of such certificates on demand. The silver so obtained and deposited under this act, except so much thereof as is coined under the provisions of this act, shall be held in the Treasury for the sole purpose of aiding in maintaining the parity of such certificates as provided in existing law. Any such certificates or reissued certificates, when presented at the Treasury, shall be redeemed in standard silver dollars, or in subsidiary silver coin, at the option of the holder of the certificates: Provided, That, in the redemption of such silver certificates issued under this act, not to exceed one-third of the coin required for such redemption may in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury be made in subsidiary coins, the balance to be made in standard silver dollars.

SEC. 6. When any silver certificates issued under the provisions of this act are redeemed or received into the Treasury from any source whatsoever, and belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation; but nothing herein shall prevent the cancellation and destruction of mutilated certificates and the issue of other certificates of like denomination in their stead, as provided by law.

SEC. 7. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act.

During the delivery of Mr. PITTMAN's speech—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired, but he has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thank the Chair.

After the conclusion of Mr. PITTMAN's speech—

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in support of and justification for the compromise just agreed to, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a news item appearing in to-day's New York Times. This is on the first page. It is under the heading:

Danger of revolt cited by farmers in pleas for relief. Letters to Senators tell fear of chaos unless "unbearable" burden is eased soon. Inflation demands grow. Idea that this is salvation mingles with call for debt moratorium. "Suffering amid plenty." Some denounce eastern bankers and Congress—Urge for a "new deal" is insistent.

This story evidently has been prepared by Mr. Russell Owen. It is a special dispatch; and I ask unanimous consent that the article under the heading as indicated may be printed in connection with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times of Monday, February 13, 1933]

WASHINGTON, February 12.—The demands for inflation, mortgage moratoriums, and reduced taxes, which have been made in Congress in recent weeks, have their strongest roots in the middle and far western regions of the country. There is probably no more accurate mirror of the people's thought than mail received by Congressmen, and in the last two or three months the tone of these letters has changed radically.

From being argumentative, suggestive, and full of mildly phrased panaceas for national ills, they have become violent, denunciatory, and more often pathetic in the picture they sketch of conditions in the agricultural sections of the United States.

In an effort to learn just what farmers and those associated with them are thinking, to learn what causes these ordinarily law-abiding people to resort to extra-legal methods to prevent tax sales and mortgage foreclosures, hundreds of letters to several western Senators have been read. They have been taken at random from the mail of the last few months. They are from men who are not normally radical in their viewpoint—from formerly prosperous farmers, small-town bankers, lawyers, real-estate men, insurance agents, heads of mortgage and loan companies, and merchants. Most of those selected were typewritten on business letterheads.

A few months ago there was in the minds of the people who wrote these letters only a sad bewilderment at the financial swamp in which they were sinking, appeals for help, and angry protests. But now the predominant emotion in them is fear—fear of greater economic and business chaos, fear of revolution. That word was seldom used until two or three months ago; now it bobs up repeatedly in letters from the western farming communities. It is not a threat, but a specter which they have conjured up and from which they shrink. They fear trouble, fear revolt, but seldom threaten it.

CURRENCY INFLATION DEMANDED

The most insistent demand found in these letters is for currency inflation. The writers do not care much what kind of inflation, whether a reduction in the gold content of the dollar, free silver, bimetallism, or straight inflation of the currency. They don't particularly care what happens to industry and to the wage earner as the result of inflation. They want something with which to pay their debts, for they see themselves as a people living in the midst of plenty but with absolutely no money to meet their bills.

The idea that inflation may save the farmer has spread with startling rapidity in the last two months. It is advocated from Indiana, where it has most recently appeared as an issue which must be considered, all the way to the Pacific. One Senator went so far as to say that he did not believe any man could be elected west of the Mississippi in the next election unless he were for inflation.

The pressure of taxes, taxes which they can not meet, and which take from them their farms and homes, is also uppermost in their minds. They demand economy, demand that the ever-growing burden of taxation be lifted from them; and if inflation will help, so much the better. Government abuses which have crept into the administration of the farm loans, the lack of discretion which permits a land bank to exact the last dollar from a farmer who needs it for his spring planting, have aroused tremendous indignation among the western people.

BELIEVED CONGRESS SHOULD ACT

Anger at Congress for its do-nothing attitude, and past fumbling of the farm problem, is mingled with a fear that any remedy which may now be evolved will come too late to relieve the situation. There are suggestions that distribution of wealth should be forced by Congress, that eastern bankers should be made to "disgorge" the gold which the farmer believes has been hoarded. It was this feeling which reacted against the branch banking provision of the Glass bill, for the farmers believe that branch banks would merely aggravate their troubles and withdraw more money—if that were possible—from the agricultural communities.

They are violently opposed to cancellation of international debts, due to the conviction that the United States has been more solicitous of her foreign creditors than of the farmers and small business men. The farmer points out that he has been facing the depression for 10 years, that he was the original victim of inflation for the benefit of industry. There was no heed paid to his demands for relief so long as industry was booming, the westerner argues, and now he does not see why anyone should balk at inflation, which would help him, even if the rest of the country suffered. A small part of the money loaned abroad would immediately rehabilitate agriculture and restore its buying power, he says, and he thinks it is the duty of Congress to give it to him.

If relief is not forthcoming, writes one man, the bonus expeditionary force will look like a "sideshow" compared with the farmers' march on Washington.

LETTER ABOUT CANCELLATION

The attitude toward cancellation is shown in this letter from a lawyer in South Dakota:

"If you want real heat just mention cancellation of the debts owing our Government by European countries. The ordinary farmer doesn't know much about financing as conducted by international bankers, but he does know what it means to pay debts, and if anybody owes the American Government anything he wants it paid, the same as he has to pay. The average fellow in this country [meaning South Dakota] thinks we have already given too much. If capacity to pay is any measure, the farmers feel they ought to have the same chance as foreign governments and not lose most of their hide in the process.

"There has got to be a change for the better soon, or an awful lot of people will be ready to scrap the Constitution and everything else. A hungry belly hasn't much conscience and no pride in the existing order of things. You can't argue economics, supply and demand, world markets, and such like with a fellow who is hungry and is willing to work to supply his hunger and be unable to get the job. The same holds true with the farmer who has sweat for years to get somewhere, and then have it all change to chaff.

"HUEY LONG says we are headed for the bow-wows if we don't wake up and do something about it. It hasn't been so long ago that I would have been with the majority and scoffed at his statements, but now I am not so sure. I honestly believe that if some tangible target was offered to the people of this country they would be a bunch of raging wolves out for blood. If there is anything to this alleged concentration of wealth and bossing of the Government by and for the advantage and privilege of a few, Heaven protect and be ready to receive them when the rank and file come to fully realize it, and that goes for whoever is President and whatever party is in control.

SUGGESTS NEW DEAL ALL AROUND

"Better to tumble the whole economic structure into chaos and then oblivion and start from the ground up on a new deal all around than to continue the way we have been going. This may sound awful extreme, radical, and bolshevik, but is what is going on in the minds of tens of thousands of our people over the country, if what our own people say is any measure at all."

That letter represents the great majority, but there are contrasting expressions, which show a courage and fortitude which explains why events have been no worse in the Western States. Take this man, for instance, who has a few dollars left:

"Inclosed find the second $50 payment on my loan. I very much thank you for your personal interest in me. I was surprised land banks were so human; and believe me, I won't fail to tell my friends what real men you are. I think lots of things would be better if we knew each other better and had a chance at the other fellow's point of view. And it surely is right that all we farmers need is a price for what we have to sell. But land knows when we will ever get that again. So we must just plug along together as well as we can and take the longer way up the hill, and we'll make it. Surely our forefathers handed us down that much grit."

To a bank: "I am going to let you foreclose on the farm, as I do not have any way of raising the money to meet the payments and taxes. I thought maybe the bank with the second would try and carry me over until I could realize something out of the crop, but they have not done so. With two short crops in 1930 and 1931, where I had to use other money to keep up on the payments and the taxes, and you getting this crop, which will not make the payments at present prices.

"I am not laying down on the payments or the crop on account of hard feeling toward you, but because I am unable to do otherwise. I know what condition you are in."

WRITERS TELL OF STRAITS

But letters like the last two are relatively few. Most of them read as do the following, written by men in various walks of life:

Real-estate man: "You know I am not an alarmist, but conditions are growing worse and there would be desperation now if it was not for the hope held out for relief. I seldom write, but I can see and feel a real uprising if the prices of farm and ranch products are not advanced. It looks as if many of our lawmakers want to continue 'fiddling while Rome burns,' [a phrase often used]."

Real-estate man: "The increase in our circulating medium is the greatest necessity for our recovery from the pitiable condition in which producers of every class find themselves at this time. We have all the minerals, farm products, raw material of every kind, and labor in abundance, but lack of necessary medium of exchange to make the country prosperous. I trust you will continue to battle for an adequate increase in the currency and banking system that does not take away from the local communities and place in the hands of giant institutions the control of the local banks."

Lawyer: "We feel that the only way that times can be helped is to put more money in circulation, and when that is done I am sure that the present condition will be much relieved. It seems as though we have everything else that we had in prosperous times except money, and the price of a dollar has been raised so much that the commodities the people have to sell and the property will have to be sacrificed to realize anything on them."

Banker: "Next in importance is the inflation of the currency. The importance of this is being strikingly manifested in different localities all over the country, where communities are issuing their own 'wooden money' and using it as a medium of barter and exchange. A continuation and an increase of foreclosures is going to lead to trouble, and it might become more serious than any of us would like to see. These farmers are not willingly going to give up their homes under these conditions."

BURDENS CALLED UNBEARABLE

Lawyer: "The people can not bear their burdens, and they will not bear them in peace. The American citizen is not going to work 365 days a year for many more years and give every dime of the proceeds of that labor to support his State and Federal Government, leaving nothing for himself and his family. I am writing this letter as a red-light signal to let you know there is danger ahead, and it is so close that it really makes me tremble. Any man in the United States at this time who will hold out for his own selfish motives and personal gain is the greatest traitor who lives in this country. This letter is written for the sake of America and American citizens, for the sake of my two children who come after me, and for the sake of common justice and right to mankind."

Small business man: "Our so-called banking system is a high-powered machine gun wherewith legalized robbers collect at regular intervals twice the value of their loans. Gold as money is almost as obsolete as wampum. Eggs, butter, clothing, steel, and a thousand other commodities lie useless because Eastern bankers are hoarding gold or its equivalent. Think of it—a people hungry and ill clad, surrounded by good things to eat and warm clothing to wear which they can not buy because some human parasites have been hiding gold. How long shall we trust our well-being to a commodity that's so scarce it rises in value every time some of it is taken out of circulation? You are right. 'If not reflation, then revolution.' I see no immediate relief for industry. If the farmers of this country can not be saved, God help America. Our money problem can only be solved by clear thinking; but if home owners lose their stake in America, it will be hard to convince hungry men that hot lead won't help."

Storekeeper: "It is imperative that politics be laid aside, that ability and judgment be used to solve the grave problems now confronting the American people. The uncertainty is creating unrest, making people lose faith in their representatives and in their Government. This should not be allowed to gain any momentum, for there is no telling where it will end, should a Hitler rise up and say, 'Let's go to Washington a million strong; make the rich divide with the starving poor.'"

INSTANCES OF DISTRESS

Here is the sort of thing which brings about letters such as the above:

Farmer: "My father came to Dakotas in 1873. In 1882 I homesteaded, married, and reared four children. We managed to give them all a good education. When the World War came on I was asked to buy Liberty bonds, which I did. I had no ready cash and so borrowed $2,500 and gave a mortgage on a half section of land. I paid 9 per cent interest and received only 4 per cent from my Government bonds. In 1922, after years of sacrifice and hard work, mother and I retired. We sold the homestead and built us a modern home. We had 800 acres of good farm land, 61 shares of stock in the State bank, and had a nice income each year.

"But in 1931 the crops were short and the prices low; in 1932 the prices were still lower. We were obliged to borrow $350 from the bank. I have been looking for a loan on the same half section that I mortgaged in 1917 and paid off in 1922. I have 800 acres of good North Dakota farm land, about $8,000 in bank stock, notes for about $2,500. My only indebtedness is the note for $350 above referred to. All of our property will have to be sold for taxes unless we get help."

Farmer: "Now, our original loan was $9,500, $500 of which was stock. We are behind on our interest and taxes approximately $1,600. But we have given them all the crop the last two years. In 1931 we raised nothing. In 1932 had fair crop. But no price since making this loan. Federal land bank just laughs at us when we mention the Federal aid given them last winter. Their agent in this district is ———, and his attitude is to hell with you and the Government. Is there no help for us? Must we in our old age see our property taken from us?"

GOVERNMENT AGENTS ASSAILED

Influential South Dakota farmer: "And the question was how to get rid of the burden of the feed and seed loans which farmers can not pay at these prices of farm products. And these Government agents or collectors that are located around different towns are watching the farmers so they can't sell a bushel of grain or a cow or hog unless they are there to take over the check. The farmer can get along without anything. Over the line in the next county a farmer sold a load of barley so as to get a little money so as not to starve and freeze to death for a little while. And they had him arrested, and he was poor and couldn't put up bonds, so they keep him in jail to serve his time until the proper time comes for his hearing.

"And one of my nearest neighbors took a truck load of cattle to Sioux Falls, and he did not have no seed loan, but he borrowed a little money from the Government so he could raise a bunch of hogs and feed his stuff through last spring. And when the cattle were sold the Government held the money for the whole truck load, and they only had mortgage on a little better than half the load, and the rest of them did not have no mortgage on, and this was a man who always paid his accounts in full.

"These agents must be instructed to watch the farmer worse than the devil watches the soul. The way the farmers are tied up they can not sell a bushel of grain or a cow, which is not worth much if they could spare it, to get hold of a dollar to get a plow lay sharpened or a bolt for the drag, or any other necessary expense to put in the next crop, without saying anything about food, fuel, and clothing, as people out in the cold Northwest, a lot of them, got to get along with very little clothing and slim feeding.

"It seems like the people are not going to stand for this situation much longer. It will not surprise me that revolution may break out at any time, which I hope will never happen."

WARNING OF "OMINOUS" SITUATION

President of a mortgage company: "Business is at a standstill; it is paralyzed. Revolt against government is occurring daily. Decrees of court are being physically opposed. Owners of equities do not propose to be divested of their farms even if they are compelled to resort to physical violence. The militia of this State will not fire to kill when called upon to suppress these disorders. This revolt is spreading like a prairie fire."

Business man: "The growling of the frantic taxpayer out here in the Middle West is becoming ominous. Heretofore there have been feeble protests against conditions, but they are rapidly assuming almost revolutionary proportions. Farmers, especially, faced with losing farms on which they have labored for a half century, are demanding a drastic reduction in taxes, not a mere shifting of the burden from one shoulder to the other. Foreclosure sales and deficiency judgment sales are being halted daily by threatening groups.

"One of the sore points is the terrific expenditures of the Veterans' Bureau, especially in the matter of hospitalization for injuries and disabilities not incurred in line of duty. Another is the inequality of pay for Government clerks, etc., when compared to the earnings of the average small-town man or woman.

"The present lame-duck session is the laughing stock of the country. And the horrors of inflated currency are being dinned in our ears by the daily press, although every one knows that some form of inflation will be necessary if this country ever hopes to pull through this crisis."

WEST "DRIVEN TO DESPERATION"

Minister: "The West has been driven to desperation and if the East does not awaken to the peril, the time may be near when the great agricultural States will be compelled to use means to relieve the situation without Congress. During the time of the war men deliberately inflated our currency and then they deflated it and left this immense debt on our hands without medium with which to meet obligations. I am a minister of the gospel, but know that all those who made money out of the blood of the young men who were killed during the war will have to give it up again, and the sooner they do it the safer it will be for them, for if this hatred that is being cultivated because of injustice is not righted, I fear that many of those men will lose their lives in the conflagration that is being kindled."

Minister: "We wonder if the East has any conception of what is going on here. Was in the office of the sheriff of this county to-day and heard the deputy sheriff speak of the manner of selling foreclosures. They do it by subterfuge. Representatives of the mortgage holders meet in the sheriff's office. They are not seen by the farmers nor any one else if it can be prevented. The deputy goes to the steps of the courthouse, mumbles awhile, then comes back and accepts, in his office, the bid of the representatives of the mortgage holder at such figure as may be offered, who then goes on his way, and a deficiency judgment is entered by the judge sitting. This procedure permits the mortgage holder to ask for a receiver, who takes charge during the redemption year, who can hold the crops, take the personal property, and so clean out the farmer of all he has."

"GENERAL UPRISING" REPORTED

Farmer: "The farmers and the townspeople are losing their homes by the hundreds, meetings are being held behind closed doors and the townspeople are joining the farmers in a general uprising. If this continues, this whole country will go down a mass of ruination and wreckage."

Banker: "A man drove out to a farm sale with the intention of buying farm equipment, as he is planning on starting farming this spring. When an article was sold he placed a bid, but was immediately tapped on the shoulder and told not to place any bid. He thought they were bluffing, and the auctioneer called for bids, but he raised the bid that was already placed and he does not know what hit him, but he was laid out cold and needed the doctor's care. Shall these lawless parties go unmolested by our law or what course should be pursued? People are desperate these days; they say Congress talks beer while people are more interested in their homes and enough to eat."

Lawyer: "An insurance man came out here a while ago to sell a farm. He went out and looked over the stock and equipment and went into the barn. Hanging from a beam there was a rope with a noose in it. He said, 'What's that for?' They told him that it would probably be used later and he left in a hurry. Later his lawyer, who was to have met him there, came out, and he was shown the noose and told that the sale would take place right away and he would act as clerk. So he did, and the sale was made for $60, and then he was told to go home, that the sale was over, and not to come back."

"PENNY SALES" DESCRIBED

State legislator: "I told you in my other letter that there were symptoms of an uprising among the farmers. You are probably aware of the fact that not only in Iowa but in all parts of Nebraska the farmers are gathering in numbers where there are farm foreclosures and chattel mortgage sales, and they have been stopped. In the chattel mortgage sales if they weren't stopped, they didn't have but one bid on property put up. Cows selling for 10 cents a head, horses 50 and 75 cents a head, the property afterwards turned over to the family. I feel quite sure, with the temper of the people, that had they been resisted it would have been disastrous to the person insisting on going through with the sale."

Business man: "The plight of the farmers is growing worse and worse as time goes on. It is surely time that America takes some definite steps to save its agriculture from utter destruction. People are not always going to starve in a country where its producers are providing food in abundance and losing their homes and farms in the process, while 80 per cent of the national wealth finds its way into the hands of 4 per cent of the people. America should bow its head in shame in the face of such a situation. To say that America can not protect and foster its basic industry and feed its willing toilers is to abjectly confess the bankruptcy of American statesmanship and admit that democracy itself is a dismal failure. It is time to act. Agriculture has suffered miserably for 10 long years at the hands of its own Government. Largely from this cause this Nation is in perilous times. Things are going from bad to worse until the temperament of the people is becoming ominous."

These letters could be duplicated by the hundred. They are typical of what the farming communities are now writing to the representatives in Congress. There is almost no demand for a change in government, although some people question the present system—for the most part they believe that some method can be found through legislation to relieve distress and they are still hoping for positive action.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I desire to speak briefly upon the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] at this time.

I think the Senator from North Dakota is not entirely familiar with our systems of training in the United States. The part of the bill he is seeking to strike out pertains to civilian training, the most desirable kind of training in our country. It is the most historic training. It was the riflemen of Lexington who opened the Revolutionary War in a vigorous contest with the regular-trained English soldiers. It was the riflemen of Morgan who defeated Tarleton and the riflemen of other generals who made the resistance to the English Army effective later on in the Revolutionary War.

Coming on down to the War of 1812, it was the riflemen of Andrew Jackson at New Orleans who drove back the conquerors of Napoleon. In the Mexican War the same story was repeated, and in the Civil War the most effective military training was that of the riflemen, the squirrel shooters, as it were.

Then a new idea came into the minds of those in control of the Regular Army of the United States, came into the minds of the General Staff, and took possession of the War College. It was found in the firing school at Fort Sill, in the military school at Fort Leavenworth, the strangest of all ideas, and it was about like the idea of the Senator from North Dakota for striking out this amendment. That idea was that a poor shot gets more hits in battle than a good one.

Mr. President, it may seem incredible to the ordinary mind that the highest military authorities in our country would ever conceive such an idea, and then that they would systematically teach it in all the Army schools; but such was the case for a whole generation.

When I came to train my company of the Spanish-American War, I was issued 30 rounds of ammunition per man to train that company. At that time I knew nothing particularly about rifle training. I had only had the experience of the ordinary farmer boy in shooting rabbits and squirrels and things of that kind. But instinctively I knew that you could not train a man to defend his life with 30 rounds of ammunition.

In addition to that those rounds of ammunition had to be fired under these peculiar conditions. A man stood up and fired 10 rounds at a target 200 yards away. The possible score would be 50. If he made 34 out of the 50, he was permitted to move back to 300 yards, and there he would kneel and fire 10 rounds more at the same target. If he made a score of 32, he was then permitted to move back to 500 yards, and in a prone position fire 10 shots on a larger target. Then his training was complete. If at the 200-yard stage the man made a score of only 33, instead of 34, his training was completed at that point. In other words, the poorer he was, the less training he got. Likewise he was halted at the 300-yard point if he made only 31 instead of 32.

Mr. President, that idea prevailed in the Regular Army, never in the National Guard, never in the civilian rifle clubs, never among those who knew anything about shooting a rifle, but it did prevail with the biggest generals of the Army, and was in the textbooks. I myself helped to get it out of some of them, in part at least, although it is not yet entirely removed.

Mr. President, that idea prevailed right up into the World War, and it was on the 21st of October, 1917, after we had been nearly six months in the war, that General Pershing found out that that theory was not working in battle. He had been over in France nearly six months before he learned it. He sent a cablegram, then, demanding that some attention be given to marksmanship training.

Later, on an amendment I propose to offer myself after the pending amendment is disposed of, I shall discuss matters as they occurred during the World War. I want now to review these items in this bill, all of which are very meager and very inadequate, all of which have been in the bills for many years, and all of which are for civilian training.

I think the principal reason why the theorists of the General Staff evolved that other theory of marksmanship was this—that marksmanship training is an individual matter, and if one becomes efficient and expert in marksmanship he does not do it under orders. The military idea is to do everything under orders, and even in their training to-day, as far as possible, they keep every act and every movement of the man they are training under orders.

The civilian idea of marksmanship is to teach and train the man to do it himself so that he will be independent and able to take care of himself under all conditions, and I think that was the fundamental dividing line in this matter of training. Therefore marksmanship was dropped out of the Army practically for a whole generation, and it came back only during the World War after a year's experience. We had been 13 months and over in the war before the first efficient school was established in the Army for the training of instructors in marksmanship. I want to say that outside of the Marine Corps, which never held to that idea, and which has really efficient training, we sent but few troops to France who were adequately trained in marksmanship.

Mr. President, we often hear that our losses in the World War were due to unpreparedness. There is no more offensive part of that unpreparedness than this false theory of the Regular Army itself, and of the General Staff of the Regular Army, in reference to marksmanship. I think I can say, and I think I can take the details and convince any reasonable man, that two-thirds, perhaps three-fourths of the losses in the Battle of the Argonne could have been avoided by proper training in rifle marksmanship. The marksmanship of the Artillery was better, the marksmanship of the machine gunners even was better, but the old theory sent millions of our men to France, many of whom did not even know how to load a rifle, let alone shoot it. Our school started, as I said, after we had been 13 months in the war, and it trained 7,000 instructors for all the divisions of the Army, but the war was over before they could get into efficient action.

When the school was discontinued at Camp Perry, about the latter part of September, I myself went out to the Nineteenth Regular Division to train them in marksmanship and was with them about 30 days. There were in that division two of the oldest Regular regiments in the United States, the Second Infantry and the Fourteenth Infantry, and they needed the training as much as any troops I found during the war, and I had been special instructor of a National Army division and of a National Guard division, in addition to being chief instructor of the Camp Perry school and the Camp Benning school.

Mr. President, what does the Senator from North Dakota propose to do by this amendment? At the present time our farmers, the common people of our country, have little opportunity to learn rifle marksmanship. There is not a spot in the State of Iowa where one can fire a high-power rifle without danger of killing somebody, unless there is a prepared rifle range, a military range, as it were, and I doubt whether there are many of them even in North Dakota. So our people are getting away from their traditions, because the opportunity for learning marksmanship has been taken away from them.

Therefore, I strongly oppose striking out the meager amount for training civilians in marksmanship. Here is the District of Columbia. Of course, the Government should pay that expense. That is like a State controlling its National Guard or militia. Then we get $31,465 for the director of civilian marksmanship office. He is the contact officer for the civilian rifle clubs all over the country and encourages them in every way he can and in some way keeps up the tradition of American marksmanship. There is provided altogether $125,000, reduced by the Senate committee from $150,000, for the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, and so on, in connection with the encouragement of rifle practice. That is a small amount. It is a trifling amount, in fact, for the whole United States. It is only keeping the American tradition alive in a small way in a few communities, but it is spread out into all the States of the Union. It is national in its scope.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] has proposed to strike out these items. I am quite sure he would criticize the vagaries of professional militarism as I would, and I think I criticize them quite as severely as he does; but I do it somewhat with a technical knowledge of the way in which they should be criticized.

I think there is something radically wrong about the leadership of the American Army. The present Chief of Staff has more common sense than most Chiefs of Staff we have had, but the Army still has a lot of vagaries that need to be corrected. Army officers go to the War College and to other schools and for 20 years they plan imaginary wars and fight imaginary battles. Senators who are lawyers, let me call your attention to this situation. Suppose you should go to school for 20 years and would practice law in a moot court before imaginary judges with imaginary cases, what kind of lawyers would you be at the end of that practice? There is very much of professional militarism that is in the same condition of mind as a lawyer would be if trained in that way. It needs to be tempered and changed and modified by civilian training. It was the civilian soldier who won the World War.

There were 17 National Guard divisions, civilian soldiers, who all got ready and went over. I trained one National Guard division in marksmanship. I am fully convinced that if they had not been handicapped by some of the vagaries of military training, they could have prepared themselves and been ready in half the time they did get ready and would have been better prepared.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BROOKHART. I desire my other time on another amendment later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BROOKHART. I desire my other time on another amendment later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, in sending my other amendment to the desk I overlooked the fact that part of the money should be immediately available, because it will be four months before the bill will become effective. I therefore offer the following amendment: After the numerals "$22,000,000" in the amendment previously agreed to insert in parenthesis the following: "(Of which $5,000,000 shall be immediately available.)"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the amendment be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 61, after line 6, insert:

NATIONAL BOARD FOR PROMOTION OF RIFLE PRACTICE, ARMY NATIONAL MATCHES

For the national matches and other competitions and the Small Arms Firing School, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved May 29, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. III, title 32, secs. 181a, 181b), $450,000.

Mr. BROOKHART obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BROOKHART. Certainly.

Mr. REED. This would institute a new item of appropriation in the bill. It is clearly in violation of Rule XVI. I feel that I shall have to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, the point of order is debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator address himself to the point of order?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes. There is an existing law mandatory in its nature directing that these matches be held annually. I have a copy of the law here. The appropriation is to carry out that law. Under Rule XVI the amendment is in order. If the Senator from Pennsylvania has any doubt about it I will show him the law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. REED. The language of the rule is to "add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session."

If the words "previously passed" apply to the nouns that precede, then it must be an existing law passed by the Senate at this session. I am not sure that that construction has ever been adopted, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa is designed to carry out the provision of existing law, namely, a statute approved May 29, 1928.

Mr. REED. I am inclined to think it does not violate that part of Rule XVI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is therefore of the opinion that the point of order made by the Senator from Pennsylvania must be overruled. The Senator from Iowa is recognized in connection with the amendment.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I think the national rifle matches constituted the most important item of military training in the United States before the World War, as they have since that time. I have already given some description of the situation up to the time of the World War. At the beginning of the World War the riflemen of the National Guard were all left at home. Not one of us was ordered into the service. In fact, in the service down on the Mexican border in 1916 our commissions were canceled and we were sent home after a short period of service. Congress restored those commissions. When the war broke out the General Staff of the Army still had its prerogative to exercise, and did not order us into the service. For 15 years I had been fighting, as a member of the national board and otherwise, for the national matches and for adequate marksmanship training in the Army and in the National Guard. The last big fight before the war was before Secretary of War Garrison, with General Mills, who was then head of the Militia Bureau. After an all-day discussion, Secretary Garrison decided the matter on every point in favor of the national matches and of marksmanship training.

A little while after that Secretary Garrison resigned and Newton D. Baker became Secretary of War. When he became Secretary of War a memorandum was sent over to him by various officers of the General Staff and War College, in which they said the thing that most needed the attention of the new Secretary was a reorganization of the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice. That was the board that had charge of the national matches. They pointed out that Congress had increased the appropriation up to $300,000, and that it needed big, broad-minded men to administer the fund. They suggested the men. They suggested the officers who had fought against the appropriation and left off all of us who had fought for and obtained the appropriation from the Congress of the United States. The result was that Secretary Baker removed all of us from the board and put the other crowd on the board.

Then the war came on. We were not ordered into the service, as I have already said. The United States entered the war on the 6th of April. It was on the 21st of October that General Pershing cabled demanding attention to marksmanship. He did not stop with one cablegram. He sent another one the next week, and then every week. There had been a constant fight over the contention that it is the poor shot who gets more hits in battle than the good one, aggravated by the fact that I had condemned 3,000 rifles that had been worn out in the Regular Army in cleaning, not in shooting, but they had been rubbed out by abrasives in cleaning for inspection purposes. Under the rule of the Army the rifle must be so clean that the white glove of the inspecting officer may be rubbed over it without showing any dirt on the glove. Of course, the real rifleman likes to find rifle grease on his gun, because that means the preservation and proper care of the rifle. But the military system of the regular service wants all the grease removed. I had condemned 3,000 of those rifles. They would not hold on a target at 300 yards. They would shine all right; they were beautiful inside. General Crozier came down to the border to see about the condemnation, but they stood condemned when the tests were made. They were not serviceable because they had been rendered absolutely useless.

But all of that put me in bad and I headed the black list in the Ordnance Department. I was not ordered into the service at the beginning of the war. Finally, the Chief of the Militia Bureau was changed and an old rifleman, Col. Ira L. Reeves, a regular, became assistant chief of the bureau. He found this black list. That is how I know it was not a theoretical black list. It was an actual black list. My name had the honor place at the head of it. As soon as he found that, he wrote an order calling me into the service and included a couple of other officers so as to camouflage it somewhat, and then submitted it as an emergency matter to the Assistant Chief of Ordnance. He waited until the chief was out of the city. The assistant signed the order directing me to report for service. Colonel Reeves did not report that to the personnel section, and the first the personnel section knew of it was when I reported. Even after that General McLean, then Adjutant General of the Army, tried to interfere and stop me from coming into the service. The Judge Advocate General ruled against that procedure, and I was in. After I was in, it was harder to put me out than it was to keep me from coming in.

I was first sent to the Winchester plant to study the new rifle, a folly on the part of somebody which led to our adopting the Enfield English rifle, which we copied in part and brought over here. It was not as good a rifle all through as our Springfield rifle. Then I was sent out to join the Eighty-eighth National Army Division to train them in marksmanship. I only had 30 days in which to train them with a complement of a thousand extra officers, and it was midwinter, being in January, 1918.

Then, under orders, I came back to Washington. A new Chief of Ordnance, General Wheeler, had assumed office in the meantime. He talked this matter over with me fully and gained a real understanding of the purpose of military rifle training. He then had me prepare and submit a report concerning my tour of duty with the Eighty-eighth Division. That was done, and he laid the report on the desk of Secretary Baker, who ordered me to report to him. He had removed me from the national board a year or so before, and I did not know what to expect from him, but I was ready for the interview anyway, and went to his office. He started in very nicely, and asked why this marksmanship training was so inefficient in the Army. General Pershing was sending cablegrams every week about it. I told him of the old theory which was taught in the Army schools—that a poor shot got more hits in battle than a good one, and I explained how they proved it, and all that. He then began asking me about the generals. They were the same generals who had blacklisted me, and so I did not hesitate to give my opinion of them. Well, one of them four days later was removed and sent to Panama where he enforced the prohibition law and was a very good officer down there. Within 10 days the Secretary of War removed a second one from the position of chief of the War College and sent him out to command the Western Department at San Francisco. Nobody reported to the Western Department, and the department commander there had nothing to do but to keep his feet on the desk. In a couple of weeks more the Secretary of War removed another general from the national board and put me back on it. That is the way I got out of that mess.

Then, Mr. President, the Secretary of War asked me to suggest a plan for training the Army in rifle shooting. I told him we had been then in the war for nearly a year; that the training ought to have started the first day of the war but at that late date there was only one feasible plan, and that was to establish a central school somewhere and to send there details of officers, the higher their rank the better, who should be trained as instructors for all the Army divisions. I asked him to send for Colonel Mumma, of the Regular Army, a famous rifleman, who was then on the General Staff, whose offices were right across the hall from his office. I told him he would get very much the same set of facts from Colonel Mumma that he had obtained from me but in different language, because Colonel Mumma was disciplined, while I was not. While referring to certain generals, I had mentioned the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, and the Secretary then seemed in a way to remember something about it. He asked me, "Are you on the national board?" I said, "No, sir; one of the first things you did as Secretary of War was to remove me from the national board." He wanted to know how that happened. Then I told him. I said, "You have organized that board a second time in the last few days; you have good men. Colonel Reeves is on it now and also Colonel Mumma; some of those on the board are not right but the majority are all right, and I have no objection to the board." He was not satisfied with that explanation and wanted to know more about it. Then I told him how the War College and the Adjutant General's Office and other bureaus had sent these memoranda over to him as soon as he was appointed Secretary of War. He remembered that, and there was then a mad Secretary of War, because evidently those memoranda had concealed the real truth from the new Secretary of War.

I presume that is the reason why those generals were afterwards removed so suddenly. There was their own evidence that stood against them. So he asked me how we should train the Army. I told him we would have to establish a central school. He asked me where we would get the staff for such a school. I told him there were 50 or 100 riflemen who had been trained by participating in the national matches through all the years, the foremost riflemen and the greatest instructors in the world, who, like myself, had not been ordered into the service; and that we could make up the best training staff of riflemen the world ever knew without disturbing any organization that he had set up for the prosecution of the war. He then said, "I get your idea." Before being dismissed I asked him to send for Colonel Mumma. He did so; ordered the school to be established at Camp Perry, Ohio, and then went away to France.

Mr. President, after the issuance of that order the War College sent for me. I was then a very welcome guest there. Of course, the War College had some new leaders, and they were very well pleased to be the new leaders. So we prepared a memorandum for this school. We started it up through the General Staff. The system prevailed of requiring every order to go the rounds of all the various bureaus, and, if any one general disapproved, that killed the order. It got up to General Graves, who subsequently commanded the American Army in Russia. I may digress to say that I hope all Senators who have not done so will read the book on Russia written by General Graves; it is a magnificent book and tells the whole truth. General Graves did not know what the order was all about; so he marked it "disapproved." However, the Assistant Secretary of War had been ordered to establish this school, and he sent for General Graves and told him that the Secretary of War had ordered that the school be established. All General Graves wanted then was a little change in some administrative features of the school. So we took the order back to the War College, revamped it to suit General Graves, and started it through the mill again.

General March had just returned to Washington to be Chief of Staff, and, as the newspapers said, he was the selection of General Pershing. General Pershing sent a cablegram every week requesting that something be done regarding training in marksmanship. So we expected no opposition from General March. But, Mr. President, after the memorandum had been clear through the various offices of the General Staff I saw it marked "Disapproved, Peyton C. March, major general, Chief of Staff." That was just before his promotion to general. Mr. Crowell, Assistant Secretary of War, then sent for General March and told him that the establishment of the school was one of the things that was to happen in the course of human events. General March then erased the word "disapproved" and marked the order "approved." The school was then established. Mr. President, it was on the 10th day of May, 1918, after we had been in the war for over 13 months that this school was opened. When it was opened it had a class of 1,100 officers from all the divisions of the Army who were to be trained as instructors of marksmanship in the Army.

Outside the Marine Corps—the Marine Corps are well trained in marksmanship—the only efficient training the Army got in marksmanship came from the officers who had learned the whole theory and system of marksmanship training in the national matches.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BROOKHART. Has my whole 30 minutes expired?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator on the amendment only has expired. The Senator may now have 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BROOKHART. That is what I thought.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized for 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, after this school was established and began training 1,100 officers a month it became the most popular school of the Army; in fact, General March gave out some statement expressing great approval of the establishment of this school. When the fall came, it was decided to send us South during the winter so that we could work all winter. There was an intermission of about a month, when I went out with the Nineteenth Regular Division, of which I have spoken. Then I was ordered to Camp Bennings, Ga., to establish the new firing school there. That was just a few days before the armistice was signed.

Mr. President, the national matches broke down the old theory of the Regular Army; they changed the whole system. When I reached Bennings the commandant of that school was the author of the book on the Rifle in War, that had taught the theory that the poor shot gets more hits in battle than the good one. He entirely reversed his position. I never had an argument with him while I was down there, and we went ahead with the marksmanship training at Bennings very much as it had been carried on at Camp Perry. I may say, however, that since then a good many of the things that make for efficiency in marksmanship training have been eliminated from the training.

Following the war there was no trouble about providing for the matches until last year; but the General Staff is still not favorable to the national matches, because it reaches out into civilian training, and they want the training to be solely professional; they do not want a civilian really to know that he can become an efficient marksman. The Congress, however, has always stood by the national matches. Last year there was nothing said about them, and the item was cut out, under the promise that it would be restored this year; but this year it is again left out. So I have offered this amendment to restore the item so that the national matches may be continued. Under the economy rule that has been followed, I have reduced the amount 10 per cent and ask only for $450,000 instead of $500,000. I think it is the best spent of any of the money used for military training; it is real American training; it is worth the money in every particular, and I think it will hold its place in the future as well as it has in the past.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I can not agree with my good friend from Iowa. The $450,000 which he proposes to put into this bill for national rifle matches might better be used, in my opinion, to pay off forty-five $10,000 mortgages for farmers and home owners out in his State, and there are many more than that who need their mortgages paid off.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. If the Senator will secure an amendment making such provision as he suggests, I will agree to it.

Mr. FRAZIER. I will vote for it; but I can not, I am afraid, secure such an amendment. There would be objection to an amendment of that kind, but I think such an amendment should be made.

Mr. President, I wanted to state that several times when the Army appropriation bill has been before the Senate I have offered an amendment to prohibit the use of any of the funds for compulsory military training in land-grant colleges. I do not intend to offer such an amendment this year, as I feel it would be futile; but I do wish to call attention to an incident that occurred at the University of Maryland last fall. A young man entered that university but refused to take military training on the ground that, from religious principles, he was opposed to war and military training. The authorities at the university, after considering his refusal, expelled him, or would not allow him to continue his classes. He went into court, and a few days ago the court held that the authorities of the University of Maryland had no right to bar the young man from attending the university because he refused to take military drill on the ground of religious conviction. I understand the case has been appealed to the Supreme Court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that if and when this bill shall pass it may be printed with the amendments of the Senate numbered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SCHUYLER. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment very simple in character but in the interest of justice.

I direct the attention of the Senate to page 11, lines 16 to 19, by which it is provided—

> That no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the pay and allowance of any commissioned officer convicted of felony and which conviction has been confirmed by an appellate court.

I seek to strike out line 19 and insert the words "has been finally confirmed."

It will be realized upon a moment's reflection that an officer who has been convicted, and whose conviction has been affirmed by an appellate court, yet has open to him under the law certain other appellate procedure by way, first, of petition for rehearing in the appellate court which has affirmed the conviction, and beyond that, an appeal for writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court, the court of last resort.

It does not seem consonant with justice that an officer who has been faithful as a military officer, but has been convicted of some felony, should be deprived of his pay midway in the battle for his vindication.

I feel that my amendment clarifies the intention of the proviso; and I sincerely trust that the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senate will find the amendment acceptable.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator?

Mr. SCHUYLER. I shall be pleased to receive it.

Mr. REED. It seems to me the language in lines 18 and 19 is not very lawyerlike. Conviction is never the subject of an appeal. It is the sentence which is appealed.

Mr. SCHUYLER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. REED. The action of the appellate court does not confirm a sentence. It affirms it.

Mr. SCHUYLER. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator be willing to change that language?

Mr. SCHUYLER. Yes, indeed—"and which sentence has been finally affirmed." I welcome that suggestion, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 48, line 15, after the word "Guard," insert the following: "or Organized Reserves."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not think the amendment is necessary, because the Senator will find at the bottom of page 52, line 23, that there is exactly the same provision there for the Organized Reserves.

Mr. CLARK. I had overlooked that, Mr. President. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION—REPEAL OF PROHIBITION

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Senate Joint Resolution 211, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McNARY and Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I hope it is not the intention of the able Senator from Wisconsin to press his motion to-night. I should like to have a recess taken now, and have the motion pending in the morning. I think that will be satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. The request of the Senator from Oregon is agreeable to me.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 14, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Spirit Divine, Thou dost prefer before all temples a pure and an upright heart. Instruct us, for Thou knowest; illuminate us, that Thy ways to the world may be justified. Thou hast provided for us One who stands for us in the moral gap of sin. With all our hearts may we love and know Him; bless us with the peace of a perfect trust. Thy Holy Word is with us: "A man shall be as a hiding place from the tempest and a refuge from the storm; as rivers of water in a dry place and as a shadow of a great rock in a weary land." O God, in this hour especially, make our lives strong, helpful, and beneficent; how this old earth is mourning for such. Arouse us with unflinching powers and influences that shall deliver our country out of the valley of distress and revive an emancipating hope and faith everywhere. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 11, 1933, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7716) entitled "An act to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. COUZENS, Mr. WATSON, Mr. FESS, Mr. SMITH, and Mr. DILL to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 4339. An act repealing certain provisions of the act of June 21, 1906, as amended, relating to the sale and encumbrance of lands of Kickapoo and affiliated Indians of Oklahoma.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2148) entitled "An act for the relief of Clarence R. Killion," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. REED, Mr. CUTTING, and Mr. FLETCHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EQUALIZATION OF TARIFF DUTIES

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8557) to equalize tariff duties by compensating for depreciation in foreign currencies, on the calendar of motions to discharge committees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] for 10 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a vote for or against the consideration of legislation which has for its purpose the protection of American markets from invasion and destruction by floods of importations from foreign countries whose currencies have depreciated.

This is a vote that should not be approached from a party standpoint but from a truly American standpoint, as it provides simply for consideration of legislation to protect American industry, American workers employed therein, and the products of the American farms from unfair foreign competition. A vote for the motion really is a vote for America and American products first and foreign nations and foreign products second. Every country has an inherent and prior right to its home markets. We should defend those markets and hold them for our own nationals as a matter of right, just as we would defend our soil against the invasion of an enemy alien army.

I particularly call upon the progressive Republicans who, with me in 1923, supported the discharge rule and claimed we had won a great victory when it was incorporated in the rules of the House.

I call upon the Democratic progressives and the Republican progressives to join with us to-day and vote for this motion in order to bring before the House for consideration this important legislation which has been chloroformed in committee and grant the opportunity desired by 145 Members who signed the discharge petition. Let your actions confirm your promises.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I am one of those who voted against the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill. I did so for the reason that although I am a firm believer in a protective tariff I feared the consequences of retaliatory tariffs; however, the question before us to-day is whether or not we are to consider the great influx of goods which are coming into this country by reason of the depreciated currency abroad.

If it is true that the great portion of these goods are crippling our manufacturers by the sale of merchandise far below the cost of production, then the present tariff is not even a competitive tariff, so far as such goods are concerned.

It ought to at least be carefully considered on the floor of this House. I am one who wishes to hear the arguments on both sides with an open mind. Ten minutes' debate on each side is a joke. Bring the Crowther bill on the floor, subject to amendments, produce the proper statistics, grant plenty of time for debate, and let us consider the matter in the way that all important measures should be considered in this Congress.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, as we have only one speech on this side.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I have 10 minutes, and I have promised to yield 5 minutes of the time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]. I now yield myself two minutes.

Mr. Speaker, of course, in this limited time it is impossible to go into a discussion of the merits of this question. I may simply say that I shall not make the charge that the Hawley-Smoot bill is responsible for the depression we are in, but I do make the charge, without fear of successful contradiction, that the prohibitive rates in the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill have done more to aggravate and continue this depression than any other one thing. Furthermore, it was an active issue in the last campaign, and the American people have repudiated it.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I can not yield in two minutes, and the gentleman should not expect me to.

I may say in regard to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] we were engaged in hearings on the Hill bill, which is similar to his bill, and we had the experts from the Tariff Commission, as well as other men of national prominence, waiting to be heard when this bill was taken from the committee by the rule to discharge; and I may say further that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] has never asked the chairman or, as far as I can learn, any other member of the committee for a hearing on his bill. The first intimation I had that the gentleman from New York had a bill was when the gentleman from Wisconsin brought in a motion to discharge.

The chief economist of the Tariff Commission, who is also a great political economist——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman knows I can not yield in two minutes for a legal discussion from my good friend from Illinois.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself one-half minute more.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman will not permit.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We had hearings on the Crowther bill before the committee in May of last year.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself one-half minute more.

Mr. Durand, the chief economist of the Tariff Commission, said that the Crowther bill was an embargo against all the world.

Every man who votes for this motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin is not only voting to indorse the Hawley-Smoot Act, but is indorsing it with an increase of anywhere from 25 to 50 per cent and as much as 800 per cent against some countries, and, according to the chief economist of the Tariff Commission is also voting for a bill which is an embargo against the world.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H. R. 8557, introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] has for its title, "To equalize tariff duties by compensating for depreciation in foreign countries."

Strictly speaking, this is not a vote on the measure itself, but is upon a motion to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from its consideration and place it upon immediate passage. The motion involved is an extraordinary one. Some may say that they are opposed to discharging the committee under the admitted facts that it has in no sense been recreant of its duties toward this legislation. In the last session hearings were had upon the identical bill before the whole committee. With the party lines broken, the committee voted against reporting it out 16 to 9. Last spring, before the election, when this measure was considered on its merits, three of the Republican members voted against reporting it from the committee, one of whom was the distinguished gentleman who just made his interrogation, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM]. [Applause.]

However, it is not necessary to hide behind the parliamentary situation in opposing this motion. The bill is a vicious one and actually defeats, in many instances, the laudable purpose claimed for it by its sponsors. As a matter of fact, it is simply a political gesture out of which our Republican friends hope to secure some solace.

We direct our attention to the bill itself and the result that would flow from it if it were enacted into law:

First. Propaganda claims that the country is flooded with importations from the depreciated-currency countries. This is conclusively refuted in the fact that imports into this country for the first 11 months of 1932 were less than the imports for a similar period in 1931. The official figures are as follows: $1,424,473,000 for 1932, and $2,199,611,000 for 1931. Dutiable imports for 1932, $466,192,000, as against $743,280,000 for like period in 1931.

The official figures from the Tariff Commission show that there was a decrease for this period in 1932, over like period in 1931, of 33 per cent in value and 20 per cent in volume.

Further, it is unquestioned that the exports from this country to the depreciated-currency countries in each particular instance, exceeds the imports from those countries during the past year. Another statement might be significant—the value of all our dutiable imports for 1932 are slightly over $500,000,000. The value of all imports for the year 1929 is $4,399,361,000. The proponents of this bill are in a ridiculous position when they say that this country is being flooded with imports when a few short months ago they were proclaiming that the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was protecting American farmers, and laborers, and industry from this very evil. Then, the value of all imports for the last year is one-third of the imports of 1929, the last year before the Smoot-Hawley tariff.

Second. This bill creates a tariff upon every article imported from a country that has depreciated its currency. When the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was written, the articles placed upon the free list certainly were articles that should have been placed thereon. Now, without rhyme or reason, without an effort for matured deliberation, the proponents of this measure would place every such article on the dutiable list.

As a matter of fact, many of the larger articles concerning which most propaganda has been concerned are articles on the free list. Newspaper print and wood pulp have been on the free list for many, many years. This measure would automatically put a tariff of different proportions upon this commodity, as well as others now on the free list.

Third. The date fixed in the bill for determining when the depreciation of currency occurred is October 1, 1931. Many nations had depreciated their currency prior to that time. France, who cut the franc 80 per cent in value, yet remained on the gold standard, would not be affected by this measure. Without doubt, France, the defaulter, would be given marked preference over our neighbor Canada, and our kinsman, Great Britain, who met the promised payment on her debt.

Fourth. Upon Saturday, the distinguished leader of the minority, Mr. SNELL, in colloquy with me, had this to say relative to the Crowther bill:

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman realize that the nations who depreciated their currency prior to the date fixed, whether it be October 1, 1931, or some date in 1932, will have an advantage over those countries that have depreciated their currency subsequent to the date fixed in the bill.

Mr. SNELL. I want to use them all alike, I want to use them exactly the same. I want to see to it, in other words, that imports coming from those countries at the present time shall come in under what is practically American valuation.

This measure does not "use them all alike" or "use them exactly the same"; it does not substantially give similar treatment, nor does it permit imports from the countries affected to "come in under what is practically American valuation." The things that the distinguished gentlemen from New York wants can not take place under this scheme. There would be manifold discriminations. American valuation would not be involved. The language of the bill excludes that. The different nations have depreciated their currency at different times, in different amounts, and with different rates. Japan, for instance, has depreciated her yen 50 per cent; England depreciated her pound practically 25 per cent; France depreciated her franc 80 per cent before the date set forth in the bill, and as stated, is now on a gold basis. Any increase in the rate of any commodity shipped by these three countries would penalize England and Japan and benefit France—all without benefit accruing to American industry or the American people. France would get the benefit of the market which would be taken from the less-favored nations.

Mr. SNELL again said, as late as last Saturday, on the floor:

I would like to change a lot of things in the bill myself and I am not going to get in an argument about the details of the bill.

My friends, it is striking indeed that no argument was made by the gentleman from New York in favor of this particular bill. This is the bill to be considered. The proponents talk in pleasing generalities. In my opinion they have no hope of its consideration and are merely making effort to secure some supposed political advantage in the situation.

For instance, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] made a very sincere speech on the floor of the House last Saturday. He was lamenting the tragedy of our industrial communities. Most of his discussion dealt with the importation of Belgian skelp, which is fabricated into steel pipe. He charged that after it was so fabricated, it was sold on the American market in competition with the products of our own steel industry. Then, he referred to the fact that steel bars, tin, and pig iron were being imported into the country from foreign lands. Then he asked the gentleman from Arkansas how he could stand for and justify the importation of such products into our country, which is taking business and work from our American industry and American labor.

Now, I would not be harsh with the gentleman from Ohio, because he is a very distinguished and capable Member of this House, and I can join with him in my desire to see American labor and American industry fairly protected in the onslaught on it from other lands. But the gentleman need not worry about the effect of Belgian skelp imported into this country. In fact, there is such a small amount of it that we have been unable in the limited time to segregate it from other imported articles. However, the Tariff Commission gives us the information that all of the boiler and plate and skelp, together with all other articles described in paragraph 307 of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, aggregated 752 tons in the year 1931, with a valuation of $32,306; that the same imports for 1932 totaled 409 tons, with a value of $9,088. There is some skelp that was imported under paragraph 308 of the Smoot-Hawley Act, together with other steel products. In 1931 all of the articles in paragraph 308 totaled 10,827 tons, or a valuation of $416,147. In 1932 all of these commodities, including skelp, aggregated 3,931 tons, with a value of $100,681. The Tariff Commission gives us the information that very little skelp is imported into this country. It is plain to see that the total tonnage and the total values are infinitesimal as compared to the total steel production. And if by any stretch of the imagination any effect is felt from their importation, there has been a decrease of 45 per cent in the tonnage of imports under paragraph 307 in 1932 as compared to the preceding year, and a decrease of more than 70 per cent in the value of such imports for like period. With reference to the skelp contained in paragraph 308, supra, we see a reduction of practically 60 per cent in tonnage and almost 80 per cent in value for 1932 over 1931.

The same decrease, both in tonnage and value, which must mean decrease in competition with American products, is found with reference to steel bars. In 1931 steel bars had a value of not over 3½ cents per pound, showing a tonnage of 46,759 tons, valued at $1,009,223. In 1932 tonnage was reduced to 29,628 tons, with a value of $488,696. For steel bars valued at 3½ cents and more in 1931 tonnage was 3,259 tons, valued at $522,393. For 1932 this tonnage had reduced to 1,493 tons, with a value of $233,058. So by no stretch of the imagination can any condition of the steel industry or any unemployment connected with it come from the depreciated currency of foreign countries.

The quantity and value are clearly indicative that it could not be of material effect upon the steel industry of this country; but if it were, Belgian skelp would not be kept out of this country, nor tariff upon it increased, because Belgium is one of the nations that is on the gold standard and, consequently, is not affected by this bill. This situation obtains with relation to all steel products from Belgium, France, Germany, and other nations who have not depreciated their currency.

We have received a tremendous amount of propaganda relating to rubber shoes. The industry is at low ebb which is blamed on the depreciated currency of other nations. This competition comes from Japan and Czechoslovakia. The record shows that Japan has depreciated her currency while Czechoslovakia has not. Then, the Tariff Commission, just a few days ago, under the flexible provision of the tariff act, increased the tariff on the rubber goods imported from all nations, rather than attempt to set up tariff rates affecting separate nations and different conditions.

With the exception of wood pulp, upon which there is no tariff, and rubber shoes, upon which the Tariff Commission has acted, the imports of tuna fish have been used as a typical case of the effect of depreciated currency in foreign lands. To hear one side of the story, only one conclusion could be reached and that was the depreciation of Japan's yen has spelled the doom of the American canned-tuna-fish industry. But there are other conditions which have entered into and caused the loss of this business to American industry. The demand was created in this country for white tuna fish; our industry purchased it in bulk from Japan; it was shipped here in frozen state and canned by American labor and sold by American industry. Now, here is what happened. Japan is canning her own tuna fish; she is shipping the product that the American people want—the white tuna—in cans. The American industry can not secure white tuna; the best they can do is to get the striped tuna in the Mexican waters and offer it in competition with the preferred article. So, it is apparent that the controlling reason for the disappearance of white tuna as an American product is due to the change in policy by Japan.

Under date of November 30, 1932, Mr. Dow, Commissioner of Customs, wrote the Secretary of Treasury a letter on the depreciated-currencies situation. Incorporated in said letter was a table showing "Comparison of value of imports from countries which have discontinued using the gold standard with those from countries remaining on the gold standard, January to August, 1931 to 1932." This letter was filed in the recent hearings as an exhibit appended to the testimony of Mr. Dow.

To my mind, this is a very descriptive picture of the import situation affecting gold-standard countries, countries off the gold standard, and the other nations of the world. I insert it herewith.

Comparison of value of imports from countries which have discontinued using the gold standard with those from countries remaining on the gold standard, January to August, 1931 and 1932

| | Total | Dutiable | Free |
|---|---|---|---|
| Actual value of imports taken as sample, January to August, 1931: | | | |
| 20 countries off gold standard | $661,036,708 | $145,522,167 | $515,514,541 |
| 11 countries on gold standard | 276,906,254 | 154,031,961 | 122,874,293 |
| Actual value of imports from remaining countries, including those imports from above 31 countries which were not taken as a sample | 510,346,278 | 194,237,918 | 316,108,360 |
| Total | 1,448,289,240 | 493,792,046 | 954,497,194 |
| Actual value of imports taken as sample, January to August, 1932: | | | |
| 20 countries off gold standard | 421,076,901 | 86,435,641 | 334,641,260 |
| 11 countries on gold standard | 182,506,842 | 95,834,442 | 86,672,400 |
| Actual value of imports from remaining countries, including those imports from above 31 countries which were not taken as a sample | 313,717,213 | 113,624,570 | 200,092,643 |
| Total | 917,300,956 | 295,894,653 | 621,406,303 |
| Percentage of decrease, January to August, 1931–32: | | | |
| 20 countries off gold standard | 36.3 | 40.6 | 35.1 |
| 11 countries on gold standard | 34.1 | 37.8 | 29.5 |
| Remaining countries | 38.5 | 41.5 | 36.7 |
| Total | 36.7 | 40.1 | 34.9 |

Summing up, we are thoroughly convinced that the proponents of this measure have utterly failed to make their case.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, this extraordinary procedure on a discharge petition in the closing hours of this Congress in an attempt to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from further consideration of H. R. 8557, the subject of which was being considered by a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means in the ordinary way, is, in my judgment, nothing more nor less than a dying effort on the part of the outgoing administration to embarrass the incoming administration.

If we adopt this discharge rule, you might as well abolish the standing committees of the House. This bill was being considered in the ordinary way. Now we only have 10 minutes to consider one of the most important matters that has or will come before this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, the contention before our subcommittee was to the effect that the imports from countries with a depreciated currency would deluge our country, whereas in 1932 the balance of trade was in our favor and our exports exceeded our imports by $192,000,000.

If this policy is adopted and carried out, the inevitable result will be the loss of our foreign trade. Not only that, but we will get the ill will of all countries by this narrow, selfish policy.

This proposed legislation is nothing more nor less than an embargo. Another thing, it will greatly cripple American industry, American agriculture, and American labor. It is a narrow and selfish policy. We have already lost much of the friendship of other countries by the iniquitous Smoot-Hawley bill, and we hardly have a friend left in the world.

In 1932 the falling off in imports from countries with depreciated currencies was 6 per cent greater than for those countries on the gold standard. This is one of the most important questions that ever came before Congress, and this is a merely partisan effort or a partisan attempt in the last hours of the Congress to play cheap politics.

Every time the tariff subject is considered or mentioned the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] goes into paroxysms. He favors an embargo against the importation of all goods from all countries.

If we are being flooded or overrun with imports from countries with depreciated currencies, as contended, then those same countries are being deluged or trampled under foot by the exportation of goods from our country.

What is behind this unusual move on the part of the minority in the House? Did those responsible for the petition to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from further consideration of H. R. 8557, the Crowther bill, entertain the slightest hope that legislation of this character could possibly be enacted into law during the present session of Congress? They did not. It is nothing more nor less than the dying effort, conceived in narrow partisanship, of a discredited Republican administration to embarrass the incoming Democratic administration.

I say this is an unusual procedure, because the minority Members of this body, carrying out the orders of one of their masters, held a conference and agreed upon this program even before the Committee on Ways and Means had begun hearings on this far-reaching proposition, a proposal that is fraught with the gravest consequences not only to many of our own industries but to our international trade as well. Such action is a reflection on the Committee on Ways and Means, which in good faith was preparing to consider the proposed legislation in an orderly way and give it the consideration that such an important question warrants.

Whether the discharge rule is a wise one or not does not enter into the present discussion, but I want to say and warn the House that if such a move as this succeeds, we are establishing a dangerous precedent and we might as well abolish the standing committees of the House and legislate hereafter by petition.

What must Doctor CROWTHER, author of the bill that has been made the vehicle to get this matter before the House, think of this reflection on his well-known embargoism? Is it possible that his colleagues on the Republican side of the House have lost confidence in this high priest of protection and were mistakenly afraid that the evidence brought out in the hearings on this question would cause him to see the light and the inevitable blighting effect such legislation would have on our export trade and international relations?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER]. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] was correct when he said that I voted against reporting out this bill (H. R. 8557) last year. At that time I believed, as many people believed, that the depreciated currencies in Europe would result, as usual, in a rise in prices and wages, so that there would be an equalization, ultimately, to compensate for the lower basis or standard of the circulating medium. However, that has not occurred, and there is no sign that it will occur, and I believe now that we should pass this legislation at once.

Mr. Speaker, in extending my remarks, let me add that one of the surprising developments of the present extended deviation from the gold standard of a large part of the civilized world is the continued maintenance of the same level of prices and wages that prevailed before this change occurred. That has resulted in a constantly growing advantage for sales in our markets to the producers of raw materials and the manufacturers of commodities in other countries whose costs of production were below ours even before their debased currencies gave them increased opportunities for successful competition with us. The danger of this competition is not lessened by comparatively diminished imports in some lines. The effect of those imports is to be measured, and has been vastly enlarged by the continued decrease of production and particularly of purchasing power in the United States. There are those who would counteract these effects by a debasement of our own currency. That would be a dangerous and ultimately ruinous stimulation, not a cure. Of course, a theoretical increase of prices, by a lowering of the standard—the American dollar—would not enhance values. It is like making a child believe that it is wealthier having 5 pennies than having only 1 nickel. Two 50-cent dollars are worth no more than one 100-cent dollar.

Mr. Speaker, instead of debasing our own currency, instead of competing with Europe in lowering our standard of value, let us maintain our higher standard, let us preserve our domestic American markets for our workers, our own farmers, our own producers, our own capital, and our own labor. Therein lies our salvation.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, if by any method we could have included a preferential rate in this bill for mohair from Angora goats and rice from Arkansas, we would have had more favorable consideration of this bill from the Democratic side of the House, because I know that the distinguished Speaker of this House is a protectionist at heart. Of course he could not say anything about it in the last campaign. He did not go out with the show-boat troupe for fear that he might rock the boat.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON] appears to be the spokesman for the opponents of this legislation. At least he acted in that capacity last Saturday. I have a very high regard for his intellectual attainments and legislative capability, but sometimes I fear, as I watch him in action, that he is misled and mistakes perspiration for inspiration. One wonders when he has time to think. My friend from Arkansas finds great solace and comfort in quoting the statements of Chairman O'Brien, of the Tariff Commission, against this policy. Even if the entire Democratic membership is so comforted it does not lessen the asininity of Mr. O'Brien's statements the fraction of a degree.

The gentleman from Arkansas says that we are placing a shroud on the poor old Republican Party. Oh, yes; the party is old, and just at present we are poor, but we are not yet ready for a shroud. There has been no count of 10 following the knockout blow in November last, and we are here ready to fight for the retention of the policy of a protective tariff as part of our national economic program. [Applause on Republican side.]

The theory advanced by the opponents of this bill is that American prices have been so reduced that an adjustment of tariff rates based on par value of foreign currencies would raise the rates to an unwarrantable degree. The Secretary of Commerce states that:

> In no instance has the increase in foreign wholesale prices, in terms of foreign currency, been sufficient to offset the effects or depreciation in exchange, even making allowances for the decline of United States prices.

The Hawley-Smoot rates were written as competitive rates. They never were highly protective, and under existing conditions they are not now even competitive. No scaling ladders are necessary to get over our tariff wall. Depreciated currencies have opened the gates wide, and as a reception committee in the receiving line you find the Democrats and the importers and the international bankers all saying, "Welcome, little stranger," to the freight liners that bring in the commodities that ought to be now made by our own people in our own factories in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Depreciated currencies have brought about a condition in this country that the Democrats do not dare to try to develop by keeping their promises of reducing tariff rates which they made in the last campaign.

The gentleman from Arkansas said the other day that the Democrats won the campaign on the tariff issue. They never won a campaign in this country directly on the tariff issue. It was won by capitalizing the misery of the unemployed, by promising a job to 10,000,000 unemployed after March 4, by promising to repeal the eighteenth amendment, by promising to bring back beer and light wines immediately, and not on the tariff issue. If the campaign had been fought out solely on the tariff issue, the Democrats never would have reached first base.

The distinguished leader on the Democratic side [Mr. RAINEY] said on the floor of this House on January 9, 1932:

> We do not want this country flooded with the products of cheap labor in other countries.

How will your action to-day square with that statement of his? My Democratic friends seem to have lost interest in American workmen. Any reference to the policy of protection to American industry and labor is studiously avoided in the Democratic platform. "A competitive tariff for revenue" is your declaration. "Avaunt protection! and quit our sight" is the entrance cue for the "new deal."

It is the same old Democratic Party, gentlemen, demagoguing its way through the pages of history, forever carrying water in a sieve, always rolling a stone uphill, always disappointed in its hopes, because it has not the integrity to be honest with itself nor the capacity to keep faith with the American people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the Committee on Ways and Means be discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8557?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 174, nays 212, answered "present" 2, not voting 39, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion by Mr. COLLIER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected was laid on the table.

EQUALIZATION OF TARIFF DUTIES—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this measure has to do with one of the most serious obstacles to world recovery. The abandonment of the world's common standard of value by some thiry-odd countries has brought a factor of uncertainty and instability into all international trade. But worse than that the depreciation of foreign currencies has cut us off from many profitable foreign markets for our raw materials and manufactures. As the gold exchange value of their currencies has declined, foreign prices translated into gold have declined and the profit of our export trade has been wiped out. In consequence, our exports have diminished and the unemployment situation in this country has grown steadily worse. There is no legislation that we can adopt which will remedy this curtailment of our foreign market.

But an even more disastrous consequence of the foreign currency situation has befallen us in our own markets, where products of foreign origin are enabled to be sold at greatly reduced prices, without reducing the profits of foreign competitors in terms of their local currencies. This situation, which is driving many American undertakings to the wall, and depriving hundreds of thousands of our people of their usual means of livelihood, can be remedied by such legislation as is proposed in the Crowther and Hill bills, and we shall be negligent of our trust as representatives of the American people, if we refuse to consider it.

There can be no question that in many lines of industry, every vestige of protection hitherto provided by the Congress has been more than offset by this plague of depreciating exchange. In Japan the currency has depreciated by nearly 60 per cent, in England by 30 per cent, in the Scandinavian countries by similar percentages. This means that whatever protective tariffs we have established have been rendered wholly ineffective, and that the products of these countries can be dumped in our market at prices reduced by a third or a half below their former level, and yet their sale yields the foreign producers the same profits as before.

I want to speak particularly of the fishing industry, of which I can speak from personal knowledge, as the majority of the people in the community where I live have for three centuries drawn their living from the sea. At first glance it may seem strange, but it is none the less true, that the fishermen of New England find themselves to-day in dire straits because of the falling value of the yen in Japan, the krone in Norway, and the pound in Great Britain.

The New England fishermen have been hard hit by this situation. It has made it possible for Japanese swordfish to be frozen and shipped across the Pacific, through the canal, and landed in Boston at far less than half the normal American market price. The Gloucester sword fishermen have thus been practically driven out of business by the fall of the Japanese yen. Similarly, boneless codfish packed in Japan is being sold throughout the Middle West at little more than half its cost of production in Gloucester. Despite a protective tariff, kippered herring from England is being sold in our own market at less than the Gloucester cost of production. Likewise sardines from Norway and Portugal are driving the Maine canneries to the wall. In a word, because of depreciated currency abroad, our fishing industry to-day is far worse off than it would be if we were operating under free trade under normal currency conditions. What is true of the fishing industry is true of many other of our New England industries, notably the manufacture of cutlery, rubber footwear, wood pulp, electric-light bulbs, and many of our textiles.

While we can not protect our export trade against the declining profit due to foreign depreciation, we can do something to protect our domestic market from abnormal competition due to this cause. The Hill bill and the Crowther bill point the way. They do not seek to increase tariff duties but to prevent these duties from being completely wiped out in a moment when our own people particularly need and are entitled to see them maintained. The element of time is of the highest importance. Every week that we delay sees American industries driven out of existence and American workmen forced into the ranks of the unemployed for the sole benefit of foreign competitors. The party that assumes the responsibility of delaying or estopping the consideration of these measures at this time must bear a heavy load of blame. For it evidences its willingness to sacrifice the people of the United States for the advantage of those of Great Britain and the countries of continental Europe and the Orient in one of the gravest periods of our history.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend remarks in the RECORD, I desire to offer a few observations on depreciated currency, and its effect on the tariff. There has recently been brought to my attention a statement by Mr. Fred H. Sexauer, president of the Dairyman's League Cooperative Association, relative to depreciated currency and the effect on butter prices in the United States, which appeared in the January edition of the Creamery Journal, part of which I quote as follows:

So long as England and other European countries remain on a monetary system wherein their money unit comparable to the American dollar is of lower gold value than that of the United States, butter can not attain a price much higher than 25 cents on the New York market. * * *

Just why the English monetary system, which at present values gold on a ratio of about 14 grains to $1, as against the United States 23.22 grains per dollar, should so affect butter prices in this country may not be evident to the casual observer. However, it was well illustrated just recently when it checked an upward movement of butter prices and broke the market. * * *

A situation existed that was promising for the dairy industry. Suddenly the upward movement was checked and prices broke. New Zealand butter, which had not been entering the United States, was suddenly able to jump the 14-cent tariff wall and come into competition with the domestic product. The New Zealand butter shipper, who had been selling in England at about 19 cents on the English money basis, equal to 12 cents on the United States gold basis, found it more profitable to ship to this country despite the tariff. * * *

In other words, because of the difference in quantity of gold between the present monetary systems of England and the United States, the country's dollar increases in value to about $1.47 when converted into English money. Thus New Zealand was able to sell butter on the Pacific coast at a price that paid the tariff, covered shipping, and left a larger profit than if the product had been shipped to England. * * *

This entry of New Zealand butter quickly broke the market for domestic butter. It is evident that so long as the gold value of England's money and that of the United States continue at the present wide difference butter prices can not advance here. Anytime such prices do increase the New Zealand product will again be attracted.

The letter of transmittal also has the following statement:

In order to bring agriculture back to a pre-war basis it will become necessary for us to do something to adjust the value of money. This article shows that even with a 14-cent tariff on butter, it is not working at the present time, because of the variation in valuation of money between the different countries. * * *

The depreciated currency of the 28 nations that have gone off the gold standard has had a most damaging effect on American industries. It has enabled the competitors to buy on the world market, paying for the commodities with depreciated currency of less than two-thirds the value of the United States currency based on gold. The foreign depreciated dollar, which at present values gold on a ratio of about 14 grains to $1, as against the United States 23.22 grains per dollar fine gold (25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine), has enabled the importer to exchange two American dollars for better than three depreciated dollars, and to buy three times as much butter than if payment of our standard dollar were required, and thus enables him, as stated, to jump over the 14-cent tariff wall and come into competition with our domestic product. Hence, it has not only destroyed the value of European currency but the price of their commodities as well. The depreciation by more than one-third in the value of the currency, as pointed out by Mr. Sexauer, has enabled the importer to jump the 14-cent tariff wall, thus lowering the price of butter, as well as other commodities, to the extent of one-third the value of the dollar. Not only that but it has demonstrated the value of the protective tariff to American industry. At present, with depreciated currency, the tariff is ineffective to the extent of the difference between 19 cents English currency and 12 cents in United States currency, or 7 cents a pound. It is needless to say, if—as stated by Mr. Sexauer, New Zealand butter can come into our markets and sell in competition with domestic products, even after paying 14-cent tariff—if it were not for the 14-cent tariff, it could be laid down in New York at 14 cents less than the price of 19 cents in European currency, equal to 12 cents in United States currency, plus 1½ cents freight, net 13½ cents f. o. b. New York, instead of, as stated by Mr. Sexauer, the price now being 19 cents European currency, equal to 12 cents American currency plus 14 cents tariff, or 26 cents. In other words, it would reduce the current price of butter approximately one-half.

By all means legislation should at least be enacted to collect the difference at the customhouse as a surtax or countervailing tax on the imports of the difference between the par value and the depreciated value on the day of entry, rather than chop off one-third or more of the standard gold dollar, which would give us more dollars, but unfortunately of more than one-third less value, and as a result the many millions of dollars payable in gold, which would unless one-third or more of the obligation is to be discounted, it would require more than $3 to discharge the obligation of $2. According to world quotations foreign and domestic producers operating under depreciated currency receive no more dollars than do domestic producers, as stated by Mr. Sexauer, "New Zealand butter selling in England at about 19 cents in English money, equal to 12 cents in United States," as compared with from 17 cents to 23 cents during the last few months here at the creameries, or as stated by Mr. Sexauer, "at the top price of 26 cents in New York."

Producers of wheat in Canada sell their wheat, much of it, at 10 cents a bushel less than producers on the American side. The Canadian dollar of to-day is quoted at 84.2045. This matter was brought vividly to my attention last October when disposing of 47 bushels of wheat grown in North Dakota, only a few miles this side of the Canadian line, which sold at 42½ cents, or $19.97. According to quotations in the Chicago Daily Tribune on October 1, 1932, the price on the Canadian side was a trifle above 29 cents. Over there my 47 bushels of wheat would have brought only $13.63, less Canadian exchange of $1.36, net $12.23, or $7.77 less than the amount, or approximately 16½ cents a bushel less than what I received on the American side. In paying my taxes in Canada, amounting to $57.15 on a piece of land, I paid by draft of $52.72. On these small transactions my gain in selling on the American side on the wheat was $7.77, and my gain in paying taxes in Canada with American currency was $4.53.

Mexico is on the silver basis. Its dollars are worth only one-half as much as ours. A recent foreign exchange quotes it at 28.5833. I recall many years ago exchanging $100 in American currency and receiving $404 in Mexican dollars, and dollars containing more silver than ours.

Considering quotations and experience in foreign countries with depreciated currency, although the cheap dollar might discharge obligations not payable in gold and buy as much of the commodities as our good dollars, it seems to me that to permit the payment for agricultural commodities or the payment of debts by cheap dollars is on the border line of repudiation.

Section 311 of the Code of Laws of the United States provides for the continuance of the parity in value of the coins of gold and silver and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the market and in the payment of debts. Section 314 provides that the standard dollar, consisting of 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine, shall be the standard unit of value and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity of value with this standard, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity. Section 408 provides that the United States notes, Treasury notes, and so forth, when presented to the Treasurer for redemption shall be redeemed in gold coin of the standard fixed.

The question is, Can the suggested dollar of 14 ounces of gold be made to equal the value of the one containing 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine, and be made of equal power in the payment of debts without impairing existing contracts? The Constitution provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and the fifth amendment provides that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation.

Can Congress cut off one-third of the gold of the present gold dollar and declare it to be on a parity and of equal value with the former dollar containing one-third more gold with impunity?

I can not become reconciled to the fact that if I borrowed from my neighbor 100 bushels of wheat of 60 pounds to the bushel, or 6,000 pounds, that by Congress changing the standard to 40 pounds to the bushel, that I would be discharging my obligation to my neighbor by tendering to him 4,000 pounds. Or if I borrowed $100 based on 23.22 grains of gold, that by Congress changing the standard to 14 grains that I would be discharging my obligation by tendering $100 containing one-third less gold. One thing I do know—were I permitted to melt $100 gold containing 23.22 grains of gold to the dollar and run it through the mint I would be approximately $35 ahead or long on gold, and my neighbor would be just that much short.

One thing is certain, that in the absence of a protective tariff to protect American industry and labor against importation of foreign products, it would place the American producer and labor on a level with foreign labor and producers. Considering it all, it seems to me that rather than to substitute cheap dollars for good dollars, the better way out of the difficulty would be to require the collection of the difference at the customhouse as a surtax, or as a countervailing tax on the imports of the difference between the value of our dollar and the depreciated value of the depreciated currency, or to raise the tariff or, if need be, set up an embargo.

Fortunately, we are and have been enjoying the highest standard of living in the world. Personally, I believe in maintaining it. One way of maintaining our high standard of living is by protecting our markets from flooding by products produced at a lower cost and under lower standards of living. In my opinion, the practical way of maintaining our high standard of living and high wages is to insure employment and protection to American labor and American producers and every worthy and legitimate enterprise against the importation of products produced by underpaid labor under lower standards of living—in short, a tariff for the common good of all American people.

However, bearing in mind that in the case of a surplus in excess of the domestic requirements the tariff is ineffective and the price obtained for the surplus on the world market establishes the price of the whole production. It is needless to say that the tariff, by all means, must be also made effective. For example, notwithstanding the tariff already fixed by the Tariff Commission is 14 cents on butter, as stated by Mr. Sexauer, butter is still being imported. The Hawley-Smoot bill increased the tariff on livestock of less than 700 pounds from 1½ cents to 2½ cents; over 700 pounds, from 2 to 3 cents; beef was increased from 3 to 6 cents; swine was increased from ½ cent to 2 cents; hams and bacon and shoulders were increased from 2 to 3½ cents; milk from 2½ cents to 5½ cents per gallon, and cream was increased from 20 cents to 56.06 cents per gallon.

Cattle are coming across the Canadian line in large numbers, and Canadian hams and bacon, advertised as such, are now served at medium-class restaurants in Washington. Certainly the Iowa farmer, tilling his farm valued at many times the price of foreign highly productive soil, and paying high wages, can not compete with products produced by underpaid foreign labor on lower-priced land equal in productivity, much of it selling at one-quarter to one-tenth of the American price, nor can the American wage earner, receiving the highest wage in the world, measured by the purchasing power of from two to six times more than those of the European countries, compete with foreign labor, nor can the American farmer, with existing disparity in prices of agricultural commodities, employ labor at an American wage, pay taxes and debts, even with deflated currency, nor can it, under the present conditions, be done even by cutting the interest rate in two. As everybody knows, there are millions of farmers at present who are unable to pay their taxes, much less interest, even though the rate be lowered. Certainly it can not be done by lowering their prices and standard of living to that of Russia and other nations with lower prices and standards of living.

My contention has been, and I still adhere to it, that the most effective way of starting not only the farmer, but labor and every worthy and legitimate industry back on the highway of prosperity, is to first protect American industry and labor against the importation of foreign products, made at lower cost and under lower standards of living, by a tariff; and second, by making that tariff effective so as to establish and maintain advantageous domestic markets, as provided in the McNary-Haugen bill, passed two times by the Senate and House, or if the tariff is not made the yardstick, the ratio price, a ratio price equivalent to the pre-war prices for the years 1905 to 1914, or as suggested by some, the cost price plus a reasonable profit would afford well-deserved relief. In other words, to rehabilitate agriculture, through the redemption of the often repeated party platform pledges to restore equality between agriculture, labor, and industry. If so, we shall have restored confidence in men and party platform pledges.

Then, and not until then, will hunger, privation, and agony, and the heart-rending worry over the loss of the old homestead, so near and dear to young and old, the closing of banks, the receivership of railroads and long-established worthy and legitimate enterprises, and the deflation process and demand for depreciated currency be stopped.

Mother Earth is the producer of new wealth. The only way I know of creating new wealth is through the application of energy and labor to bring forth the treasures of Mother Earth. The farmer by his labor affords the opportunity for the sun, rain, and soil to bring into existence the essentials of life—the food we eat and the clothes we wear. With railroads rusting from idleness, factories and mills crumbling, and millions of men and women out of employment, it must be clear to all with absolute finality that the stability, growth, and greatness of our Nation depend upon the prosperity of the tillers of the soil.

It is needless to say that if the party platform pledges are redeemed, and when the existing disparity is overcome and parity is restored, there will be no need for 50 or 60 cent dollars; if so, tax receipts will be substituted for tax deeds, satisfaction of mortgages will be recorded in place of sheriff's deeds, pay checks will be substituted for meal tickets, rent receipts will take the place of eviction notices, teachers will be the proud possessors of certified checks instead of warrants indorsed "refused on account of no funds;" ministers' salaries will be paid in currency instead of in promises, banks will honor checks presented, merchants will receive orders for and payment for goods, and although late, better late than never; tranquillity, cheer, happiness, and jollification meetings will take the place of sheriff's sales and protest meetings, farmers' and laborers' strikes, evictions, bread lines, and the call for charity.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, on many occasions prior to and since the election I have expressed the judgment that tariff duties should be levied on imports into our country to offset whatever advantages a depreciated currency may give to industry in countries that have gone off the gold standard.

In the recent Democratic House caucus held for the purpose of considering my party's attitude regarding the Crowther bill, designed to increase existing tariff rates on articles imported into this country from countries having a depreciated currency, and also to levy a tariff duty on articles now on the free list imported from such countries, I asked for and got permission from the caucus to differ from the majority of my colleagues in the House and to vote in favor of the consideration of the Crowther bill when it should come before the House on the petition to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill, in the event my study of the bill and the hearings should justify me in so voting.

As a result of my study of the Crowther bill and the hearings on the bill, I have come to the conclusion that the bill should not be approved by the House.

The Crowther bill provides for the levying of additional tariff duties on articles imported into our country from countries having a depreciated currency of more than 5 per cent, the tariff duties to be equal to the percentage of depreciation of the currency in the exporting countries.

This bill also provides for the levying of similar tariff duties on articles now on the free list imported from countries having a depreciated currency.

On the hearing on the Crowther bill before the Ways and Means Committee, three members of the Tariff Commission, including Mr. O'Brien, the chairman of the commission and a high-tariff Republican, appeared and opposed its passage.

Mr. O'Brien testified that our imports to-day are at a very low ebb, both in quantity and price; that there is still a very heavy balance of trade in our favor, both in quantity and value. All the members of the Tariff Commission testified that there was no flooding of our market from countries operating under a depreciated currency, and that a depreciated currency gave no advantage to the industries in countries off the gold standard as regards their exports into our country, except a temporary advantage that speedily adjusts itself.

Last October President Hoover ordered the Tariff Commission to investigate the matter of increased importations into our country from countries off the gold standard.

The Tariff Commission reports that imports to our country are falling off; that the imports during the fiscal year 1932 from countries off the gold standard decreased in a greater percentage than the imports into our country, during the same period, from countries on the gold standard.

One of the functions of the Tariff Commission is to investigate trade conditions for the purpose of recommending to the President changes in tariff rates when in the judgment of the commission such changes are necessary.

Since last October the commission has been investigating the question of an effect of depreciated currency on imports into our country, and only recently the commission ordered an increase of tariff duties on rubber goods coming from countries on and off the gold standard. The commission is still at work on this line of investigation.

Doctor Durand, chief economist of the Tariff Commission, says that the Crowther bill would raise a tariff embargo in our country against all the world.

Sixty-seven per cent of our imports are now on the free list. The passage of the Crowther bill would put thousands of these articles on the dutiable list and would raise our tariff wall from about an average rate of 16 per cent to more than double that rate.

I can not vote for the consideration of this bill for the reason that I must take the findings and judgment of the Tariff Commission as to the wisdom and necessity of such legislation, and for the further reason that I am not willing to attempt to frame on the floor of this House a tariff bill automatic in its operations, that would result in tariff rates, that would put the rates of the Hawley-Smoot bill to shame.

The passage of this bill would result in our country levying different tariff rates on the same article exported from different countries, a situation that might lead to international misunderstandings, and to feeling on the part of some countries that we were discriminating against them through the levying of tariff duties.

France a few years ago depreciated her franc 80 per cent. France to-day is on the gold standard and her exports to our country under the pending bill would not be subject to any raise in tariff duties, while England and Canada, two of our best customers, would have to pay higher duties.

The pending bill is an unscientific and unworkable measure, designed to fix tariff rates without any regard to the cost of production, the only scientific basis upon which to write a tariff bill.

Again, from the testimony of the Tariff Commissioners, it would appear that our industries, if they are threatened to-day with disastrous foreign competition, that threat is just as great, if not greater, from countries operating on the gold standard as from countries having a depreciated currency, yet this bill would give no relief from imports coming from countries on the gold standard.

Many communications have come to my desk regarding the pending bill, particularly as its terms would affect wood pulp. About half of these communications declare that if a tariff is not placed on wood pulp the wood-pulp plants will have to close, and the other half insist that if a tariff is placed on wood pulp the paper mills will have to close.

Such advice, to say the least, is confusing to a lawmaker, and as a result I feel obligated to follow the judgment of the Tariff Commission.

It is possible that because of changing economic conditions at home and abroad, it may become necessary to levy higher tariff duties on articles now dutiable, and to levy new duties on articles now on the free list, but Congress is in no position to enter upon such tariff changes until it has the information upon which to base such legislation, and that information should come from the Tariff Commission.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the motion to discharge the Ways and Means Committee from the consideration of H. R. 8557, known as the Crowther bill. I do not favor exercising the harsh discharge rule except in extreme cases. I certainly am opposed to its exercise in this case.

I feel that the Ways and Means Committee should be allowed to make a most exhaustive study of this bill and its far-reaching provisions. In fact, I am opposed to the bill in its present form. I feel that this entire matter should be worked out by a bill dealing with the tariff in its entirety.

To my mind this bill if enacted into law would not help our people as a whole. It is not such a bill as should be passed under whip and spur and without the most careful consideration.

I would much prefer to pass at once a bill to inflate our own currency, both in volume and amount, to offset the effect of the inflation of currency in other countries instead of attempting to get this result by the passage of the Crowther bill.

I can not at all subscribe to the proposition that either the present bill or a general tariff bill or any other similar measure will bring back real permanent prosperity until there is a proper inflation of the circulation of our currency both in volume and amount. This accompanied by a proper adjustment of the indebtedness of our people and a real farm-relief program will usher in real and permanent prosperity.

Let us remove the causes of the depression and the effects will improve. All the bad effects of the depression, though, can never be fully overcome any more than all who die in an epidemic of physical disease can be brought back to life. This is why I have been so anxious all these months and years for Congress to pass some legislation to stop loan foreclosures, help our farmers get better prices, save the homes of our people, and give them another chance in life's battle.

UNITED STATES GEORGIA BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 518) establishing the United States Georgia Bicentennial Commission, and for other purposes, and I ask that the Clerk may read the joint resolution for information.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 518

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a commission, to be known as the United States Georgia Bicentennial Commission, for the purpose of participation by the United States in the observance of the two-hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Georgia Colony, such commission to be composed of 21 commissioners, as follows: Nine persons to be appointed by the President of the United States; 6 Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and 6 Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The members of the commission shall serve without compensation, and shall select a chairman from among their number.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended by the commission established by this resolution for actual and necessary traveling expenses and subsistence while discharging its official duties outside the District of Columbia.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out section 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PURNELL. Reserving the right to object, I wish to get some information about this. Is the gentleman asking unanimous consent to pass the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, I want to get a little information in regard to the resolution. I am not sure whether I shall object to it or not. I want to make my position clear to the House. I have at all times opposed legislation of this character, and it does seem to me that to bring up a resolution establishing a commission of 21 members to prepare for a celebration down in Georgia at this time is a needless expense to the Government. If there is not to be any expense connected with this, why is it to be done under the authority of the United States commission? We have been through this several times. The same statement has been made on the floor of the House that "We want the Government to take supervision of this, give its name and influence to it, but we are not going to ask for any appropriation." That has been done time and time again, but after we have assumed responsibility for it, then the people who are connected with the celebration come here and ask the Government to appropriate money. They say, "The Government must do this. The Government has assumed responsibility, and they must make some appropriation to carry out that work." I think the Speaker of the House has always taken the same position on this proposition that I have. I dislike to object to the resolution offered by the gentleman or the consideration of it, but I want it definitely known that this is no time to start any new celebrations at the expense of the American people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Will the House permit the Chair to make a statement? The Chair has taken this matter up with the gentleman from New York, and the gentleman from New York has stated the position of the Chair exactly. Two or three gentlemen from Georgia, however, have stated they would not ask for any additional appropriation aside from the $1,000 contained in the resolution passed by the Senate, and that the celebration is to end next September. Those gentlemen have given assurance that they will not ask for any additional appropriation. They are Members of this Congress, and they are Members of the next Congress. Taking that for granted, the Chair thought he could recognize them under the circumstances just stated.

Mr. PURNELL. Reserving the right to object, as I remember the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] before the Committee on Rules, even the sum of $1,000 was not to be requested.

Mr. COX. The Committee on Rules struck out section 2, which carried an appropriation of $5,000.

Mr. PURNELL. So that as the resolution is now before the House, it carries no appropriation?

Mr. COX. The Senate had previously passed Senate Joint Resolution 223, which carried an appropriation of $1,000. I did state to the Rules Committee that the Georgia delegation would not ask for any appropriation whatsoever. I can appreciate the fact that the objection to resolutions of this character is that they usually call for money out of the Public Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is it the purpose of the gentleman from Georgia to ask unanimous consent to consider the Senate resolution, if permission is granted to consider the resolution at all?

Mr. COX. I intended to ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 223 be substituted for House Joint Resolution 518, with the understanding that section 2 would be stricken out.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, I want a little further information. I appreciate what the gentleman has said and I have no doubt he does not intend to ask for any appropriation, but I know what the pressure will be on the Georgia delegation by the people back home as soon as this is adopted to get some appropriation from the Congress to meet the expenses.

Who is going to pay the expenses of this commission of 21 members?

Mr. COX. If there is any participation the commission will have to pay its own expenses. I may say in answer to the gentleman's inquiry that I know a majority of the House delegation have stated they would not ask for any appropriation whatsoever. Speaking for myself, I shall oppose any effort to get any appropriation of any character in connection with this commission.

Mr. SNELL. Can the gentleman give us that assurance on behalf of the Georgia delegation in the next session of Congress?

Mr. COX. I am sure I can.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is speaking for this member of the Georgia delegation also.

Mr. SNELL. If I have correctly stated the understanding, I shall not object.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is the understanding, that the commission will not ask for any appropriation.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I am the author of this resolution. No Member from Georgia will ask for any appropriation, either of this Congress or the next.

Mr. PURNELL. And I may add further, no opposition was voiced to the resolution in the Committee on Rules.

Mr. COX. That is very correct.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in view of the fact this resolution apparently complies with the Democratic program in reference to expenditures for funerals and commissions, I do not think there should be objection to this resolution.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from New York is needlessly disturbed about this, because a similar commission participated in the celebration of the Battle of Bennington; and although the resolution provided for the expenses of the commission, the members of the commission paid their own expenses.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from New York has had considerable experience in seeing such commissions started, and I think he knows what he is talking about.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a similar Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 223), with the understanding that section 2 thereof will be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a commission, to be known as the United States Georgia bicentennial commission, for the purpose of participation by the United States in the observance of the two hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Georgia colony, such commission to be composed of 21 commissioners as follows: Nine persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, 6 Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and 6 Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The members of the commission shall serve without compensation and shall select a chairman from among their number.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended by the commission established by this resolution for actual and necessary traveling expenses and subsistence while discharging its official duties outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cox: On page 2, line 4, strike out all of section 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House joint resolution was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the discharge motion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may we be informed what business will be considered during the balance of the day?

The SPEAKER. This is District day. District bills will be considered as long as the House desires to consider them.

LINCOLN AND DEMOCRATIC INSTITUTIONS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, this is the day the Nation is celebrating the birthday of a great American. I think the House of Representatives should make some recognition of the fact. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes on the life and public service of Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I am indebted to the courtesy of the House for this opportunity to make a brief and inadequate reference to the one hundred and twenty-fourth anniversary of the birth of Lincoln. Time would not permit me, and in any event it would be unnecessary, to summarize his life from its cradle in a Kentucky log cabin to its Calvary in Ford's Theater.

When the French people sepulchred their greatest warrior and ruler in his tomb in the Invalides, it was their fine conception that Napoleon's fame was so universal and permanent that it was not necessary to inscribe his name upon his porphyry tomb. Similarly, it did not require a Greek temple and a Jove-like bronze effigy to perpetuate the timeless fame of Lincoln, for his true monument is in the hearts of the plain people of all nations.

My only purpose is to make some observations that may be pertinent to the present critical hour, which have been suggested by the life of Lincoln. His career should have an especial interest for this body, for he was once a Member of this House, and it may be some comfort to those of us who, in moments of disillusion, feel that our labors are so largely futile, to realize that the career of Lincoln in the House of Representatives seemed also to him wholly futile. Indeed, it may be of some comfort to many of our colleagues, whose smiling faces we shall greatly but temporarily miss after March 4, that Lincoln, too, was once a "lame duck," and then regarded his political career as definitely ended. Let us hope that, among those whom a misguided people have temporarily furloughed, some, like Lincoln, will return to Washington to accept even greater official responsibilities.

I am greatly complimented by the fact that our colleague, and my greatly valued friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], paid me the compliment of asking the House to give its consent to this address.

I mention this not merely to acknowledge a gracious compliment paid to me by a colleague on the other side of the aisle but because this courtesy is symtomatic of a present condition in American politics, which in a time of stress and anxiety should give us encouragement as to the future of democratic institutions.

No nation can be a true democracy, however wise its form of government, unless its people are inspired by a kindly tolerance of differences of opinion. It was for this reason that Washington, in his Farewell Address, warned all succeeding generations against the excesses of partisan strife.

There is no more striking an illustration of this fact than is now observable in Germany, where one of the most finely educated people in the world find it impossible to make democratic institutions function because of the bitter rancor between men of opposite political faiths. Next March Germany will have had its fifth nation-wide election within 12 months, and each one has been accompanied by general and continuous disorder and much bloodshed.

Contrast this with the moving spectacle of our people, who, after a presidential campaign of unequaled intensity and in a period when the very sufferings of men might have produced violence, yet went to the polls last November in peace and quiet, and when the vote was counted men of both parties acquiesced in the result. Victors and vanquished united in a common feeling of good will for the historic party that is soon to assume the reins of power.

It was not always so. Prior to the Civil War there was the same intensity between the political parties as is now observable in Germany, and in three different crises the Union was on the point of disintegration. The same spirit of personal animosity was observable in the Congress, and the aisle of the Senate was not infrequently the pathway to the dueling field. It was natural that this spirit of feverish partisanship and intense antagonism continued for nearly two decades after the Civil War, during the dark and tragic days of reconstruction—a deplorable period which might never have been if Abraham Lincoln had lived.

As a native Philadelphian I take some pride in the fact that this most tragic period of our history ended when North and South met in Philadelphia to celebrate the centennial anniversary of the Declaration of Independence. Thus, meeting in May, 1876, in a lovely park, whose vernal flowers made it a new and noble field of the cloth of gold, North and South clasped hands in—as we fondly hope—a lasting amity. Since then, notwithstanding the acute differences of opinion between the two great political parties, there has been nothing but good will between them and a common and dominant desire to serve the Republic which we all love so well.

I can not but think that this is due in no small part to the influence of Abraham Lincoln. When the war was nearly ended, Lincoln, in his second inaugural, used the memorable and prophetic words:

> With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the Nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations.

This was not with Lincoln a mere flourish of rhetoric, for in the few remaining days of his life his one purpose was to discountenance all talk of punishment or reprisals. He had fought to preserve the Union, and he felt that it would be an idle form unless the Southern States, which had fought so bravely, were welcomed back into the family of the Union with all their rights and privileges. He said:

> We must extinguish our resentments if we expect harmony and union. There is too much desire on the part of some of our very good friends to be masters, to interfere with and dictate to those States, to treat the people not as fellow citizens; there is too little respect for their rights. I do not sympathize in those feelings.

And it is obvious that, had he been spared, the bitterness that divided the sections after Appomattox would have been short-lived.

To me Lincoln's great service in preserving the Union is not more notable than his spiritual conquest of mankind, and it was a signal vindication of the words of the apostle which, literally translated, say:

> Faith, hope, and kindliness; and the greatest of these is kindliness.

His fine faith in the potency of this greatest force in the world was suggested in that noble passage of the first inaugural, when he predicted, in the darkest hour of the Republic:

> The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union, when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature.

His example of tolerance has profoundly influenced human affairs until this day. It is noteworthy that two American Presidents, Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson, both stated that, in the most trying hours of their respective administrations, they tried to solve difficulties by asking themselves what Lincoln would have done under like circumstances, and perhaps it was only a reflection of the same spirit which prompted a later President to forgive his enemies. I refer to an incident that happened in the administration of President McKinley, of which I heard at the time, when I had the pleasure of serving under him. There had been a bitter attack upon his Secretary of War, and one day in Cabinet that official, with a great deal of feeling, brought to the attention of the President that a certain officer of the Government had bitterly attacked him. President McKinley listened thoughtfully and then he quietly said:

"Mr. Secretary, if these reflections of which you complain were a criticism of you, they were equally a criticism of me as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States."

The Secretary, encouraged by this statement, quickly said: "What, then, Mr. President, do you propose to do?" To which McKinley replied, "Well, I think I will forgive him," and there the incident ended.

I recognize that we are not always in our political struggles as tolerant of criticism as were Lincoln and McKinley. In the heat of political strife we often say the things which we would gladly unsay and leave unsaid the due appreciation of our opponents to which we should give fitting utterance. But, disregarding these temporary instances of intemperate expressions, the fact remains that the two great political parties, in the spirit of Lincoln, try to observe, so far as the frailties of human nature permit, that fine maxim of the medieval church:

In essentials, unity; in nonessentials, liberality; in all things, charity.

So world-wide is the spiritual conquest of Abraham Lincoln that I should not be surprised to learn that the statesmen of England, after the South African war, in which they had poured out the blood of their youth, were influenced by the spirit of Lincoln when they voluntarily granted to South Africa the home rule for which the Boers had fought. This may not be true, but it is significant that in Parliament Square, over against the great House of Parliament in London, where England's greatest men are commemorated in marble or bronze, facing the mother of parliaments and the cradle of democracy, stands a statue of Abraham Lincoln.

It is an infinite pity that the spirit of Abraham Lincoln did not prevail in the councils of Versailles in 1919. The ghastly consequences of the World War and the resentments to which it gave rise made this difficult, if not impossible; and yet the world would not to-day be in a state of such unprecedented wreckage if the spirit of Abraham Lincoln had prevailed in that misguided council of the nations.

There was something of Lincoln's spirit in Woodrow Wilson's ideal of a "peace without victory." It was bitterly criticized at the time, and I was one of the critics, but the present condition of the world now gives proof that the principle of vae victis, or "woe to the conquered," can never produce a lasting peace. At the time it was uttered it was an impracticable ideal, for, as the combatant nations had poured out the blood of their youth as water, a compromise peace was then as impossible as would have been a similar peace in the midst of the Civil War.

A nobler interpretation of President Wilson's famous saying may be that after the victory had been won a fine and magnanimous spirit should be shown by the victors to the vanquished. Unhappily, this, too, was impracticable in 1919, for the civilized world had been shell shocked and was incapable of rational measures. If the same spirit which Lincoln showed in 1865 to the vanquished States had been shown by the allied nations to their prostrate foes the world would not to-day be in a state of almost cureless ruin.

Lincoln reached the height of his fame at Gettysburg. His now classic address was very brief. Numbering only 367 words, it must have been spoken in about two minutes.

Webster once said that the three essential requisites of a great speech are the man, the subject, and the occasion, and the Gettysburg speech, which so cultivated an English statesman as Lord Curzon declared the noblest speech in the English language, had all three requisites. Spoken on another occasion or by another man, it might not have gained the universal acclaim which has been its exalted portion. The subject was the preservation of a democratic union; the occasion the dedication of a sacred area in which were newly buried the soldiers who had died for the Union; and the speaker was one who had borne upon his shoulders the weight of a great Nation, and who, standing within the shadow of his approaching martyrdom, was as that other Man of Sorrows, who was "acquainted with grief."

The speaker chose the occasion to reaffirm his faith in government "of the people, by the people, and for the people." There was a significance in this reaffirmation, which is sometimes forgotten. Before Gettysburg the European nations had become increasingly unfriendly to the Union, and the courts of Europe were even then exchanging notes for a joint intervention to destroy the American Republic, because it was to some of them a menace to the autocratic pretensions of their dynasties. To this challenge of democracy Lincoln proudly said that popular government "shall not perish from the earth." It was America's answer to a Europe still dominated by the reactionary councils of the Congress of Vienna.

The next half century was marked by the onward march of triumphant democracy. Nation after nation yielded to its imperious demands, and when President Wilson led the American Republic into the greatest war in history it was under the inspired battle cry that the world must be "made safe for democracy." This was a fitting echo of Lincoln's speech at Gettysburg.

It is, however, of profound significance that, so far as we can now measure with our limited vision, the present effect of the World War has arrested the onward march of democracy and resulted in a portentous retrogression to autocracy. It is true that when this greatest war of history had ended and the roar of the last gun on the long battle line had died away in distant echoes, it seemed for a little time that "government of the people, for the people, and by the people" had been vindicated, and that the world had been made safe for democracy.

Never in a thousand years had there been such a dissolution of ancient forms. Crowns had fallen "thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks of Vallombrosa." Ancient dynasties had perished and kingdoms and empires of a thousand years vanished into thin air.

And then a mighty change came over the world's dream of democracy. A reaction, swift and terrible, against parliamentary government, through which democracy alone can function, swept over the world like the shadow of a huge eclipse. Russia destroyed the rule of the czars but rejected democracy in accepting a class tyranny infinitely worse than the rule of the worst of the Czars. China became a republic in form, but is now in the welter of anarchy. Italy accepted the rule of a dictator, who, however beneficent his autocratic rule may be, loses no occasion to flout democracy. Spain accepted for a time the rule of a military dictator; democracy yielded to a dictator in Greece—the very land that gave us not only the idea but the very word "democracy."

Seventy years after Lincoln's vindication of democracy, popular government in the greater part of the world seems to be in more serious danger than at any time since Jefferson, like Chanticleer, proclaimed the "reddening morn" of democracy.

Human progress moves in a constant series of ascending and descending curves; or, to change the metaphor, its forces are at times centipetal and at times centrifugal. Man has, throughout all history, passed through a ceaseless cycle of integration and disintegration. Every age that has been marked by the concentration of power in the hands of a few has been followed by a redistribution of that power among the many; and, in turn, every democratic movement, when it has spent its force, has been succeeded by a period of integration.

No present fact is more significant than the reaction in many nations against democracy and in favor of one-man power. It matters not whether the one man be called a czar, emperor, king, or dictator—the essential fact is his power. To-day half of the oldest nations of Europe are in the grasp of dictators. The revolt is not against democracy as a social ideal, but against the inefficiency of parliamentary institutions.

At no time within the memory of living man has Lincoln's ideal of a government "of and by and for the people" been more openly denied and flouted. If the parliamentary system, which we call democracy, is ineffective, resort will inevitably be had to the more ancient forms of power. The World War has revealed, as in a vast illumination, the fact that democracy is not workable unless there be a people politically capable of self-government. The founders of our Nation recognized this. Washington, Franklin, and Hamilton all said that the success of popular government depended less upon its form than upon the moral and intellectual capacity of the people. If they fail to take an intelligent interest in their government and if they are unprepared to show the spirit of self-restraint, which I have elsewhere called "constitutional morality," there can be no successful democracy.

It is easy for a people to be content with popular government when prosperity is general. Let there be in this Nation a prolonged period of adversity, and our institutions will be brought to a real test; and the prophecy of Lord Macaulay, voiced nearly 70 years ago, may have a terrible vindication.

Let us not lay the "flattering unction to our souls" that we have finally and completely solved the great problem of popular government. It is still, to use the words of Lincoln, "an unfinished task," and to it the living, from generation to generation, must still dedicate themselves. Our institutions are not static, but always in a state of flux.

A democracy can only function through party government. I like the spirit of our mother country, which calls the majority in Parliament "His Majesty's Government" and the minority "His Majesty's Opposition." It expresses a truth that both parties serve the sovereign people, even when they differ as to the policies of the nation. To us the American people is "His Majesty." The large majority which the Democratic Party will have in the next Congress will be "His Majesty's Government," and the small minority, to which I belong, will be "His Majesty's Opposition," both playing different parts in a common symphony, but we will both serve the public by debating conflicting policies, for a fair and frank expression of opposite views often results in one of those compromises which are often a necessary ingredient of true statesmanship.

During my short service in Congress I have often regretted that, under the stress of our complex problems, this House becomes less and less a great forum for discussion. Debate serves a great purpose, and when the next Congress convenes I shall venture to suggest to the majority leaders a modification of our rules under which there shall be set aside each month two days—say the first and third Tuesday of each month—to be called the "State of the Union" day, and on those days two or more speeches shall be made by men of both parties, to be selected by the floor leaders, respectively, upon some issue of general importance.

This would have the advantage of concentrating debate upon some vital question and would attract far more attention than the unrelated speeches which are made in general debate when the House sits as a Committee of the Whole. On these days the House would again become a great national forum, and if this idea were adopted I believe the American people would follow the debates with more interest than I fear they now do.

The sound instinct of the American people still accepts democracy. In determining its merits, as in every other problem, regard must be had for the ponderables and the imponderables. Judged by the former only, our faith in democracy would be weakened, for its inefficiency in great crises can not be doubted. But the American people believe in it because of the great imponderable, that it is the only form of government consistent with the self-respect of a proud people, that it gives hope to the masses and raises them in intellectual and moral stature. The average man, even when plunged in the "slough of despond" of an inefficient and at times corrupt government, sees beyond the "delectable mountains" and he struggles out of the morass and presses onward. Such was the spirit of Washington and Lincoln, and it is this invincible faith, triumphing over fear, that has made them the two great leaders of the American people. As long as democracy can produce two such leaders it vindicates itself.

It must also be remembered that the comparative success of popular government in America is due in large part to the Constitution of the United States, which is not wholly democratic nor wholly undemocratic. That great charter of government rejected the idea that the majority ruled by divine right.

Abraham Lincoln devoutly believed that the Constitution was the whole "law and the prophets" of popular government. His faith in that Constitution has been amply vindicated, for in all the violent storms of the last 25 years, in which all forms of government have been shaken to their very foundations, the most stable has been that of the Constitution of the United States. To-day it is the oldest comprehensive written form of government in the world. "We, the people," ordained it, and "We, the people," must preserve it.

Our Republic, however, can not be perpetuated by words written on parchment, even though they form so wise a document as the Constitution. The essential spirit of a Republic, without which it can not lastingly survive, is the faith of the American people in its wisdom and justice.

It is therefore unfortunate that the American people indulge in so much indiscriminate abuse of their form of government, and especially of its legislative branch. I imagine that each of my colleagues is the recipient, as I have been, of almost daily letters in which there are the most bitter and unreasoning criticisms of Congress. There is no adequate recognition of the earnest effort of Members of Congress to solve the difficult and often insoluble problems with which we are confronted from day to day.

Our critics fail to realize that the Nation has long since grown too great for its political machinery. There is reason to fear that our Government is a giant with feet of clay. We are constantly reminded how inferior we are as a body to the Congresses of a century ago; but our critics fail to recognize that an indulgent posterity remembers their achievements but casts the veil of oblivion over their deficiences. There never was a time when the Congress was not a disappointment to the American people. The difficulty is that the impossible is expected of us.

Let me recall a picture of other times, which was drawn by a master:

> If I were to be called upon to draw a picture of the times and of men from what I have seen and heard and in part know, I should in one way say that idleness, dissipation, and extravagance seem to have laid fast hold of most of them. That speculation—peculation—and an insatiable thirst for riches seem to have got the better of every other consideration and almost of every order of men. That party disputes and personal quarrels are the great business of the day, whilst the momentous concerns of an empire—a great and accumulated debt, ruined finances, depreciated money, and want of credit (which in their consequences is the want of everything)—are but secondary considerations and postponed from day to day, from week to week, as if our affairs wear the most promising aspect.

This is certainly a dark picture of another age of the Republic, and it is interesting to add that I have quoted one of the most courageous of men, George Washington. If he had his moments of despair, the present generation may be excused for some pessimism. The Republic survived the dark days to which Washington referred and the critical days through which Lincoln lived.

In a time when even thoughtful men are despairing as to whether democratic institutions can survive, we may well recall the memory of Lincoln as a great democrat. I use the word in its broadest and most catholic sense. He was a man of the people, and he loved and believed in the people. Nothing could shake his faith, and he poured out his heart's blood to preserve the noblest democracy in recorded history.

The two great democrats of American history are Franklin and Lincoln. Each was a self-made man and from the depths of poverty reached the heights of an undying reputation. With little education each became a supremely wise man, and yet each had something that is finer than ordinary wisdom and that is common sense. Each had a sense of humor, which not only confirmed his faith, but made him tolerant of human error. Each, despite his lack of early education, became a master of style, and each drew his inspiration from the Bible and Shakespeare. Franklin laid the foundations of the American Commonwealth, Washington erected the superstructure of the Constitution, and Lincoln preserved it.

It is natural that in this critical age men should despair of democracy as of all human institutions, but as long as a democracy can produce such men as Franklin, Washington, and Lincoln, we need not despair of its future. Our form of government may change from generation to generation in its ceaseless adaptation to new social changes, but as long as the spirit of Franklin, Washington, and Lincoln remains, we can believe in the rule of the people.

A great moralist once said:

> The life of Lincoln should never be passed by in silence by young or old. He touched the log cabin and it became the palace in which greatness was nurtured. He touched the forest and it became to him a church in which the purest and noblest worship of God was observed. His occupation has become associated in our minds with the integrity of the life he lived. In Lincoln there was always some quality that fastened him to the people and taught them to keep time to the music of his heart.

My colleagues of the House, as we stand upon the threshold of a new administration, in one of the most critical periods of our history, let us be inspired by the spirit of Franklin, Washington, and Lincoln, who shine forever in the firmament of fame, as the luminous and steadfast Pleiades. [Applause.]

WHAT WOULD LINCOLN DO?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULLEN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the eloquent address of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] on the life and character of Abraham Lincoln.

I wish to address you for a moment on the subject, "What Would Lincoln Do if He Were President To-day?"

As you know, I am a southern Democrat. I have often been referred to as an unreconstructed rebel. My people fought in the Confederate Army and suffered as a result of the devastating effects of the Civil War. Necessarily, my viewpoint differs from that of a great many Members of this House. But I have never been so partisan or so sectional that I could not recognize the sterling qualities of the man who occupied the Presidency of the United States during the trying years of that unfortunate conflict.

Whatever else may be said of Abraham Lincoln, by friends or foes, we must admit his sympathetic consideration for the masses of people from whom he sprang, and his courage to translate his sympathies into action whenever the occasion required.

What would Lincoln do if he were President of the United States now, under the terrible conditions through which we are passing, and have been passing for the last three years? In my opinion, he would do just what he did do under similar circumstances during the Civil War. When a financial crisis came on and it was necessary to do so, he swept aside, with a wave of his hand, those mercenary influences that were attempting to control the finances of the Republic for their own special benefit and forced an expansion of the currency to supply the necessary funds with which to carry on the conflict as well as to guarantee reasonable commodity prices and maintain the purchasing power of the people.

If Abraham Lincoln were President of the United States to-day, judging by his action then, we are forced to the conclusion that he would again scourge the money changers from the temple, and wrest this country from the control of those greedy interests and individuals who are responsible for the policies that are now squeezing the lifeblood from the American people. He would turn a deaf ear to the insidious appeals of the minions of concentrated wealth. He would refuse to be guided in his policies by the advice of selfish interests, or selfish individuals, who would perpetuate this panic and wreck the Republic in order to rise upon its ruin.

On the other hand, he would hear the pleas of the bankrupt business men of the Nation. He would hear the appeals of the distressed farmers, who are now seeing their homes swept away for debts or sold to pay their taxes. He would see the tears and hear the cries of the suffering women and children who have been made homeless and penniless as a result of the concentration of wealth and the contraction of the currency, coupled with the hoarding of money by the very ones who have profited most as a result of the ruination their policies have wrought.

Mr. Speaker, in my humble opinion, if Abraham Lincoln were President to-day, or if he had been President for the last three years, he would long since have recommended and secured the passage of the necessary legislation to provide for a controlled expansion of the currency, such as we are appealing for to-day, to bring back farm commodity prices, and restore the purchasing power of the American people, melt away our bread lines, start our factory wheels to turning, furnish work for our unemployed, bring new hope and new life to the American people, and cause us to move forward into a new era of prosperity. [Applause.]

AMENDMENT OF CHARTERS OF CERTAIN ORPHAN ASYLUMS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (S. 4673) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the trustees of the Female Orphan Asylum in Georgetown, and the Washington City Orphan Asylum in the District of Columbia," approved May 24, 1828, as amended by act of June 23, 1874.

I may say, in explanation of this measure, it simply removes the limitation placed by the act of incorporation on the amount of annual income allowed the orphanages mentioned herein.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the trustees of the Female Orphan Asylum in Georgetown, and the Washington City Orphan Asylum in the District of Columbia," approved May 24, 1828, as amended by act of June 23, 1874 (relating to the amount of annual income from property belonging to the trustees of either of said corporations), is amended by striking out "to a sum not exceeding $25,000 per annum" and inserting in lieu thereof "and such clear annual income of each of said corporations shall be applied to and for the purposes for which it was incorporated."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman from New Jersey yield for a question?

Mrs. NORTON. Gladly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentlewoman from New Jersey inform the House the reason why any limit whatsoever was heretofore placed on these individual institutions as to the amount of income they could receive and dispense?

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO] would like to answer that question.

Mr. PALMISANO. Of course, this is an old charter granted by the Congress. It seems that at that time it was customary to place a limit on all charitable institutions; and, as the gentleman from Wisconsin will recall, we had a similar bill in the last session in reference to the Acacia Insurance Co., which is under the Masonic order. They were also limited in a certain way.

Mr. STAFFORD. That bill was originally vetoed by President Harding because this organization was seeking to gain business under the name of a Masonic insurance company and thereby more or less inveigle the people generally into the belief that they had some authority in connection with a highly esteemed secret society. Thereupon, after the bill was returned with a veto, this private organization which sought to have the advantage of doing business with others than those connected with the Masonic fraternity changed the name and adopted the Masonic name, I believe, Acacia.

At that time there had been other bills of similar import introduced, and I was wondering why that company, like other companies, could not avail itself of the general privileges under the incorporation laws of the District of Columbia.

In the last Congress we had another instance, where the order of Knights of Pythias sought to gain certain advantages that were not extended generally to corporations incorporated in the District so as to avoid having certain inspections made by the superintendent of insurance.

I am not in sympathy with these laws that seek to grant special favors, when there are general laws in the District of Columbia which would permit them to avail themselves of these privileges.

Mr. PALMISANO. I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that we have taken the position in the District of Columbia Committee that we will refuse national charters to private corporations.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to commend the action of the committee in taking that stand.

Mr. PALMISANO. In a case of that kind, here are two orphan asylums created by act of Congress. They have received certain benefits. Under the general law they may lose those benefits if they amend the charter, and this is the only way they can obtain those benefits that they have derived.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentlemen sets forth a good reason why the bill should be passed.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF TAXES ON FAMILY DWELLING HOUSES IN QUARTERLY INSTALLMENTS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 14392) to authorize the payment of taxes and assessments on family dwelling houses in the District of Columbia in quarterly installments, and for other purposes. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration, and I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to 20 minutes, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULLEN). Is there objection to the request of the lady from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mrs. NORTON was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. DOXEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it is farthest from my thought to consume 10 minutes, but I wish some member of the committee would furnish information as to whether any other municipality in the country has adopted the proposal sought here for the payment of taxes quarterly? That is to me a departure from any existing system of tax collection. I am heartily in sympathy with the other provisions of the bill, the deferment of the collection of taxes for this year, but I query whether any city in the country has adopted the method of quarterly payments?

Mr. PALMISANO. Let me say to the gentleman that Baltimore City has adopted the quarterly installment plan for three years. That was done in order to help small property owners to pay in small sums so that when the end of the year comes they would not be met with the necessity of getting the whole amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman know of any other city where that method has been adopted?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. It has been adopted in the city of Chicago.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is on account of conditions in that corrupt suburb of Milwaukee. In Milwaukee we have not found it necessary or proper for the payment of taxes quarterly. There has been a deferment of taxes for six months or even a year because of the financial embarrassment of property owners. It is a bill providing for all time, whether the conditions are exigent or not.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I am sorry to destroy the theory of the gentleman concerning the depraved condition of Chicago, and do not care to dissent from him, but that system of the payment of taxes arises under the laws of the State of Illinois at the present time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Anyone who is but slightly acquainted with the conditions of Chicago knows that they have been outrageous, and that the trouble which besets Chicago is due to its corrupt local government.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In answer to the gentleman's query, I might state that the State of Mississippi and the municipalities of that State now for the second year are trying and, I think, quite satisfactorily, the quarterly payment of taxes. The plan follows the payment of income taxes, taxes being collected for the next fiscal year, and I see no reason why the taxpayer should not retain those funds and pay them quarterly rather than that the banks should hold them.

Mr. STAFFORD. In Mississippi, as I understand the gentleman, it is being tried out.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No; it is being tried for the second year.

Mr. STAFFORD. But it is not permanent law; it is a temporary arrangement.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No. I said that we are now trying it for the second year, and it is quite satisfactory.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. My understanding is that the District of Columbia can not borrow money. Most municipalities borrow money in anticipation of the collection of taxes; and in view of the fact that the District of Columbia can not borrow money in anticipation of taxes levied and collected, it seems to me that a quarterly payment might be considered from a different viewpoint than in other municipalities.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will notice in the report that there is no reference whatever as to whether this has been submitted to the Commissioners of the District for their approval.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, the District Commissioners are in entire accord with the bill. A year ago this bill was suggested, and they were not then in accord with it, but since that time they have come to realize that it is going to mean a very much easier method of payment for the people of the District on account of our present conditions, and they have heartily indorsed the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. We can all agree that by reason of the exceptional conditions prevailing they may not oppose it as a temporary measure, but do they approve it as a permanent law?

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman that it is my understanding they are willing to approve it as a permanent law. If conditions change, I presume they would have the right to come to Congress and ask for a change in the law if they so desire.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the other provisions relating to the deferring of payments, those who are asking the privilege will be obliged to pay 6 per cent interest on the remaining amount.

Mrs. NORTON. Yes. I understand that is the prevailing rate of interest.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of the time.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the part of the bill permitting taxes to be paid quarterly. The part of the bill that I object to is requiring the assessor of the District of Columbia to furnish the owners of property in the District with an itemized statement of the taxes that will be due. I have never heard of any municipality, county, or State government being required to furnish itemized statements of taxes in advance of the day of collection. The people generally know when they have to pay taxes. They keep up with it themselves. It is all right to furnish an itemized statement when the owner requests it, and under the present law the assessor of the District is so required to furnish such an itemized statement, but I can not understand why as a condition precedent to the collection of taxes the assessor must first furnish an itemized statement of the amount of taxes due, to the owner of the property.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In the city of New York by leaving your name and address they notify you in advance of the amount due.

Mr. PATMAN. Under the present law they will do so here upon request.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Just by leaving your name and address every year.

Mr. PATMAN. Why make it a requirement that you must first notify the property owners before you can collect the taxes? The District will be in all kinds of lawsuits as a result of it.

Mr. PARKS. Would it not serve the same purpose if the bill said, "on request of the taxpayer"?

Mr. PATMAN. That is the present law.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to accept an amendment to that effect.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. It is not mandatory as I read the bill. Is the gentleman talking about section 5?

Mr. PATMAN. No. The bill says "shall send."

Mr. GOSS. But it reads:

The assessor shall send an itemized statement of such taxes to the owner upon request made by the owner and filed with the assessor not later than—

Mr. PATMAN. Those are the subsequent statements. I am referring to the first part of section 1 where it reads:

The assessor of the District of Columbia shall send to the owner of each family dwelling house occupied by such owner an itemized statement of the taxes payable with respect to such dwelling house not less than 30 days prior to the time when the first installment of real-estate taxes for such fiscal year becomes due and payable.

In other words, in order to collect the taxes, in any delinquent tax proceeding, it would be necessary under the law to first show by the assessor that prior to 30 days he had sent the owner of the property an itemized statement of the taxes due. Unless he could show that, he could not foreclose on the property.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. The assessor at the present time sends an itemized statement to every man who owes the District personal taxes. This is no more than what the District could expect or require of the assessor, to give them an itemized statement of their property.

Mr. PATMAN. If the gentleman will pardon me, my time is very limited. I think this law will cause the District of Columbia additional expense.

Mr. HOLMES. Not a great deal.

Mr. PATMAN. In the first place, there must be additional people employed to send out these notices. Under the law, any person who wants an itemized statement can get it. Why send it to people who do not want it? The chairman of the committee has already agreed to accept the amendment.

Mr. HOLMES. I have no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That each fiscal year, commencing with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, the assessor of the District of Columbia shall send to the owner of each family dwelling house occupied by such owner an itemized statement of the taxes payable with respect to such dwelling house not less than 30 days prior to the time when the first installment of real-estate taxes for such fiscal year becomes due and payable. Such statement shall include all real-estate taxes which are due and payable in such fiscal year and all installments of special assessments which have been levied, charged, or assessed prior to, and are due and payable in, such fiscal year, with respect to the family dwelling house occupied by the owner. Such taxes and assessments shall be payable, at the election of the taxpayer, in four equal installments, in the months of September, December, March, and June, and no interest shall be payable with respect to any such installment unless it is unpaid after the time it is due. Any real-estate tax or special assessment or any installment thereof with respect to any family dwelling house occupied by the owner thereof not included in such statement shall not be due or payable during the fiscal year for which the statement is sent; and any such tax or assessment or any installment thereof otherwise chargeable, assessable, or payable during such fiscal year shall be included in the statement for the next succeeding fiscal year.

Mr. PATMAN. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: Page 1, line 6, after the word "owner," insert the words "upon written application therefor," and on page 1, line 7, after the word "house," insert a period and strike out the words "not less than 30 days prior to the time when the first installment of real-estate taxes for such fiscal year becomes due and payable."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have some difficulty in bringing myself to subscribe to the second substantive proposal of the gentleman's amendment, striking out. It is my opinion that the assessor of the District should be obligated not less than 30 days prior to the time to furnish the respective owners of dwelling houses a statement of the taxes owing.

Mr. PATMAN. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman that he should furnish a statement but should not be restricted to within 30 days. If they want a statement within 30 days, he should be required to furnish it. He should be required to furnish it immediately at any time, without reference to any 30 days' time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman knows that the assessor is not in a position to furnish a statement of taxes at all times.

Mr. PATMAN. I think the gentleman will find we have a very efficient office in the District of Columbia, and that they can furnish such statements immediately. It has been the custom to furnish them immediately.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is absolutely impossible for the assessor of taxes to furnish a statement before the taxes are levied. It takes time. The gentleman is destroying the very purpose of the bill by striking out those words.

Mr. PATMAN. I have no objection to a provision like this going into the bill if it is understood that in the collection of delinquent taxes the District will not have to show first that this statement was furnished 30 days prior to the time the taxes were due. I do not want that as a condition precedent to the collection.

Mr. STAFFORD. The very wording of the clause which the gentleman seeks to strike out, "not less than 30 days," makes the act inoperative. We should give leeway to the administrative officers to furnish a statement of the taxes.

Mr. PATMAN. I realize the force of the gentleman's argument, and I will not insist on that if no other member of the committee desires to insist on it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I ask for a division of the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the latter part of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported as modified?

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: Page 1, line 6, after the word "owner," insert the words "upon written application therefor."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. After the date of enactment of this act no family dwelling house occupied by the owner thereof shall be sold for delinquent personal or real estate taxes or special assessments unless notice has been personally served upon such owner or sent by registered mail, addressed to him at such dwelling house, not less than 30 days prior to the date of such sale.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I wish to inquire of some member of the Committee on the District of Columbia what the prevailing practice is as to requiring notice to be furnished to the owner when taxes are delinquent. This section prescribes that no sale shall take place unless notice has been personally served or sent by registered mail, addressed to him at such dwelling house. Is that the prevailing practice?

Mr. PALMISANO. I think so. It is a sort of summons. In Baltimore there is a law to that effect.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not want Baltimore to be too potent in determining the policy for the District of Columbia. Conditions are entirely different. Baltimore can raise funds to meet current expenses by making loans from the banks. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia can not.

Mr. PALMISANO. I think it is a good law. It is to protect the individual from the forced sale of his property. Sometimes a person may feel he has paid his taxes and then if he does not receive notice, the property is put up and sold without him receiving any notice at all.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. CULLEN, the Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. DOXEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 14392, directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and the amendment thereto to find passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mrs. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11504) authorizing the sale of certain Government property in the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in their discretion, be, and they are hereby, authorized to sell for cash, under such rules and regulations as they may prescribe, lot 801, square 5990, comprising 97 feet, more or less, in rear of 3204 Brothers Place SE., Washington, D. C.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mrs. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF THE REVISED STATUTES

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13378) to amend sections 416 and 417 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentlewoman from New Jersey the effect of striking out $100 and inserting in lieu thereof $500 in line 6, on page 1, of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlewoman will permit, the bill purposes to increase the amount that may be administered without going through the intricate machinery of law.

Mr. BLANTON. That explains the whole situation. I have no objection to the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that an explanation of this item appears further down in the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 416 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia be amended by striking out the word "fifty" where it occurs in said section and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one hundred."

SEC. 2. That section 417 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 417. All property, except perishable property and animals, that shall remain in the custody of the property clerk for the period of six months, with the exception of motor vehicles, which shall be held for a period of three months, without any lawful claimant thereto after having been three times advertised in some daily newspaper of general circulation published in the District of Columbia shall be sold at public auction, and the proceeds of such sale shall be paid into the policemen's fund; and all money that shall remain in his hands for said period of six months shall be so advertised, and if no lawful claimant appear shall be likewise paid into the policemen's fund."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mrs. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMATEUR BOXING

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6292) to prevent professional prize fighting and to authorize amateur boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall in the District of Columbia voluntarily engage in a pugilistic encounter shall be imprisoned for not more than five years. By the term "pugilistic encounter," as herein used, is meant any voluntary fight by blows by means of fists or otherwise, whether with or without gloves, between two or more men for money or anything of value except a suitably inscribed wreath, diploma, banner, badge, medal, or timepiece not exceeding the value of $35, or upon the result of which any money or anything of value is bet or wagered, or to see which an admission fee of more than $2 is directly or indirectly charged.

SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby created for the District of Columbia a boxing commission, to be composed of three members appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, one of whom shall be a member of the police department of the District of Columbia. No person shall be eligible for appointment to membership on the commission unless such person at the time of appointment is and for at least three years prior thereto has been a resident of the District of Columbia. The terms of office of the members of the commission first taking office after the approval of this act shall expire at the end of two years from the date of the approval of this act. A successor to a member of the commission shall be appointed in the same manner as the original members and shall have a term of office expiring two years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. The members of the commission shall receive no compensation for their services. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall furnish to the boxing commission such office space and clerical and other assistance as may be necessary.

(b) Subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the commission shall have power (1) to cooperate with organizations engaged in the promotion and control of amateur boxing; (2) to supervise and regulate amateur boxing within the District of Columbia; and (3) to make such orders, rules, and regulations as the commission deems necessary for carrying out the powers herein conferred upon it.

(c) No person shall hold a boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a permit from the commission, but the commission shall not issue any such permit except to a club, university, college, school, or other organization or institution which the commission finds is interested in the promotion of amateur athletics. Each such permit shall be limited to a period of one day, except that in case of any interscholastic boxing meet or similar contest a permit may be issued for the duration of such meet or contest. No such permit shall be issued to any person unless such person agrees to accord to the commission the right to examine the books of accounts and other records of such person relating to the boxing exhibition for which such permit is issued, and such permit shall so state on its face. A permit may be revoked at any time in the discretion of the commission.

(d) No individual shall engage in any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a license from the commission. Such license shall entitle the licensee to engage in amateur boxing exhibitions in the District of Columbia for the period specified therein, but the commission shall not issue any such license to any individual if the commission finds that such individual has at any time or place engaged in any professional prize fight or in any boxing exhibition for which he received money as compensation or reward, and the commission shall revoke any such license if at any time, after notice and hearing, it makes such finding in respect of the licensee, and may revoke any such license at any time for violation by the licensee of any order, rule, or regulation of the commission, or for other cause.

(e) Any permit or license issued by the board shall not be valid for the purpose of holding or engaging in, respectively, any boxing exhibition which does not conform to the following conditions: (1) Such exhibition may consist of one or more bouts, but no such bout shall continue for more than four rounds; (2) no round shall exceed three minutes; (3) there shall be an interval of one minute between each round and the succeeding round; and (4) each contestant shall use gloves of not less than 8 ounces each in weight.

(f) The commission may charge for permits and for licenses such fees as will, in its opinion, defray the cost of issuance thereof and other necessary expenses of the commission.

(g) Any person who (1) holds any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a permit valid and effective at the time, or (2) engages in any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a license valid and effective at the time, or (3) violates any lawful order, rule, or regulation of the commission shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(h) The term "person," as used in this act, includes individuals, partnerships, corporations, and associations.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mrs. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CODE

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 14204) to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may the bill be read for information?

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of section 653 of the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1901, entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," as amended by the act of Congress approved August 15, 1911, which said provision reads: "Every such company or association shall pay to the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia a sum of money, as tax, equal to 1 per cent of all moneys received from members of policy or certificate holders within the District of Columbia, said tax to be paid on or before the 1st day of March of each year on the amount of such income for the year ending December 31 next preceding," is hereby amended to read:

"Every such company or association shall pay to the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia a sum of money as taxes equal to 1½ per cent of its net premium receipts from business done in the District of Columbia, said taxes to be paid before the 1st day of March of each year on the amount of such income for the year ending December 31 next preceding, in lieu of all other taxes, except taxes upon real estate and any license fees provided for in sections 654 and 655; and upon the failure of any company to pay said taxes before March 1, as aforesaid, the license of said company shall be revoked and a penalty of 8 per cent per month shall be charged against said company which, together with said taxes, shall be collected before said company shall be allowed to resume business."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentlewoman from New Jersey a question. Under the present law the insurance companies pay 1 per cent tax on all receipts, and under the proposed amendment they will pay 1½ per cent on net premiums. Does this bill come from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It was prepared by them and sent to the gentlewoman's committee with the request that she introduce it?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes; I introduced the bill by request.

Mr. BLANTON. And the commissioners are proposing it?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes; they are sponsoring the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentlewoman from New Jersey investigated to find out whether or not this is relieving corporations of a tax that they ought to pay?

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that this measure was referred to the subcommittee of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN], and he is prepared to answer that question.

Mr. HARLAN. The difference, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, is that both sections 650 and 653 apply to premium incomes and are on the same subject. There is an apparent conflict to this extent——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman answer the question I asked as to whether or not it relieves them of present liability and whether or not their tax will be greater or less than it is now?

Mr. HARLAN. It increases the tax to the extent of $100,000 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman sure of that?

Mr. HARLAN. I am absolutely sure of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know where the influence came from that caused the commissioners to be interested in this matter?

Mr. HARLAN. I can answer that if the gentleman will let me continue.

Mr. BLANTON. There are only certain things I want to know, and if the gentleman will answer my questions so that I may get definite answers, I may not take up any time at all on the bill. I want to know what outside influence there was, if any, that caused the commissioners to get interested in this change.

Mr. HARLAN. They want to collect the additional $100,000 a year which, apparently, the insurance companies are willing to pay to avoid future litigation growing out of the conflict in these two sections.

Mr. BLANTON. Then it is the commissioners' idea and not the idea of the insurance companies?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, under reservation of objection, I regard this bill as rather important and I would like to have some explanation of the measure, particularly, as to this phase. Under the substitute amendment it is proposed to relieve these insurance companies of all other taxes except taxes upon real estate.

Mr. HARLAN. And license fees.

Mr. STAFFORD. For this privilege of increasing the tax one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. HARLAN. I will say that at the present time there are no other taxes and the tendency toward insurance companies is not to increase taxes. The effect of this will simply be to carry out what the insurance companies are actually paying at the present time and make both of these sections conform.

Mr. STAFFORD. Further reserving the right to object, how does the rate, as recommended by the committee, conform with the rates as paid in the States by insurance companies privileged to do business in those States?

Mr. HARLAN. It is very similar. The rates in the different States run about this way. I may say a number of them do not go as high as 1½ per cent, but there is this difference in the District of Columbia. Insurance companies pay no fee and are put to no expense in the District of Columbia for their annual examinations, which are made here free, and even though this rate of 1½ per cent is a little higher than in some jurisdictions, the rate is acceptable to the companies.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information as to what the rate is in Ohio or Michigan or New York for doing business along this line?

Mr. HARLAN. I could not state that. At the time we had the hearings on this matter I had a representative of the corporation counsel at the hearing and also a representative of the insurance commissioner's office, and in my statement about the rates being substantially the same throughout the country, I am repeating what was given there by these gentlemen. I have not looked up any particular State and at the moment I can not give the gentleman what Ohio charges.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume the gentleman is in sympathy with my idea that we should not give a preferential rate to insurance companies doing business here so as to invite insurance companies of other States to change their domicile in order to get the protecting arm of the local government.

Mr. HARLAN. There is no chance of that. I may say that section 650, which has been the law under which all insurance companies have been operating in the District and which is the law they all recognize, was passed in 1901. The only purpose of this act is to make section 653 conform to section 650. I think I can give the gentleman the history of this in just a moment. In 1901 these two sections were originally passed in the Code of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may say, parenthetically, that that was one year before I began service here and I am not acquainted with the legislation.

Mr. HARLAN. The history of it is short. I presume it is the only thing the gentleman can not remember. Section 653 as originally passed applied only to assessment life-insurance companies. Then in 1911 it was amended in an effort to make it apply to industrial insurance. The gentleman is familiar with that. The amendment was drawn in such broad terms that instead of being limited to assessment insurance and to industrial insurance, it was drawn so that it might be construed to cover all forms of life insurance. However, the insurance companies have not attempted to take advantage of this until just recently an opinion was asked of the commission, and the corporation counsel handed down an opinion that in all probability section 653 applied to life-insurance companies.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mrs. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF PROPERTY NO LONGER REQUIRED FOR PUBLIC PURPOSES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 14340) authorizing the sale of certain property no longer required for public purposes in the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I have an amendment that I think will be acceptable to the committee. It is line 5, after the word "sale," to insert "at such time," the purpose being to leave it discretionary with the commissioners as to when the property shall be sold. In these times they might not be able to get the purchase price.

Mrs. NORTON. The committee will accept the amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to sell and convey to the highest bidder, at public or private sale, as in their opinion may be most advantageous to the District of Columbia, the old Potomac School property, lot 802 in square 327, containing 5,837 square feet of land, more or less. The proceeds from such sale shall be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5 after the comma following the word "sale," insert the words "and at such time."

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CASTELLOW] five minutes.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, several weeks ago there was some discussion before the House involving, to some extent at least, a consideration of the conditions and practices in the chain gang and penitentiary of Georgia.

It was not my intention to enter into this discussion and I would not except for the fact that I have just received a bit of evidence, rather persuasive, and in consideration of its high character and unprejudiced source should be convincing. It is in the form of a letter written by a man who has honored with his services as governor the splendid State of Michigan, but who resides at present in Georgia, the Hon. Chase S. Osborn. I quote from his letter as it appeared in the Wiregrass Farmer, a newspaper published in Ashburn, Ga.

Chase S. Osborn, former Governor of Michigan, in a recent letter to Gov. William A. Comstock, of Michigan, said: "There is no more reason to criticize the prison system in Georgia than in Michigan.

"For many years I have frequently visited Georgia chain-gang camps. I have gone especially on Sunday to hold services. I have observed the chain-gang system in all of its applied connections. In my opinion it is far better than keeping men at indoor labor. The only time there has been any roughness is where incorrigibles are concerned. The men are well fed, comfortably housed, and almost never manacled in the daytime. When camps are moving from place to place to do road work they do convey prisoners in portable cells which look like cages. There is no more reason to criticize the system in Georgia than in Michigan. Now and then there are human abuses in all the States.

"No man e'er felt the halter draw,
With good opinion of the law."

Mr. Osborn also inclosed a copy of a letter addressed to Patrick O'Brien, attorney general of Michigan, in which he added:

I have known convicts to commit crime so as to return to the chain gang where life for them has been more comfortable than so-called freedom.

The treatment of desperate criminals is perhaps kindlier in Georgia than in Michigan. Georgia compares with any State in the Union in the treatment of its prisoners. This may not be saying a great deal, but it does mean that Georgia ought not to be singled out in its penalogical policy. The convicts are not overworked. In the daytime they are in the pleasant open air and are well fed. At night they are comfortably housed.

Except for the fact that this distinguished gentleman has come to reside among us he, too, might have shared the erroneous idea that a State which contributed Button Gwinnett, Lyman Hall, and George Walton in the early days of our history to the cause of liberty and later did its part in formulating that matchless document, the Constitution of the United States, had so forgotten its traditions and become so negligent of its duty to civilization as to play the rôle of an oppressor of the weak and a torturer of the unfortunate. Though the extent of our country is great and its inhabitants numerous, we have a common interest and cherish a common hope. In order that these may be promoted it behooves every State to cooperate for the enforcement of the law for the promotion of commerce and the reestablishment of prosperity within our borders. This is a herculean task, impossible of attainment without the hearty cooperation of a united people. It is, therefore, imperative that each State lend its support to the accomplishment of this purpose, thereby contributing as much as possible to a common cause. [Applause.]

The amendment of Mr. STAFFORD was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address delivered by our colleague the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] at Nashville, Tenn., on Abraham Lincoln.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADDRESS OF HON. J. WILL TAYLOR, OF TENNESSEE, AT THE ANNUAL LINCOLN DAY BANQUET, MAXWELL HOUSE, NASHVILLE, TENN., FEBRUARY 11, 1933

Mr. Chairman and fellow Republicans, this is our fourth consecutive observance of the anniversary of the birth of the founder of our party, and it is, indeed, encouraging to note such a large attendance and such enthusiasm, despite the intemperate weather and the fact that we have just passed through the greatest ordeal in our party's entire history. Our heads may be bloody, my friends, but thank God "they are unbowed." We fought a clean fight, we kept faith with the American people, and our escutcheon is free from the stain of deception or misrepresentation.

We went before the country on a record of 12 years of honest, arduous, and constructive service, without apologies and without any effort to resort to the art of hocus-pocus or demagoguery. Our standard bearers courageously and unflinchingly faced the economic situation and demonstrated to those who were not distraught by partisan bias or hysteria that the Republican Party has met every exigency with fortitude and ability and has dealt with them with practical statesmanship instead of by art of legerdemain.

In my previous addresses on similar occasions I have devoted the major part of my remarks to our immortal patron saint. I shall not do so on this occasion, because this commanding figure in the world's history needs no encomiast. The marvelous and magnificent work of his heart and hand and brain, the innumerable volumes that have been written chronicling his imposing greatness, and the tons of bronze and marble statuary throughout the earth amply attest his place in history.

My remarks to-night will be confined to an effort to beguile you from the dismal wreckage of the last campaign to arouse your party interest and morale, and shall be in the nature of an exhortation to you to return to your tents and gird yourselves for the battle of the future.

Of course, we have suffered a most humiliating defeat. We were smitten "hip and thigh," as it were, by the enemy; but we should not be downcast or discouraged. There are worse things than defeat, my friends. Craven surrender and supine cowardice are far more dishonorable.

Every fair-minded person knows that extraordinary economic conditions, plus a campaign of wholesale misrepresentation and demagoguery of a type and magnitude hitherto unknown in this country caused our defeat. Conditions which every one knows were not of our making and for which we could not honestly be charged with responsibility, and which, as a matter of fact, had their origin in a Democratic administration, were so manipulated and exaggerated and dramatized by our opposition as to make it impossible for us to win. In addition to these unfair and reprehensible tactics on the part of our adversaries, they literally promised the earth and "the fullness thereof," and unfortunately the American people have been famous for their credulity and gullibility. Many years ago that great circus wizard, P. T. Barnum, discovered this trait in American character and cashed in on it; but even Barnum in his palmiest days was a piker compared with some of the Democratic spellbinders of the last campaign.

But, my friends, the day of reckoning is at hand and it is now up to these political Houdinis to deliver. They boasted that their miracle man would immediately devise means to end unemployment in this country. God knows that in his efforts to this end Mr. Roosevelt shall have the unqualified sympathy and support of every patriotic American citizen; and yet, what concrete plan has he or his party suggested up to this good hour to bring about this much-desired objective?

They sold the country on the theory that most, if not all, of our ills are attributable to the Smoot-Hawley tariff law; and yet since the election not one of them has had the courage to advocate a downward revision of existing tariff schedules. In the face of their campaign declaration for free trade or its equivalent we recently beheld the spectacle of a Congress controlled by Democrats championing and passing a bill in the House of Representatives which absolutely places an embargo on many of our leading commodities. Verily, verily, I say unto you, the sophists of olden times certainly had nothing on these modern exponents of the gentle art of hokum and ballyhoo.

Notwithstanding the fact that that great idol of the Democratic Party, Andrew Jackson, recognized the logic of an effective and adequate protective tariff, the Democrats of to-day, who never tire singing the praises of Old Hickory, don't seem to have profited very much by the vigorous stand of this rugged old statesman on this vital American doctrine. Speaking in the United States Senate, of which he was a distinguished Member more than a hundred years ago, this great Tennessean, in discussing a tariff measure, thundered as follows: "It is time, sir, we should become a little more Americanized and, instead of feeding the paupers of England, feed our own people, or else in a short time we will be paupers ourselves."

But, Mr. Chairman, the man whose memory we revere to-night, in his usual quaint and homely style, gave perhaps the best example of the beneficence of a protective tariff. Being interrogated on the subject of tariffs, Abraham Lincoln is said to have replied that he knew very little about the tariff, but that he knew enough to know that when we bought steel rails abroad the foreigner had the money and we had the rails; but when we bought steel rails in America this country had the rails and the money also.

My friends, the necessity for a virile protective tariff was never more obvious than it is to-day, and the Democratic Party, with characteristic delinquency, is just beginning to react to the problem. Due to depreciated currencies in European and Asiatic countries, along with starvation wages paid their labor, our tariff wall has been practically nullified and destroyed. It is now generally known that unless immediate steps are taken to restore our tariff barriers, our country will become the dumping ground of cheap goods manufactured in foreign lands, which will inevitably result in the closing of thousands of American factories and the swelling of our already tremendous unemployed columns. Mr. Owen D. Young, that gallant knight of Democracy, declared during the campaign that the tariff was a dead issue and should be so considered. Recently, however, I understand that Mr. Young has been abruptly disillusioned, since the General Electric, of which he is the guiding spirit, has been forced to close two of its largest plants due to the importation of a flood of electric bulbs from Japan, where the yen has depreciated almost half in value and where labor can be had for 10 or 15 cents a day.

American financiers were horrified sometime ago when England and a number of other European countries went off the gold standard. Our financiers wondered why this drastic step was taken. But in the light of recent developments the reason is very apparent. It has been established that these nations went off the gold standard and debased their currency with the deliberate purpose of subverting and circumventing American tariff laws, and the success of the conspiracy is attested by the daily closing of American industries and incident idle machinery, smokeless stacks, and increased numbers of unemployed.

It seems to me that it ought to be apparent to everybody—even to "the wayfaring man, though he be a fool"—that in the face of foreign depreciated currencies, the Ottawa agreement between England and her dependencies, the quota system of France and the trade bars and restrictions of practically all of the European countries, in self-defense Uncle Sam must not only rebuild his tariff walls but must embark on a 100 per cent "buy American" policy.

In the Democratic convention which met in Chicago last spring, a platform was adopted emphatically declaring against a cancellation or reduction of the debts owed us by foreign governments, and Democratic orators during the campaign employed this plank in their platform with great facility and grandiloquence. These debts were negotiated by a Democratic administration, a large part of the loans being made without Congressional sanction and after the war was over. These obligations were contracted out of money derived from the sale of Liberty bonds to a confiding and patriotic American public, these bonds being outstanding to-day as a charge against our Federal Treasury.

What's going to become of these foreign obligations? Every taxpayer in the United States is interested and has a right to make this inquiry, because their cancellation or reduction means a corresponding burden upon the backs of an already overloaded taxpaying public.

Recently three or four of the debtor nations, with considerable reluctance, met their installments to Uncle Sam, but a number of others, including France, refused to meet their obligations, and in effect defaulted. Think of France refusing to pay her installment of $19,000,000 on the ground that she could not afford it, and a few days later loaning to Austria $14,000,000. Appropos of this action of the French Republic, one of her leading newspapers made this remarkable and significant comment: "Did we refuse our millions to the United States, to whom we owed something, if only gratitude, to give them to Austria, to whom we owed nothing except the shells she fired at us during the World War?"

My friends, I believe patriotism should always take precedence over partisanship. I am an American before I am a Republican. I want to see Mr. Roosevelt succeed in all of his laudable and legitimate undertakings, and I shall be the last person to throw any obstacles in his way. However, there is a feeling throughout the Nation that somebody or some influence, under cover and in some sinister and mysterious manner, is trying to juggle our foreign debts. European diplomats are very astute and clever, and it is said they do not stand back on scruples when the welfare of their country is at stake. Early in the Roosevelt administration a debt conference has already been scheduled. These foreign debtors are not sending their emissaries here to perform an idle or perfunctory ceremony. They expect results either in the form of outright cancellation, reduction, or indefinite suspension. Certainly it is perfectly proper for our Government to extend the courtesy of a conference to those debtor nations that had the honesty and the moral perspicuity to meet their obligations, but I think it amounts to downright stultification if we extend the same consideration to those nations now in default. The whole country is anxiously waiting to see if Mr. Roosevelt will do this.

Mr. Chairman, America stood aghast a few days ago when Mr. Roosevelt invited the Hon. Sir Ronald Lindsay, ambassador of Great Britain, for a conference at the Nation's temporary capital at Warm Springs, Ga. Many American people are wondering if Mr. Roosevelt is trying to emulate extraordinary and melancholy example of his distinguished predecessor, Mr. Wilson, who assayed the rôle of both President and ambassador. The American people will not soon forget what happened at Versailles in 1919, when President Wilson, with a gorgeous entourage, and as his own self-appointed ambassador, went to France and undertook to commit this country to the unholy and nefarious League of Nations. With bated breath the American people are wondering if Mr. Roosevelt is undertaking a similar stunt.

Mr. Chairman, the ethics of international diplomacy are quite well defined. Diplomatic correspondence and conversation are supposed to be carried on through chancelleries and departments of state with the knowledge and sanction of the executive. What would you think of our minister to the great Court of St. James taking up a diplomatic matter direct with King George, to the exclusion of the Hon. Ramsay McDonald? Of course, no one can criticize Ambassador Lindsay. He was invited by our President elect to our "southern capital," and it would have been a grave breach of the proprieties had he declined. It is interesting to note, however, that just as soon as the conference had concluded at Warm Springs the British ambassador took the first boat for London. We wonder just what message he transmitted from our President elect to His Majesty King George.

Stripped of its persiflage and its trappings, the naked proposition is this, Shall this eleven billion indebtedness be transferred from the shoulders of England, France, Italy, and the other debtor nations to the backs of the American taxpayer?

I do not particularly censure these debtor nations for their devious maneuvers in attempting to escape this burden if they can. This is simply human nature. Charity begins at home, and self-preservation is the first law of creation. Their attitude, however, reminds me of the story of the white man and the negro who went hunting. They killed a wild turkey and a buzzard, and at the end of the hunt they sat down to divide the spoils of the chase. The white man said nonchalantly: "Well, Rastus, I want to be perfectly fair with you. I'll take the turkey and you can have the buzzard, or you can have the buzzard and I'll take the turkey." Rastus, somewhat confused, said: "How's that, white folks?" The white man said again: "I'll take the turkey and you can have the buzzard, or you can have the buzzard and I'll take the turkey." After the proposition had been repeated several times, old Rastus finally said: "See here, white folks, how comes you never have said turkey to me?"

Mr. Chairman, I am among those Americans who contend and shall insist that these debtor nations say "turkey" to Uncle Sam at least half of the time.

And now, my friends, I desire to say in conclusion that I have thoroughly enjoyed every moment of this occasion. I always feel that I am a better Republican after attending a Lincoln dinner and after associating with those who never tire of paying tribute to the memory of our illustrious dead. Four times I have journeyed over 700 miles to pay my homage and respect to this sentiment, and in the interest of party solidarity and party success I want to see these annual ceremonies continued.

I would like to remain over a few days and visit with you and plan with you our future course of action, but on next Monday a tariff measure will come up in the House, and I want to be on hand to cast another vote for American labor, American industry, and American independence. I thank you.

MERGER OF STREET-RAILWAY CORPORATIONS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate Joint Resolution 248, to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 14, 1933, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from New Jersey calls up Senate Joint Resolution 248 and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 248

Resolved, etc., That paragraph "Second" of the preamble of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 14, 1933, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Second. The new company shall be incorporated under the provisions of Subchapter IV of Chapter XVIII of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia and pursuant to an act of Congress entitled 'An act to permit the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' approved March 4, 1925, with power subject to the approval of the Public Utilities Commission to acquire, construct, own, and operate directly transit properties within the District of Columbia and either directly or through subsidiaries in adjacent States, including the power to acquire, own, and operate the properties to be conveyed to the new company in accordance with this agreement, and to acquire and own the stock and/or bonds of said companies and of any other company or companies engaged in the transportation of passengers by street railway or bus in the District of Columbia and adjacent States with the power to mortgage its property, rights, and franchises, and to conduct such other activities as may be useful or necessary in connection with or incident to the foregoing purposes, including the power to buy, sell, hold, own, and convey real estate within and without the District of Columbia. Said new company when incorporated shall become and remain subject in all respects to regulation by the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia or its successors to the extent of the jurisdiction now or hereafter vested in it or them by law over corporations engaged in the transportation of passengers by street railway or bus within the District of Columbia: Provided, That before they are recorded, the articles of incorporation and/or any amendments thereto shall be approved by the Public Utilities Commission."

SEC. 2. That Congress hereby expressly reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this resolution.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have called attention several times to the fact that the charters of both of these street-railway companies provide that they shall never charge the people of Washington more than 5 cents car fare. There was a time when they obeyed those charter provisions. There was a time when they sold six tickets for a quarter; and when they were selling six tickets for a quarter and obeying their charter provisions they were making money. Every car that was sent out of the barn was filled up most of the time before it ever reached its other terminus and people were hanging onto straps in the cars. I have seen carload after carload pass down the Avenue so full that there was not standing room in them, and so have others who have been here for a long time.

A bill was pending before the Zihlman committee—I do not know whether I ought to mention the Zihlman committee because the reputation of the District Committee has improved wonderfully in the last few years—to require those street-railway companies to stay within their charter provisions and to go back to a 5-cent fare. The street-railway companies came there and fought the bill and killed it, and killed it year after year. We told them then, when they had their general attorneys present, as well as the presidents of their companies and some of their big stockholders, that if they just had business sense enough to quit charging the people of Washington 8 cents, and 7½ cents when they bought tokens, and would go back to a 5-cent fare with six tokens for a quarter, they would double their revenue; and we told them further that if they did not do it, sooner or later, they would find themselves losing business here in Washington, and that prediction has come true. I got on one of the street cars the other night at the House Office Building and there was not a soul on it except the motorman and the conductor. I rode all the way to the Raleigh Hotel on Pennsylvania Avenue before another passenger got on the car.

It is because they have been mulcting the people here with a 7½-cent car fare that the people of Washington quit riding the street cars and have gone to the taxicab.

That is the reason you find such a fight being made on cheap taxicab service. Four women, working in a department, or four men, for that matter, although I mention the women, because it is of more interest to them, can get in a taxicab at their homes and go to their offices to work and it costs them 20 cents, 5 cents each, and they can get a taxicab after they quit work to take them to their homes for 5 cents apiece. That is the reason they have quit riding on these street cars at 7½ cents. They can get a taxicab to take them right to their homes from their place of work for less money. Any person on earth with a grain of common business sense here in the city of Washington, except the management of these street-railway companies, can see at a glance that if they would go back to their charter provisions and grant a 5-cent fare as they ought to do, with six tokens for a quarter as they used to, they would double and treble their present patronage, and thereby increase, almost double, their present income. Why they do not do that, and why they can not see that, I do not understand.

But I rose really to talk about the taxicab situation here in the city of Washington. There are several thousand taxicabs in Washington, and there are 1,500 ex-service men who for the last year and a half have been driving taxicabs, who have been making enough to support their families, not in luxury, but to support them, to furnish a roof over their heads, something that they did not have for two or three years before that time, and to furnish their wives and little children with food and clothing, sufficient to keep them from suffering. Does not that mean something?

However, there is a deplorable situation existing here as to accidents. I want you to bear in mind that I am one of those who have been fighting for these independent taxicabs. I am one of those who believe that no monopoly like the old Black and White or the Yellow taxicabs should be permitted to run men off the streets and keep them from making an honest living.

We have a deplorable situation here with several thousand taxicab drivers. Many of them are irresponsible. Not a single move has been made here to require them to protect the safety of the riding public with liability insurance.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am in entire sympathy with the gentleman's position, and I think it is entirely logical. How do these street-railway companies escape these charter obligations?

Mr. BLANTON. The authorities here permit them to do so. I went to the Public Utilities Commission, to Chairman Patrick, and I said to him, "General, why don't you require taxicabs to take out liability insurance?" He said that he could not do it without an act of Congress. He said he had to have an act of Congress to give him authority to do it. I do not believe that, because I think that he has authority now to do it, but he will not exert that authority without an act of Congress.

I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN], the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO], and the chairman of the District Committee the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] will not let 10 days pass before they report a proper bill from their committee and pass it which will give the Utilities Commission the power and authority to require proper liability insurance on every taxicab that operates in the District of Columbia.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. I will be glad to grant a hearing to the gentleman on any bill he desires to submit.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want a hearing. I am not going to spend my time at any such hearing. I am too busy. It ought to appeal to the committee just as it appeals to me. If they think it is proper or right, all my good friend has to do is to phone down and have the commissioners send up a proper bill, and it could be passed with the help of these gentlemen in about two hours' time.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mrs. NORTON. I understood that power was entirely in the hands of the Public Utilities Commission.

Mr. BLANTON. But General Patrick says he has not the power. He says the corporation counsel has told him he has not the authority. He wants to do it. The commissioners want to do it, but they say they need a bill from Congress.

Permit me to call attention to another thing. Do you know there is not a taxicab company in the city that is responsible? Name one.

Mrs. NORTON. The Diamond, I think, is.

Mr. BLANTON. Possibly the Diamond is.

Mrs. NORTON. I understand they are.

Mr. BLANTON. That is just one. How about the Black and White, and Yellow? They are not. There are some Members of Congress who have good, valid claims against them who can not collect a dollar. They have been threatening to go into bankruptcy whenever they start to push their claims. I am informed there is not a single one in Washington, except possibly the Diamond, upon which you could collect a $5,000 judgment. I am not sure. Possibly the Diamond Co. may be, but is it not a terrible situation when there are about 4,000 taxicabs in the District of Columbia, many of them operated by irresponsible people, that there is only one company that is responsible?

Let us admit the Diamond Co. is responsible, for the sake of the argument. Why should not the rest of them be responsible? Why should not everyone that operates be responsible, so that if they run over some little child or some old man or some decrepit woman they can be made to pay for it? They ought to be made to pay for it. So why do we not give proper authority to the Public Utilities Commission? Let me tell you what happened the other day. This matter appealed so to our subcommittee which was preparing the bill on the District of Columbia appropriations that the subcommittee agreed to require that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. We had a proper amendment prepared in the general counsel's office. We agreed on such an amendment in the subcommittee and we agreed we would put it in the bill, to authorize General Patrick, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, to provide for certain liability insurance for every taxicab. It came out in the papers, and the taxicabs made such a hue and cry and the papers began to fight it before it ever got started, and they killed it. They brought so much pressure to bear on that question that that provision was taken out of the bill. Why? Because the taxicab companies did not want it. Do you know there are three Members right now who have just claims amounting to $5,000 against these taxicabs and they can not collect a 5-cent piece? Did you know that? Their claims are on account of serious accidents, and they can not collect a 5-cent piece. Did you know that? There are accidents happening every day caused by irresponsible cab drivers. They say it will put some of them off of the streets if we require insurance. Well, what if it does? I want cheap taxicab service, but I want safe taxicab service first for the people. I want that service to be safe so that it does not threaten and menace the life of every little child and every old woman and every decrepit old man in the District. If it will put them off the streets, let them be put off. Make them give a proper liability bond before they can drive on the streets of the National Capital and cripple and maim and murder innocent people.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield. Is the gentleman going to help us?

Mr. HARLAN. I am going to do the best I can, but there are a number of objections that I do not think the gentleman from Texas has thought about. In the first place, in the last appropriation bill the gentleman from Texas introduced an amendment preventing the District Commissioners from compelling taxicabs to adopt a reasonable rate that would pay them to put in meters.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, wait a moment. I want to answer that first.

Mr. HARLAN. I have not come to the point of my question yet.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I want to answer that first. In the first place, I did not introduce that amendment. In the second place, it was introduced by the chairman of the committee the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. In the third place, it was adopted unanimously by the House, and in the fourth place, the only thing on earth it did was to prevent General Patrick from putting a meter system in Washington that would put the Black and White, and Diamond, and Yellow monopolies on the streets, and run out of business every other taxicab operator, and permit the Black and White, and Yellow, and Diamonds to charge, under their meters, for going from here to the Washington or the Raleigh or the Willard Hotel $1.50 instead of 20 cents. And we would not stand for it. That, however, does not keep us from providing for the public a safe, proper, liability policy, which does not cost them very much.

I am forced to keep two cars here—one a small work car and one for my constituents. I carry liability insurance on both of them. I think the insurance on my Cadillac car costs $85 a year and on my Ford car it costs $24 a year. If either one of my cars hurts a person, regardless of my personal responsibility, my policy protects him. I would not let a car of mine be driven anywhere that was not covered by proper liability insurance to protect an individual should he be hurt by it.

In the District of Columbia we ought to require every taxicab to be properly insured. The cost of this insurance would not be so very much. I hope the committee will give favorable consideration to this suggestion.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman from New Jersey yield me five minutes?

Mrs. NORTON. I shall be pleased to. I wish to announce at this time that we have a great many bills to be considered. I do not wish to be considered arbitrary but I shall be compelled to object to further requests for time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Were it not for the conversion of the gentleman from Texas to the need of some regulation of the taxicab situation in the District of Columbia, I would not arise at this moment to take the time to discuss the taxicab situation.

I believe even the person most casually acquainted with the taxicab situation here will agree that there is need of regulation. The gentleman from Texas advocates placing them under surety liability. This is not sufficient. This will not curtail to any extent the many taxicabs that are now floating on the public highways without regulation.

I think the gentleman from Ohio should be commended in his efforts at the last session of Congress to try to inaugurate the meter system applicable to all taxicabs in operation in the city.

Further, as to the question of surety liability, I may acquaint the gentlewoman from New Jersey, if she wishes to occupy any time in its consideration in the few remaining days of the session, with the fact that in the last Congress the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED] introduced a bill placing all taxicabs under surety liability. It was not brought up for consideration. There is urgent need for more regulation than simply placing them under surety liability. They should be placed under the control of the Utilities Commission. The Public Utilities Commission should have control of the operation of the taxicabs. We should not let every Tom, Dick, and Harry run cabs, and these names are applicable to the operators of the many, many taxicabs now in operation in Washington. There is no regulation of them to-day. They are preoccupying the thoroughfares of the city, mowing down life recklessly without any regard to the human equation. There is urgent need now to have them placed under some regulation of the Utilities Commission.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mrs. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

GEORGE N. NICHOLSON

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13867) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to reappoint George N. Nicholson in the police department of said District, and ask that a similar Senate bill (S. 5289) be substituted therefor, and ask that the Senate bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered, in their discretion, to reappoint George N. Nicholson as a member of the Metropolitan police department of the District of Columbia, and his compensation to commence from the date of such reappointment, no pay or compensation to be paid the said George N. Nicholson from the date of his dismissal from the Metropolitan police department to the date of any such reappointment.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mrs. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

TEACHERS' SALARIES

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 12595) to amend the teachers' salary act of the District of Columbia, approved June 4, 1924, as amended, in relation to establishing the Wilson and Miner Teachers Colleges on a basis comparable with recognized standards for accredited institutions of like kind; to raising the trade or vocational schools to the level of junior high schools, and for other purposes, and ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentlewoman explain the real purpose of the bill? It is a rather lengthy bill and fixes the respective salaries of various teachers, principals, librarians, and the like. Wherein does it change existing law?

I may say, and I do not say this in any desire to criticize, that nearly every bill that has been presented for consideration here to-day is vacuous so far as containing any recommendation from the District Commissioners. The Members of the House, without making specific inquiry in each instance, do not know the attitude of the District Commissioners with regard to the respective measures.

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I introduced this bill at the request of the Commissioners of the District; and I may further say that in every instance I have submitted our bills to the commissioners to get their reports, and when the report has been against the bill I have not submitted the bill to the House. I have been very careful about this.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may say to the gentlewoman from New Jersey that it has been customary for the clerk of the committee making these reports to append thereto the letter containing the views of the commissioners.

A moment ago we had up the question of changing the taxing policy of the District of Columbia, but there was nothing in the report to show the views of the commissioners in respect thereto, and their views were not developed until we got into the discussion of the bill.

In this case there is nothing to show what the views of the Commissioners of the District are.

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that this bill was introduced at the request of the Commissioners of the District. Therefore, of necessity, they must approve the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; but those communications from the commissioners usually contain an argument that is influential in shaping the opinion of the House on various legislation.

Mrs. NORTON. I think if the gentleman will consult the report he will find that there is contained therein indirect approval by the commissioners. They referred the bill to the board of education, who in turn submitted approval to this committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. What change is made in the bill?

Mrs. NORTON. As I understand this bill, its purpose is to bring these business high schools up to the level of the junior high schools; it is simply conforming to the accepted thought of the school system in practically every large community in the country.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are we to understand that the present so-called teachers colleges are now being administered under different laws than those which now apply to our junior high schools, so far as salaries are concerned?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes; that is my understanding; and this bill is intended to bring them up to the same level with the junior high schools of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are the principals in these teachers colleges under civil service?

Mrs. NORTON. I do not know.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. Section 13 states:

The appointments, assignments, and transfers of teachers, principals, and presidents authorized in this act shall be made in accordance with the act approved June 20, 1906.

Does that take these teachers out of civil service?

Mrs. NORTON. I do not think so. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. GASQUE] held hearings on this bill, and it is most unfortunate that he is not here to-day, as he could probably answer all questions much better than I.

Mr. GOSS. Are you familiar with Public, No. 254? That is in section 13. My only point is whether they are now under civil service.

Mrs. NORTON. I understand that that has to do solely with the teachers' salaries.

Mr. GOSS. It says it has to do only with salaries and not the qualifications.

Mrs. NORTON. That is my understanding.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, as this relates to the District and every one of the commissioners favors it, I am not going to offer any opposition to its consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it is the purpose of this act to establish the Wilson and Miner Teachers Colleges in accordance with recognized standards for accredited institutions of like kind, as to salary schedule, library staff, library facilities, and the secretarial and clerical staff of the central office; to raise the trade or vocational schools from the present elementary-school level to the rank of junior high schools, as to salary schedule; and to provide other necessary legislation relating thereto.

SEC. 2. That on and after July 1, 1932, the salaries of teachers and presidents of the Wilson and the Miner Teachers Colleges shall be as follows:

CLASS 3—INSTRUCTORS

Group A. A basic salary of $1,800 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for 10 years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

Group B. A basic salary of $2,900 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $3,200 per year is reached.

CLASS 11—ASSISTANT PROFESSORS

A basic salary of $3,200 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for five years, or until a maximum salary of $3,700 per year is reached.

CLASS 12—PROFESSORS

A basic salary of $4,000 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for five years, or until a maximum salary of $4,500 per year is reached.

PRESIDENTS

A basic salary of $5,000 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $200 for five years, or until a maximum salary of $6,000 per year is reached.

SEC. 3. That on and after July 1, 1932, the salaries of teachers and principals of the trade or vocational schools shall be as follows:

CLASS 1—TEACHERS

Group A. A basic salary of $1,400 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for eight years, or until a maximum salary of $2,200 per year is reached.

Group B. A basic salary of $2,300 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $2,600 per year is reached.

CLASS 2—TEACHERS

Group A. A basic salary of $1,600 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for eight years, or until a maximum salary of $2,400 per year is reached.

Group B. A basic salary of $2,500 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

Group C. A basic salary of $1,800 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for 10 years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

Group D. A basic salary of $2,900 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $3,200 per year is reached.

CLASS 8—PRINCIPALS

A basic salary of $3,500 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for five years, or until a maximum salary of $4,000 per year is reached.

SEC. 4. That on and after July 1, 1932, the salaries of librarians in the teachers college shall be as follows:

CHIEF LIBRARIAN

A basic salary of $3,200 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for five years, or until a maximum salary of $3,700 per year is reached.

ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN

A basic salary of $1,800 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for 10 years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

LIBRARY ASSISTANTS

A basic salary of $1,400 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for eight years, of until a maximum salary of $2,200 per year is reached.

SEC. 5. That the board of education is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to classify and assign the teachers and presidents in the service in the teachers colleges on July 1, 1932, to the salary classes and positions in the foregoing salary schedule for said teachers colleges, in accordance with such rules as the board of education may prescribe, and also to classify and assign the teachers and principals in the service in trade or vocational schools on July 1, 1932, to the salary classes and positions in the foregoing salary schedule for said trade or vocational schools in accordance with such rules as the Board of Education may prescribe.

SEC. 6. That the Board of Education is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to establish such new positions in the teachers colleges, in addition to those hereinbefore specified, as may be considered necessary by the Board of Education for the proper operation of the teachers colleges and to assign any such new position to one of the salary classes hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 7. That the Board of Education is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to employ in the teachers colleges, under and within appropriations made by Congress, such part-time employees in addition to the regular faculty as may be considered necessary by the Board of Education for the proper operation of the teachers colleges; and to establish the qualifications, terms of service, and salaries to be paid such part-time employees.

SEC. 8. Professors and assistant professors are hereby classified as teachers, and their salaries shall be paid in 10 monthly installments as provided in Public Act No. 139, Sixtieth Congress, approved May 26, 1908.

SEC. 9. The Board of Education is hereby authorized to confer appropriate degrees on those persons who, in the judgment of the respective faculties and the Board of Education, satisfactorily complete the prescribed course of study in the Wilson and Miner Teachers Colleges.

SEC. 10. That the Board of Education is hereby authorized to appoint, in the manner prescribed by law, the necessary stenographic and clerical staff in the central office of the Wilson and the Miner Teachers Colleges, in accordance with at least the minimum standards established for accredited teachers colleges.

SEC. 11. That the Board of Education shall submit annually to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia estimates of appropriations necessary to maintain the libraries and the stenographic and clerical staff in the Wilson and Miner Teachers Colleges, at least at the minimum standards established for accredited teachers colleges.

SEC. 12. That the Board of Education is authorized and empowered to establish occupational schools on the elementary-school level for pupils not prepared to pursue vocational courses in the trade or vocational schools; and also to carry on trade or vocational courses on the senior high-school level or in senior high schools.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word to call attention to the authority vested with the Board of Education by section 12. Is it intended by this section to allow the Board of Education to establish such occupational schools as they may deem needed?

Mrs. NORTON. I believe that is the intention.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not sufficiently versed with the condition of our school system here to know whether there are any occupational schools in the District of Columbia. I question whether here in the capital, where we do not put a premium on industries or trades, there would be need of occupational schools.

Mrs. NORTON. We have such a school here in the District of Columbia—the McKinley Technical School.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is not really an occupational school. That is a manual training school and there are many manual training schools throughout the country, but an occupational school, as I understand the term, is a school where they teach the youth trades and the like. They are usually schools which are given over to instruction of children after their work hours, sometimes prescribing one day every week when they are to be employed in such occupational training as printing, plumbing, and the like. I know in my home city we have a very large occupational school attended by the thousands. I was not acquainted, from following the District of Columbia appropriation bills, with any school similar to this here in the District. I suppose the purpose of this section is to authorize the Board of Education to establish such an occupational school.

Mrs. NORTON. I think it is the intention to authorize such a school. It has been found necessary, I understand, here in the District.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment merely for the purpose of asking some questions to get the legislative intent with respect to these basic salaries. For instance, on page 2, line 19, in providing basic salary for professors, the basic salary is fixed at $4,000 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 per year for five years. To get the legislative intent in the RECORD, it is understood that, to get the benefit of this $100 per year, they start in at a basic salary of $4,000 and must teach one year before they are entitled to another $100.

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In other words, before they can get this $500 additional they must teach five years from the date this bill becomes law.

Mrs. NORTON. That is my understanding of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. They can not compute their years of teaching which they have had prior to the enactment of this bill as increasing their basic salary.

Mrs. NORTON. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. This is true with respect to all the other teachers and true with respect to the president, where the basic salary is fixed at $5,000 per year with an annual increase of $200 for five years. He must act as president for five years after this bill becomes law before he is entitled to this maximum salary.

Mrs. NORTON. That is my understanding of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Further, to get the legislative intent, with regard to the librarians, we provide for a chief librarian at $3,200, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for five years, making the maximum $3,700. We provide for assistant librarian at $1,800 with an annual increase of $100 for 10 years, making the maximum salary $2,800 a year. We provide for other library assistants, with a basic salary of $1,400, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for eight years, making a maximum salary of $2,200. In order to express the legislative intent here, it is understood that in passing these bills they must serve these extra years before they get these extra allowances and they can not compute their previous service as librarians anywhere in getting these increases. This is understood, is it not?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not true that the sum of $3,700 a year is a pretty high salary for the librarian of a school?

Mrs. NORTON. I think it conforms with the salaries in other cities of the same size.

Mr. BLANTON. I have made some investigation of similar salaries that are paid all over the United States. Does the gentlewoman from New Jersey realize that there are many librarians serving in Carnegie libraries in cities for $1,800 and less a year?

Mrs. NORTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLACK. And they are generally considered to be underpaid.

Mr. BLANTON. Some of the best women in the world are serving as librarians in Carnegie libraries in the large cities. If you can get a splendid woman who is trained as a librarian to serve as a librarian in a Carnegie library for $1,800, why should you pay a librarian in one of these schools here $3,700 a year, and this is just one of the many similar schools here in Washington.

Mr. BLACK. Generally speaking, I think it is a shame the way the librarians of the country have been treated. There is no finer type of mind needed than that required of a librarian, to do selective work in helping the readers and students, and it is a crime that they are so underpaid. However, I agree with the gentleman on the general proposition that if this is the schedule generally we should not go above it.

Mr. BLANTON. I doubt the wisdom of making these salaries as large as they are. I am against it. I want my friend from New York and the gentlewoman from New Jersey to go to the Congressional Library, one of the greatest libraries in the world, and investigate the measly little starvation salaries that most of the splendid employees of that institution work for now.

Mr. BLACK. We agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. BLANTON. I know some splendid women who have been working in that library for a number of years who are not now getting more than $1,200 a year. When we permit this in the Congressional Library, I think it is out of line to pay the librarians in one of these schools as much as $3,700 a year.

Mrs. NORTON. May I say to the gentleman that I think the qualifications required are quite different and this probably accounts for the difference in salary.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill as follows:

SEC. 13. The appointments, assignments, and transfers of teachers, principals, and presidents authorized in this act shall be made in accordance with the act approved June 20, 1906, as amended (Public, No. 254).

SEC. 14. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1932.

The Clerk read the following committee amendments:

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The thought occurs to me that by the enactment of this bill at this session these teachers will be exempt from the congressional cut carried in the economy bill. I want to ask the legal adviser of the committee what is his opinion about it?

Mr. PALMISANO. I may say——

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not referring to the gentleman from Baltimore, who is the liquid adviser, but I am referring to the gentleman from Ohio, the dry adviser on legal matters. [Laughter.]

Mrs. NORTON. I do not think this has anything to do with the economy act.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is it; it has nothing to do with the economy act, but all the other officers are leveled down 8⅓ per cent.

Mrs. NORTON. I think that all the cuts will apply to this bill.

Mr. HARLAN. That would depend upon the wording of the economy act.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is a later act fixing the salaries. I am glad to have the opinion of the legal adviser that the economy act would not apply to these salaries.

Mr. HARLAN. I would not be sure of it.

Mr. PALMISANO. There may be something to the contention of the gentleman from Wisconsin, this being a subsequent act to the economy bill. It may be that it may not apply.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the opinion of the legal adviser is worth more than the liquid adviser. [Laughter.]

The amendments were agreed to.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NOTICE OF DAMAGE CLAIMS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13750) to regulate the bringing of action for damages against the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no action shall be maintained against the District of Columbia for unliquidated damages to person or property unless the claimant shall allege and prove that within 30 days after the injury or damage was sustained, he, his agent, or attorney gave notice in writing to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of the time, place, cause, and extent of such injury or damage.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "shall allege and prove that" following the word "claimant."

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "30 days" following the word "within" and insert in lieu thereof the words "six months."

Page 1, line 8, after the words "of the District of Columbia of the," insert the word "approximate," so that the line will read "of the District of Columbia of the approximate time, place, cause, and."

Page 1, line 9, strike the first word "extent" and insert in lieu thereof the word "circumstances."

Page 1, line 9, at the end of the bill and after the word "damage," strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a colon and add the following: "Provided, however, That a report in writing by the Metropolitan police department in the regular course of duty shall be regarded as a sufficient notice under this act."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will some member of the committee inform the House as to the reason for extending the time for giving notice from 30 days to 6 months? I believe it is customary to have a much more limited time than six months in which to give notice of action to the municipality.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it at the present time it is unlimited. The District was recently sued on an accident which happened about five years ago. The commissioners came in and asked that a 30-day notice be required. I objected to that, and inserted 6 months, and also a proviso that a regular report by the Metropolitan police would be a sufficient notice to protect the District. I had in mind, in extending the time from 30 days to 6 months, the interest of the person who would not be familiar with the law, and who might be in the hospital for 6 months, and by adding the provision that a report of the police department would be sufficient notice, that would also protect the unfortunate who might be compelled to go to a hospital, because I believe in all those cases the police do make a report, and that would also protect the District.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, directing attention to the subsequent proposal just referred to, that a report in writing by the Metropolitan police department shall be regarded as sufficient notice, or that it shall be equivalent to a notice served by the claimant, if there happens to be some report by a police force, would that be sufficient so that the claimant would not be obliged to give any notice at all?

Mr. PALMISANO. That is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let us consider that for a moment. I do not think that you are protecting the District in that way. Suppose a police officer makes a casual report of a crossing accident. The claimant may allow years to go by before he begins his action. Certainly the gentleman does not wish to allow a claimant that much leeway. The whole purpose of this type of legislation is to force the claimant to begin action within a certain limited time.

Mr. BLACK. This is not a statute of limitations proposition; it is simply a notice proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; it is a matter of a limitation. The bill provides that no action shall be maintained for damages unless the claimant within six months from the injury shall give notice in writing, and so forth.

Mr. BLACK. This is purely a notice proposition. It makes no difference where the notice comes from. It is much better for the District that it comes from the police department because it would be more authentic.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not informed in respect to the statute of limitations prescribed by the District, in which to begin such actions, but in the State of Wisconsin it is prescribed that the action must be begun within a year.

Mr. BLACK. This is not a limitation proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am inquiring whether there should not be a limitation.

Mr. BLACK. They have to put the District on notice as to the accident, and, after having given notice, it may be that no action may be brought.

Mr. STAFFORD. But when a policeman makes a casual report of a crossing accident there is no intimation given to the commissioners that action is going to be begun, whereas if the person injured within the 6-month period gives notice it is presumed that he intends to follow it up by suit.

Mr. BLACK. On the contrary, if the person injured relies on the policeman's report and does not begin suit within the terms of the bill, he is out of court.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is there anything of that kind in this bill? It reads:

Provided, however, That a report in writing by the Metropolitan police department——

Mr. BLACK. Shall be notice. Notice of what? Of time and place—not a casual report that an accident happened but an adequate notice to the District.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is the word "adequate"?

Mr. BLACK. Adequacy in time and place.

Mr. STAFFORD. The word "adequate" is not in the bill.

Mr. BLACK. I am reading the word "adequate" into the element of time and place. The corporation counsel prepared this bill and it is in the form that the commissioners want it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I doubt if it is in the form that the District Commissioners want it, because the vitals have been cut out of it by the proviso.

Mr. PALMISANO. The proviso was agreed to by the corporation counsel. He prepared it.

Mr. BLACK. They would be glad to have any legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the District is going to suffer by reason of this suggested proviso and that it would be far better to have it limited to six months and have the claimant give notice of the injury, which presupposes that he intends to follow it up with action in court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "claimant," strike out the words "shall allege and prove that within 30 days," and insert "within six months."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, at the beginning of the line, insert the word "approximate," and strike out the word "extent" and insert the word "circumstances."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after the word "damage," insert "Provided, however, That a report in writing by the Metropolitan police department, in regular course of duty, shall be regarded as a sufficient notice under the above provision."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MERGER OF THE GEORGETOWN GAS LIGHT CO.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13853) to authorize the merger of the Georgetown Gaslight Co. with and into Washington Gas Light Co., and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia is given jurisdiction and power to permit and authorize the Georgetown Gaslight Co. and Washington Gas Light Co. to consolidate or merge upon such conditions as may be approved by the said commission, provided the said commission shall determine that such consolidation or merger will be in the public interest; and upon such consolidation or merger said the Georgetown Gaslight Co. shall thereby and thereupon, without further proceedings, be and become forthwith dissolved and merged into the said Washington Gas Light Co., and all the property of every kind, character, and description, rights, privileges, and franchises of said the Georgetown Gaslight Co. shall, subject to encumbrances or liens thereon to secure the bonds or other securities issued by said the Georgetown Gaslight Co., and to the payment of any and all other valid claims against or indebtedness of the Georgetown Gaslight Co. existing at the time of such merger, pass to and unto and become and be vested in the said Washington Gas Light Co. as its property, with all the powers, rights, privileges, and franchises now possessed by either or both of said companies, including the right in the said Washington Gas Light Co. to institute and prosecute in its own name any action or actions in connection therewith: Provided, however, That pending actions against the Georgetown Gaslight Co. may continue against the Georgetown Gaslight Co. until the merger of said companies. Actions or claims against said the Georgetown Gaslight Co. filed after the said merger shall be brought against the Washington Gas Light Co.

Washington Gas Light Co., after such merger, shall have the right and franchise to lay and construct, and to extend, maintain, renew, replace, relocate, remove, and/or repair, whether now or hereafter laid or constructed, gas pipes and mains, together with all appurtenances, connections, attachments, and appliances, in, under, along, and/or across the streets, avenues, roads, alleys, lanes, and other public places and ways in all parts of the District of Columbia for the transmission, distribution, and/or sale of gas within and/or through the limits of the District of Columbia for heat, light, refrigeration, fuel, power, and any other purposes for which gas or any by-product thereof is now or may hereafter be used; subject, however, to the provisions of the act of June 11, 1878, entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia"; to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, entitled "An act making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1894"; of section 8 (public utilities law) of the act of March 4, 1913; and any other laws or regulations applicable thereto.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of enabling Washington Gas Light Co. to provide for extensions to its distribution system, for additions, betterments, and improvements, and for other corporate purposes, the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia is given jurisdiction and power to permit and authorize said Washington Gas Light Co. to increase, from time to time, the amount of its capitalization by the authorization and issuance of capital stock, common or preferred, or both, with or without par value, in such amounts and for such considerations—and in respect of stock preferred as to dividends or assets, with or without voting rights, or with limited voting rights, and having such terms, qualifications, conversion privileges, or conditions—as may be approved by the commission. The commission is likewise authorized to permit the said Washington Gas Light Co. to change all of the shares of its capital stock now authorized, issued, and/or outstanding into the same or a different number of shares issued pursuant to the provisions of this act.

All shares of capital stock of Washington Gas Light Co. hereafter issued for which the agreed consideration shall have been paid or delivered to the company and all shares of capital stock of the company heretofore issued, as well as shares into which such shares heretofore issued may be changed, shall be deemed and taken to be fully paid and nonassessable and not subject to further call or assessment, and there shall be no liability to the company or to creditors of the company on the part of any subscriber to or holder of such shares.

Said Washington Gas Light Co. may, subject to the approval of the Public Utilities Commission, amend its charter so as to make any or all of the above changes and/or increase or increases and/or classification or reclassifications, by following the same procedure and complying with the same requirements as are now prescribed in section 639a of subchapter 4 of chapter 18 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, as amended to June 7, 1924, in respect of a change of name by a corporation, and thereupon its charter shall be deemed to be so amended without any further or other act or procedure.

SEC. 3. All charters, statutes, acts, and parts of acts, laws, ordinances, and regulations inconsistent with or repugnant to the provisions of this act, but only so far as inconsistent herewith or repugnant hereto, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act or any part thereof is hereby expressly reserved in Congress.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, we are going to be compelled to consider this question sooner or later, and I want to direct attention to it for a moment.

I have just introduced the following bill, and I ask your most careful consideration of it:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the passage of this act no pension, bounty, disability, or allowance save and except insurance benefits on which adequate premiums have been paid, and hospitalization under existing law, shall be paid or allowed to any veteran of any war in which the United States has engaged for any disease, disability, or injury not incurred while in the service of the United States or resulting from such service: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to a veteran of any war who is permanently and totally disabled either as a result of service or otherwise, and not as a result of his own misconduct, nor to a veteran who has attained the age of 65 years, and whose gross annual income is less than $3,000, nor to dependents of deceased veterans entitled to benefits under existing law.

All acts or parts of acts in conflict with the above act are hereby repealed.

I feel very keenly that this question should be brought before the country for consideration, and I shall make every effort in my power to secure consideration of this measure before the committee and the House.

During the last campaign the most effective appeal of candidates was an appeal to give them a chance to reduce Government expenditures and relieve a distressed people from the crushing burden of taxation. Those who have prepared their income-tax forms for the current period have had the increases brought sharply to their attention. Many militant candidates for office were clamoring for an opportunity to reduce Government expenses by 25 per cent, but I have only heard vague references to this since the election. Economy has been suggested in most every Government department and bureau, even to drastic economy in our harassed and much needed national defense in this time of world unrest, yet no effort has been made to bring before Congress for its determination the most generally discussed economy measure, which is non-service-connected veterans' pensions. The country is entitled to a hearing on this, and I propose to give it to the country if it is in my power to do so.

I have no patience with excuses—we are judged by our failure or success, and not by excuses. I feel, however, like apologizing to my constituents and my country for not offering an amendment to the veterans' bill which would have brought this question to a vote several days ago. In explanation to them, I wish to say that I understood that an amendment similar to this was to be offered to the independent offices' bill. The veterans' program was the last item in this bill; I had no amendment prepared, and the bill was concluded and immediately acted on with no effort made to bring this question up. I accept the censure and criticism personally, acknowledge my default, and offer no defense but this explanation.

My bill saves hospitalization for the non-service-connected veteran in these distressing times. It is wrong in principle; but the hospitals have been provided and the staffs assembled, and untold suffering and distress can be avoided during the emergency by continuing this relief, but it should be repealed as soon as normal times are restored.

My bill also preserves the award to totally and permanently disabled non-service-connected cases and to veterans who have reached 65 years of age. I have seen many of these hopeless, bedridden sufferers, and, right or wrong, I can not consent to take from them this gift of their country in their utter helplessness. I believe the country can and will gladly assume this burden if it knew the cases as Members of Congress do.

My bill does not disturb the relief for injury or disease incurred by veterans in the service, nor would I vote to take a penny from them.

For the non-service-connected cases drawing disability, short of total and permanent, I sincerely believe that to reduce the crushing burden of taxation and assist business, industry, and commerce to their feet will restore them to useful, self-respecting work, which would be infinitely better for them than the pittance doled out to them as pensions—a pittance to the individual, but a staggering sum in the aggregate to their country.

In principle, this thing is wrong. With the millions of men required in modern warfare, no country, however rich and prosperous, can for 60 or 70 years after a war provide hospitalization for every man and woman in it and a pension as well for every infirmity that afflicts mankind in no way even remotely connected with the service. No country can afford to defend itself at such a price.

In a period of 60 years we can easily visualize three or four different groups of veterans of three of four different wars, each numbering many millions of men and women.

Who is going to pay the enormous sums which will be required for this purpose? It will bankrupt any country that attempts it.

The fear of this expensive aftermath may, and no doubt will, seriously affect our foreign relations, and may occasion a policy of timidity and side-stepping when courage and determination are needed.

I hope I shall never see the day when our country will be forced, through fear of the demands of its uninjured defenders, to adopt this policy.

It takes only a slight stretch of the imagination to conceive of a day when we would say to an aggressor nation, we will pay you a billion, two billion dollars to avoid the expense of defending ourselves. God forbid. This thing is wrong; now is the time to stop it, and by this bill I am offering the Congress and the country an opportunity to do so. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

AMENDMENT OF KIDNAPING LAW—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 4694) to amend section 812 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 812 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, as amended (D. C. Code, title 6, sec. 36), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 812. Whoever shall be guilty of, or of aiding or abetting in, seizing, confining, inveigling, enticing, decoying, kidnaping, abducting, concealing, or carrying away any individual, by any means whatsoever, and holding or detaining, or with the intent to hold or detain, such individual for ransom or reward, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for life or for such term as the court in its discretion may determine. This section shall be held to have been violated if either the seizing, confining, inveigling, enticing, decoying, kidnaping, abducting, concealing, carrying away, holding, or detaining occurs in the District of Columbia. If two or more individuals enter into any agreement or conspiracy to do any act or acts which would constitute a violation of the provisions of this section, and one or more of such individuals do any act to effect the object of such agreement or conspiracy, each such individual shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of this section."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TERMS OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AND MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from F. B. Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. FESS, Mr. BINGHAM, and Mr. MCKELLAR conferees on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Franklin Girard, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, and legal custodian of the original enrolled copies of all acts passed at the various sessions of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed constitute a full, true, and complete transcript of the original enrolled copy of House Joint Memorial No. 5, enacted by the twenty-second session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho and filed in this office on the 10th day of February, 1933.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise, the capital of Idaho, this 10th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.] FRANKLIN GIRARD,
Secretary of State.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

House Joint Memorial 5 (by Judiciary Committee)

A joint memorial to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a bill to amend sections 5 and 8 of the Idaho admission act so as to permit mineral leases on public lands to be made for a term not exceeding 20 years and to permit the further exchange and consolidation of State and Federal lands within the State of Idaho; and

Whereas said bill proposes to amend section 5 of the admission act by permitting the State, under rules and regulations prescribed by the legislature, to add a portion of the annual income to the permanent funds; and

Whereas under the present Idaho admission act mineral leases are restricted to a 5-year maximum period capital for development can not be sufficiently interested nor can development be extensively undertaken for such a short period of time; as a result the mineral development of the State of Idaho is being greatly retarded and seriously interfered with; and

Whereas it is highly advantageous to both the State and Federal Governments to consolidate their respective holdings of public lands, thus affording to both an opportunity for increased earnings therefrom and reduction of expenses of administration thereof, and the Idaho admission act in its present form interferes with the satisfactory accomplishment of such exchanges and consolidation; and

Whereas it is deemed to be unwise so to amend the admission act as to authorize the State, in its discretion, to add a portion of the annual income to the permanent funds: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Idaho (the Senate concurring), That we most respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States of America to eliminate from the amendatory act the provision authorizing the State, in its discretion, to add a portion of the annual income to the permanent funds, and upon the elimination of this provision we most respectfully urge upon the Congress that it immediately enact into law the said bill amending sections 5 and 8 of the Idaho admission act; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be authorized, and he is hereby directed, to immediately forward certified copies of this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America and to the Senators and the Representatives in Congress from this State.

This house joint memorial passed the house on the 3d day of February, 1933.

ROBERT COULTER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This house joint memorial passed the senate on the 8th day of February, 1933.

GEO. E. HILL,

I hereby certify that the within House Joint Memorial No. 5 originated in the house of representatives during the twenty-second session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

DONALD D. STEWART,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BRATTON presented the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

House Memorial 2 (introduced by S. S. Thurmond), relative to grazing of stock driveways

Whereas the purpose and intent of the stock driveways are being abused; and

Whereas the said driveways do not have the proper protection from owners of stock being grazed under herd: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved That the Legislature of the State of New Mexico urges upon the Congress and Senate of the United States they make an investigation and pass proper legislation to prevent the abuse of the said stock driveways as is practiced to-day.

Whereas the stock driveways are being grazed by owners of stock by keeping said stock under herd and flock and said stock are slowly driven one direction one day and returned the next day, resulting in driveways being overgrazed: Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded to the United States Senators and Congressman from the State of New Mexico.

ALVAN N. WHITE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Attest:

GENARO ARMIJO,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Approved by me this 10th day of February, 1933.

ARTHUR SELIGMAN,
Governor of New Mexico.

Mr. NORRIS presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Nebraska, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolution to aid unemployed and homeless young men (introduced by Senator Frank McCarter)

Whereas there are millions of young men between the ages of 18 to 35 years who are numbered among the millions that are idle because of no fault of their own during this great depression that has swept over our beloved Nation; and

Whereas there is no immediate relief in view after a careful survey has been made by the leading statesmen of the country and some action must be taken immediately to aid this group of unfortunate citizens; and

Whereas the Government of the United States has spent vast sums of money in erecting great Army posts with proper facilities to house and feed these young men, and at the same time these men are being cared for those who volunteer can be given physical education and training that will be beneficial to their health and at the same time prepare them for any emergency that may come to our beloved country from any source, and the kindness and interest shown them by their Government will make them better citizens with greater love for their Government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Nebraska State Senate, in session for the Forty-ninth General Assembly, go on record in favor of the above action, and so inform the President elect, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and urge that he use his official influence with his Secretary of War to expedite and aid the millions of young American boys and young men by inviting those who desire to take advantage of the Government's willingness to be of service to them.

Adopted February 2, 1933.

Mr. NORRIS also presented a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska protesting against the continuance of a Federal gasoline tax, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 11th instant, pp. 3826, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. NORRIS also presented a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska favoring the passage of legislation repealing the packers and stockyards act (act of Congress of August 15, 1921) in so far as it authorizes or permits Federal authorities to fix charges for stockyard services at public stockyards and defining the packers and stockyards act, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 11th instant, p. 3827, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. GEORGE presented memorials, numerously signed, of sundry citizens and organizations of Dalton and Whitfield County, in the State of Georgia, remonstrating against the repeal of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution or the repeal or modification of the national prohibition law, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HALE presented memorials of sundry citizens and organizations of Corinna and Cliff Island, in the State of Maine, remonstrating against the repeal of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution or the repeal or modification of the national prohibition law, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS presented the petition of Mrs. John Weichseldorfer and sundry other citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the passage of legislation to revaluate the gold ounce and expand the currency, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HARRISON presented a resolution adopted by stockholders of the Newton-Neshoba National Farm Loan Association, in the State of Mississippi, indorsing a proposal for the making of loans to pay taxes at a low rate of interest, and favoring the refinancing of unpaid balances on farm loans (past due installments and delinquent taxes be included in refinanced papers), payments in refinancing to be readjusted so as to be lighter for a period of five years, and with lower rates of interest to enable farmers to pay their debts and taxes, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

CURTAILMENT OF COTTON PRODUCTION

Mr. SMITH presented the following concurrent resolution of the two houses of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

A concurrent resolution indorsing the efforts of Senator E. D. SMITH, of South Carolina, to aid the farmers of the South by the reduction of the production of cotton as provided for in a bill introduced in the Senate of the United States to pool the 3,500,000 bales of cotton now controlled by the Farm Board or other governmental agencies, and to urge the passage of the same

Whereas there is now pending, or will be introduced, in the United States Senate a bill proposing to curtail the production of cotton for the year 1933 by a governmental pool of the 3,500,000 bales now controlled by the Federal Farm Board or governmental agencies; and

Whereas it is the sense of the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina that the proposed bill, if passed, will result in much benefit to the southern cotton farmers: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina heartily indorses the efforts of United States Senator E. D. SMITH, from South Carolina, to secure the passage of the legislation hereinabove referred to and urge upon the Members of Congress from South Carolina to exercise their influence in securing the passage of the same.

That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to both of the Senators from South Carolina and to each of the Congressmen from this State.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to and ordered sent to the Senate.

PRICES OF CRUDE OIL

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I present a joint resolution adopted by the Wyoming Legislature. I ask that it be read at the desk and appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, A. M. Clark, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of Enrolled Joint Resolution No. 4, Senate of the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original Senate Joint Resolution No. 5, approved by the governor on February 2, 1933, at 5.05 p. m.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 10th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.]

A. M. CLARK, Secretary of State.
By C. J. ROGERS, Deputy.

Resolution requesting the President of the United States (1) to direct the Department of Justice to make an investigation for the purpose of determining whether the recent reduction in the posted price of crude oil produced in the Salt Creek field, Natrona County, Wyo., and in the Texas, mid-continent, and Rocky Mountain fields resulted from action in violation of the antitrust laws of the United States, whether there exists a bootleg traffic in the refined products of crude petroleum, either in Wyoming or in other States, which is in violation of the revenue laws of the United States and deprives the United States of revenue to which it is entitled; (2) to direct the Department of Justice to cooperate with the attorney general of the State of Wyoming in determining the violation of the revenue laws of the State of Wyoming and of the United States through the alleged bootleg traffic in the refined products of crude petroleum within the limits of the State of Wyoming and in exercising the authority of the United States and of the State of Wyoming to terminate any such violation of the revenue laws of the United States and of the State of Wyoming

Whereas the United States is the owner of the major portion of the land embraced in the Salt Creek oil field, located in Natrona County, Wyo., and the State of Wyoming is the owner of a school section of land within the limits of said field; and

Whereas said Federal and State lands are being operated under oil and gas leases granted by the United States as to the Federal land and under an oil and gas lease granted by the State of Wyoming as to the State land; and

Whereas the major portion of the production from said field is controlled and/or purchased by one major company, which, through itself or its subsidiaries, produces, purchases, and refines such crude oil; and

Whereas such major operating and purchasing company has made a drastic reduction in its posted prices for Salt Creek and other Rocky Mountain crude, and for crude production from Texas and mid-continent oil fields; and

Whereas the existing posted prices for said crude produced from Wyoming oil fields appear unwarranted by the prices of the refined products of such crude, and the action taken for such price reduction seems to be arbitrary in its nature; and

Whereas it is alleged that such reduction was in part caused by the bootlegging of the refined products of crude petroleum within the limits of the State of Wyoming and elsewhere; and

Whereas under the terms of the leasing act of Congress, approved February 25, 1920, the State of Wyoming receives 37½ per cent and the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress receives 52½ per cent of the bonuses, royalties, and rentals received upon oil and gas leases granted by the United States; and

Whereas the State of Wyoming receives royalties from the production of its school land in said Salt Creek field; and

Whereas the sale of the crude oil produced from the Salt Creek field at such low posted prices will cause material reduction in the oil royalties to be received by the State of Wyoming and the Federal Reclamation Service; and

Whereas the assessed valuation of the oil produced from said Salt Creek field and other oil fields within the State of Wyoming and sold, is the posted price of said oil at the time of sale, and unwarranted lowering of said posted prices reduces the taxable property valuation of the State to the detriment of all other taxpayers whose property valuation has not been and can not be likewise reduced through their own arbitrary action; and

Whereas the alleged bootlegging of refined products of crude oil would result in the loss of revenue to the Federal Government and to the State of Wyoming; and

Whereas the action taken by major oil companies in lowering the posted price of crude oil produced in the Texas, Mid-Continent, and Rocky Mountain fields tends to indicate that the action taken in lowering such posted price is in violation of the antitrust laws of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be and he is hereby requested to direct the Department of Justice of the United States—

1. To make a thorough investigation and determination as to whether such reduction in the posted prices of crude oil produced in the Texas, Mid-Continent, and Rocky Mountain States is the result of action taken in violation of the antitrust laws of the United States;

2. To make a thorough investigation as to the existence of a bootleg traffic in the refined products of crude oil produced in said Texas, mid-continent, and Rocky Mountain territory, and the extent of such traffic;

3. To request the proper officers of major crude oil operating and/or purchasing corporations to produce in detail any and all evidence in their possession as to the bootlegging of the refined products of crude oil in the State of Wyoming, in other Rocky Mountain States, in the mid-continent, and in the Texas territory;

4. To take such action under the laws of the United States as may be necessary to correct violations of the Federal laws and to insure the payment of the revenue due to the United States upon the refined products of petroleum;

5. To cooperate with the attorney general of the State of Wyoming so as to prevent bootleg traffic in the refined products of petroleum within the limits of the State of Wyoming, to punish those who violate the law, and to collect revenue due to the United States and/or the State of Wyoming; and, be it further

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is requested to communicate this resolution to the Congress of the United States, with request that the Congress, through its appropriate committees, join in such investigations or conduct independent investigations; and further that such investigations include all means whereby the petroleum resources of the States may be best conserved; and be it further

Resolved, That the attorney general of the State of Wyoming be, and he is hereby, requested to fully cooperate with the Department of Justice of the United States for the purpose of protecting the interests of the State of Wyoming in connection with the matters above set forth; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States; that a copy be forwarded to the Attorney General of the United States; that a copy be forwarded to each member of the Wyoming congressional delegation; and that a copy be forwarded to the attorney general of the State of Wyoming.

WM. M. JACK,
Speaker of the House.
ROY H. CAMERON,

Approved 5.05 p. m. February 2, 1933.

LESLIE A. MILLER, Governor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution of the Wyoming Legislature will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DEPRECIATED-CURRENCY SITUATION

Mr. GRAMMER. Mr. President, a few days ago there was printed in the RECORD a statement by Hon. Robert L. O'Brien, chairman of the Tariff Commission, in which he gave his reasons for opposing legislation to restore the balance of purchasing power between the United States and foreign countries which have gone off the gold standard. I have just received a copy of an official statement issued by the Secretary of Commerce which is a complete and very forceful reply to the views expressed by Mr. O'Brien.

In order that Senators may have equal opportunity to study the affirmative side of this important question I ask that the department's statement may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Washington, February 8, 1933.

Serious concern over the depreciated-currency situation which exists to-day in about 40 principal foreign countries is indicated by the rapidly increasing volume of correspondence reaching the department, supplemented by an unprecedented number of personal visits by business men.

An examination of the latest available foreign trade statistics does not indicate that we are experiencing what might be termed a flood of imports. The total quantity of goods imported during 1932 was 20 per cent less than in 1931 and 39 per cent smaller than in 1929. Imports of many commodities, however, are increasing, particularly of dutiable or largely competitive products.

The export trade of these depreciated-currency countries accounted for approximately 45 per cent (by value) of the total amount of goods moving in international trade during both 1930 and 1931. Of the total imports into the United States during 1932, approximately 60 per cent (by value) were from countries whose exchange is now depreciated. Of course, a large part of this 60 per cent consists of commodities noncompetitive with our industries.

Commodities numbering 232 were imported in greater volume during 1932 than in 1931. Of this number, however, 75 were free of duty (largely noncompetitive products) and 157 were dutiable (largely competitive products). Excluding free imports from the Philippines and the Virgin Islands, approximately 10 per cent of the free goods (by value) were imported in increased quantities. In the case of dutiable goods, imports accounting for 18 per cent of the total value of dutiable goods were received in increased quantities.

Time is required for large-scale trading in commodities. The extent to which import competition in our domestic trade has developed during the past year, as a result of depreciated currencies, is not an adequate indication of the potential development.

From the standpoint of mechanics alone, a lag of several months must occur between the time a foreign currency begins to depreciate and the time when imports of individual commodities begin to increase. The depreciated-currency country must have or develop an exportable surplus. The foreign producer must arrange for United States agents or distributors, who in turn must develop or extend the market. This takes time. Even after this has been done the growth of imports may be temporarily stopped or retarded by "less than cost selling" by American producers. But a policy so ruinous and uneconomic can not long be maintained. Statistics for 1932 should, therefore, be taken, not as a measure of effect, but merely as an indication of the direction in which these forces are working.

The wholesale price level in United States is far out of line with levels prevailing in principal depreciated-currency countries. In most countries the suspension of gold payments halted the continuous decline in wholesale prices (in terms of depreciated currency) that has been under way since 1929. For the most part the increases in wholesale prices (in terms of depreciated currency) have been small and the general movement during the past year has tended to be horizontal. Foreign wholesale prices in terms of American gold dollars, on the other hand, have continued downward. In no instance has the increase in foreign wholesale prices (in terms of foreign currency) been sufficient to offset the effects of depreciation in exchange, even making allowances for the decline in United States prices.

The following figures provide a rough indication of the average changes in the United States and foreign prices since depreciation set in:

| | Per cent change foreign wholesale prices in terms United States dollars from month before depreciation set in to December, 1932 | Per cent change United States wholesale prices during same period |
|---|---|---|
| Australia | [1] −58.8 | [1] −31.7 |
| British India | −37.7 | −14.5 |
| Canada | −21.6 | −13.2 |
| Denmark | −30.4 | −13.2 |
| Egypt | −44.2 | −13.2 |
| Finland | −35.6 | −12.1 |
| Japan | [1] −46.4 | [1] − 9.0 |
| Norway | −35.3 | −13.2 |
| Sweden | −33.7 | −13.2 |
| United Kingdom | −31.5 | −13.2 |

[1] November, 1932.

If currencies were depreciating in comparatively few countries, costs of production and price levels in those countries would seek the levels prevailing in stable-currency countries. But with conditions as they are to-day—more than half of the world's trade being carried on by depreciated-currency countries and stocks of important raw materials and foodstuffs exceedingly large—costs of production and prices in gold-standard countries tend to seek the levels prevailing in nongold countries. Until the costs of production and prices of some of our commodities are further reduced or some tariff adjustments made, imports should tend to supply an increasing proportion of our domestic needs.

The advantages possessed by a country on account of depreciated currency, or conversely the disadvantages suffered by a country on a gold basis from countries having depreciated currencies, although they can not be permanent, may be sufficiently prolonged to seriously injure some producers in the country on a gold basis, especially when so many countries are affected as at present. Lower costs of production abroad as a result of depreciated currencies not only may result in the domestic producer losing part of his domestic markets, but will probably also result in his losing part, if not all, of his share of sales in world markets. Depreciated currencies, therefore, have an important and adverse effect on export trade. Furthermore, the increased import at a lower price not only shrinks the market supplied by domestic production but also may make it impossible for the domestic producer to establish a reasonable price.

Inquiries reaching the department indicate that business men are as much concerned over disrupting influence of foreign quotations as evidenced by the hesitation in placement of domestic orders as they are over the actual volume of goods coming in at this time from countries with depreciated currencies.

Thus it may be seen that depreciated world currencies tend to increase our imports and to decrease our exports as well as to disturb proper price relationships.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. FRAZIER (for Mr. SCHALL), from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5219) to provide funds for cooperation with the Minnesota State Board of Control in the extension of the Minnesota State Sanatorium at Ah-Gwah-Ching, Minn., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1219) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 5337) to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended, to permit loans for additional purposes, to extend the powers of Federal land banks in the making of direct loans, to authorize upon certain terms the reamortization of loans by Federal and joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1221) thereon.

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 5609) to amend the emergency relief and construction act of 1932, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1222) thereon.

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 253) authorizing the Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, to release claims of the United States upon certain assets of the Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California and others in connection with collections upon a certain judgment in favor of the United States against the Pan American Petroleum Co. heretofore duly entered, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1223) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on to-day, February 14, 1933, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 188. An act for the relief of Tampico Marine Iron Works;

S. 222. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of B. F. Hart;

S. 1586. An act for the relief of the estate of Peter Paul Franzel, deceased; and

S. 4339. An act repealing certain provisions of the act of June 21, 1906, as amended, relating to the sale and encumbrance of lands of Kickapoo and affiliated Indians of Oklahoma.

FEDERAL COURT QUARTERS AT WINSTON-SALEM AND ROCKINGHAM, N. C.

Mr. ASHURST. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 6456) to amend section 98 of the Judicial Code as amended, and submit a report (No. 1218) thereon. It is merely a local bill, and I invite the attention of the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] to it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the bill be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (H. R. 6456) to amend section 98 of the Judicial Code, as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso in the fifth paragraph of section 98 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 179), is hereby amended to read as follows: "Provided, That the cities of Winston-Salem and Rockingham shall each provide and furnish at its own expense a suitable and convenient place for holding the district court until Federal buildings containing quarters for the court are erected at such places."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I may say that an appropriation has heretofore been made for erecting buildings at Rockingham and Winston-Salem. This bill does not call for any additional appropriation or expenditure, but merely enables the architect to provide for the court rooms that are necessary there within the existing appropriation. That applies directly to Winston-Salem and, by way of permission, to Rockingham.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A bill (S. 5637) for the establishment, development, and administration of the Boulder Canyon National Reservation, and the development and administration of the Boulder Canyon Project Federal Reservation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 5638) for the relief of Thomas A. Sears (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BLAINE:

A bill (S. 5640) to liquidate, finance, and refinance agricultural indebtedness, and to encourage and promote agriculture, commerce, and industry, through the Federal farm-loan system and the Federal reserve banking system, and creating a board of agriculture to supervise the same; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. McNARY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 254) extending to the whaling industry certain benefits granted under section 11 of the merchant marine act, 1920; to the Committee on Commerce.

POSTPONEMENT OF MORTGAGE FORECLOSURES

Mr. HULL and Mr. WALCOTT introduced a bill (S. 5639) providing for loans or advances by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of securing the postponement of the foreclosure of certain mortgages for a period of two years, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HULL subsequently (for himself and Mr. WALCOTT), from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the Senate bill 5639, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1220) thereon.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia or ordered to be placed on the calendar as indicated:

H. R. 6292. An act to prevent professional prize fighting and to authorize amateur boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11504. An act authorizing the sale of certain Government property in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 13853. An act to authorize the merger of the Georgetown Gaslight Co. with and into Washington Gas Light Co., and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14392. An act to authorize the payment of taxes and assessments on family dwelling houses in the District of Columbia in quarterly installments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

H. R. 12595. An act to amend the teachers' salary act of the District of Columbia, approved June 4, 1924, as amended, in relation to establishing the Wilson and Miner Teachers Colleges on a basis comparable with recognized standards for accredited institutions of like kind; to raising the trade or vocational schools to the level of junior high schools, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13378. An act to amend sections 416 and 417 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia;

H. R. 13750. An act to regulate the bringing of actions for damages against the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 14204. An act to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 14340. An act authorizing the sale of certain property no longer required for public purposes in the District of Columbia; to the calendar.

EMPLOYEES AND SALARIES OF FEDERAL FARM BOARD AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, on yesterday I submitted a resolution seeking some information regarding the amount of money paid to employees in the service of the various agencies created by the Federal Government to loan money to farmers. That resolution was read and is now on the table. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the resolution be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 358), as modified, submitted by Mr. SHIPSTEAD on the 13th instant, was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Federal Farm Loan Board is requested to furnish the Senate, on or before March 1, or as soon thereafter as possible, but not later than March 15, 1933, with a report showing the total number of employees at the end of each fiscal year since its establishment and on February 1, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid to employees of the board in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and estimated to be paid to them in the current fiscal year and in the fiscal year 1933–34; the total number of employees of the Federal land banks on December 31, 1931, and February 1, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid in 1932 to employees, full or part time, of the Federal land banks; the total number of employees of the joint-stock land banks on December 31, 1931, and February 1, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid in 1932 to employees, full or part time, of the joint-stock land banks; the total number of employees of the intermediate-credit banks on December 31, 1931, and February 1, 1932; and the aggregate salaries paid in 1932 to employees, part or full time, of the intermediate-credit banks; and the positions and names of the employees receiving more than $2,000 per year on February 15, 1933.

SEC. 2. The secretary of the Federal Farm Board is requested to furnish the Senate, on or before March 1, or as soon thereafter as possible, but not later than March 15, 1933, with a report showing the total number of employees at the end of each fiscal year since its establishment, and on February 1, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid to employees of the board in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and estimated to be paid to them in the current fiscal year, and in the fiscal year 1933–34; the total number of employees in the grain and cotton stabilization corporations, and in any other corporations formed under the provisions of the agricultural marketing act of 1929, on December 31, 1931, and February 1, 1933; and the aggregate salaries paid by each of said corporations to its employees, part or full time in 1932, and the positions and the names of the employees receiving more than $2,000 per year on February 15, 1933.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture is requested to furnish the Senate, on or before March 1, or as soon thereafter as possible, but not later than March 15, 1933, with a report showing the total number of employees on January 1, 1933, and on February 15, 1933, in the seed loan office; the aggregate salaries paid to employees of the seed loan office in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and estimated to be paid to them in the current fiscal year, and in the fiscal year 1933–34; the total number of employees in the crop production loan office on January 1, 1933, and on February 15, 1933; the aggregate salaries paid to employees of the crop production loan office in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and estimated to be paid to them in the current fiscal year and in the fiscal year 1933–34; the total number of employees in the agricultural credit corporations, and in any other corporations set up under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act of 1932, as amended, on January 1, 1933, and on February 15, 1933; and the aggregate salaries paid to employees of said corporation or said corporations in 1932, and estimated to be paid to them in 1933, and the positions and the names of the employees receiving more than $2,000 per year on February 15, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. If the effect of granting the request for unanimous consent would be to displace the pending motion——

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would not be.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, if the resolution will not provoke debate, I have no objection to the request for unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand the Senator has modified his printed resolution so as to include in it a request for information as to the employees of the Federal joint-stock land banks who are receiving more than $2,000 per annum.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. To the extent that information is requested as to the number of persons and who they are who receive more than $2,000 a year, the resolution has been amended at the request of the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL]. I accepted that amendment with the understanding that it would not lead to any controversy on the Senate floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator from Arkansas has finished, I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the question arose yesterday as to whether sufficient time was given to enable the desired information to be prepared. The time limit fixed in the resolution is March 15.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Not later than March 15, which gives about 30 days.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the Federal Farm Board have most of the information called for in the resolution.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But it will be necessary to compile it, and it might be advisable to give a little more time.

Mr. FESS. That is the only question that arose in my mind.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. How much time does the Senator think would be required? I am perfectly willing to extend the time.

Mr. FESS. I should say we should give them a month at least.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The resolution gives them a month.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. A month is given under the terms of the resolution.

Mr. FESS. I mean an additional month. Has the Senator made any investigation as to how long it will take?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. They have all the books; they have all the records of their employees; and I think they can get the information here in 10 days. That is my opinion.

Mr. FESS. The Senator may recall that we adopted a resolution requesting similar information in connection with the Interstate Commerce Commission, but sufficient time was not allowed within which the information could be compiled. That is why I made the inquiry in this case.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. My impression is that the Federal Farm Board has all the information——

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think it has.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is called for by the resolution with respect to the Federal and joint-stock land banks, but that there would be compilations required which could probably be made within 30 days, depending upon the amount of work which the board has on hand and the number of employees available for making the compilations. There may be some information called for that is not in the possession of the board, I do not know about that, but I should think it could be furnished within 30 days.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I will say to the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. FESS. I will withdraw any objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio withdraws his objection. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection the resolution was considered and agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SMOOT. I present the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to House bill 13710, making appropriations for the Department of Interior, and ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13710) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 9, 25, and 26.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 27, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, and 46, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert "(with the exception of attorneys)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$355,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: ": Provided further, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation contained in the Interior Department appropriation act, fiscal year 1932, for the construction and equipment of the Albuquerque Sanatorium, and employees' quarters, New Mexico, and not to exceed $300,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the Sioux Sanatorium and employees' quarters, South Dakota, contained in the same act, are hereby continued available for the same purposes until June 30, 1934"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$110,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$210,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,992,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

REED SMOOT,
TASKER L. ODDIE,
GERALD P. NYE,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
JOHN B. KENDRICK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
W. W. HASTINGS,
FRANK MURPHY,
BURTON L. FRENCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the Senate shall agree to take up the conference report, that will not affect the pending motion, will it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a privileged matter, and will not disturb the pending motion. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will ask my colleague to indicate briefly the changes which have been made, whether there have been any increases in the appropriations and from what amendments adopted by the Senate the conferees have receded?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will first take up the amendments of the Senate from which the Senate conferees agreed to recede. The first one is on page 19, where the Senate appropriated for the Geological Survey $373,000, whereas the House had appropriated $315,000. In conference a compromise was reached, so that the appropriation as agreed to by the conferees has been reduced $18,000.

On amendment numbered 6 the Senate conferees receded. That amendment inserted a provision reading—

> And not to exceed $2,500 may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for paying in whole or in part expenses of Federal, State, or county extension agents and home-demonstration agents or specialists in extension work detailed for cooperative work in the Indian Service.

Mr. KING. The Senate receded from that amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the Senate receded from it.

In the case of the Geological Survey, the Senate increased the amount of $300,000 to $325,000. In conference the Senate receded on that amendment.

It was also provided that not to exceed $265,000 of that $300,000 might be used to pay for personal services in the District of Columbia. The Senate, by amendment, increased that amount to $280,000; and the Senate receded on that amendment. Each one of them is a decrease in the amount that the Senate sought to appropriate.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

RAILROADS AND THE UNEMPLOYED

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD an article by Edward A. Filene, of Boston, which appeared in the February issue of Survey Graphic, entitled "Railroads, a Superhighway, and the Unemployed."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

RAILROADS, A SUPERHIGHWAY, AND THE UNEMPLOYED

By Edward A. Filene

The one essential service that distinguishes the modern world from the world of days gone by, and the less developed parts of the earth from the highly civilized ones, is swift, sure, and adequate transportation. The facilities for transportation are the bolts that hold the structure of civilization together. Without them it would fall to pieces.

I can hear some one immediately objecting that at the present stage of mankind's affairs we seem to have too much transportation, just as we might seem to have too much of almost everything that is offered for sale. We are experiencing a kind of inverted famine. We are hungry because we have too much to eat. We have too many freight cars, too many passenger cars, too many locomotives, too many miles of railway track, too many motor vehicles. Our railways are finding it hard to make both ends meet. Our automobile manufacturers have thrown into their new models improvements that might normally have been spread out over several years, in a valiant effort to stem the tide of diminishing business.

Such are the protests I expect to hear against a proposal which I believe contains the key to the solution not only of a long-standing economic problem but of our immediate difficulties. I suggest more, not less, transportation. I suggest that we stimulate the railways, not by crushing their natural competitors but by giving them competitors worthy of their steel. I suggest that we meet the depression not by retreating, not by digging in, but by a direct frontal attack. The way is forward. We shall arrive at our goal soonest by going toward it.

If with all the equipment of modern technology at our disposal we could see America as a new country, we would know very well what to do with it. The opportunities that would lie before us would of themselves drive away the shadow of hard times. In my opinion, if we compare what has been done on this continent with what may still be done, ours still is a new country.

About a year ago I was asked by some Chinese leaders to draw up a plan which would illustrate my ideas of what would contribute most toward stability and progress in that vast and crowded land.

I began by laying down the principle that the first necessity as well as the first duty of every worth-while reform is to stay alive and succeed, and that its second necessity and duty is to be its own successor. In other words, we do not want to build something to-day which will have to be torn down to-morrow. That is false economy. And we may safely assume that the Chinese people, like all other peoples, will support a government under which they can find an opportunity for work and adequate food and decent living. Like all other people, they have proved in recent years that lacking these necessities they will become radical and revolutionary. The famines in China which in recent years have caused the death of many millions of Chinese were due, not so much to an actual lack of food, as to a lack of roads by which to get surpluses of food in one part of the land to people in dire need of it in another. In proportion to her population of 400,000,000, China has fewer roads than any other country in the world.

In answer to the request for help which was put to me, therefore, I drew up and submitted the following plan. I am summarizing it here, necessarily:

1. Plan automobile roads—main trunk lines—to stretch across the entire country, in every desirable direction.

2. Build these roads on a "grand scale." Provide for two express one-way roads in the middle, crossed only by bridges or tunnels. On each side of these express roads build a one-way road for nonexpress traffic, to be used for less speedy travel and for approach to city, town, and village streets and country roads.

3. Work on these roads should be begun and carried along their full length throughout the country at the same time, and each section should be built by the inhabitants of the locality under the supervision of competent government engineers and road builders.

4. The central government should pay its share of the cost of the work in each locality in the shape of food wages—that is, food for the workers. This would largely do away with revolutions in China, because no revolution would be supported by the masses against a government that was supplying them with work, food, and the needed roads. The local authorities would pay such money wages as were necessary and practicable.

The keynote of my plan, it will be seen, was that for China railways were not indicated as the best means of meeting the situation. It seemed to me that western experience had already shown that where there was free choice autobuses, autotrucks, and private autocars could furnish their share of transportation more efficiently than railroads, provided there were constructed a system of fourfold transcontinental roads with provision for speed, safety, and segregation of through from local traffic. On such roads autotrucks of great tonnage, now successfully used in the Occident, and autobuses of great passenger capacity, some of them double-deckers, would be employed.

Moreover, if after the auto roads were built there should be a need and a place for more railroads, it was clear that there would be a new type of railroad built of necessity, planned not to compete unscientifically with motor cars but to supplement them. So planned a railroad would be a paying enterprise. China must not, it seemed to me, make the western mistake of allowing railroads and motor vehicles to fight each other wastefully and irrationally for the same business.

I think perhaps that most of those who have followed the argument so far will agree that this sweeping improvement in means of transportation would be an excellent thing for China. We can think more disinterestedly, somehow, about countries which are far away.

But why not try to think as clearly about our own? Chinese conditions are not so different from American conditions as would at first appear. If a road system such as I have described is a sound idea in China, why is it not a sound idea in the United States?

No one, I think, will dispute the fact that railroads alone are not enough under present conditions. They will not be enough even after they learn to make full and effective use of their possibilities. We may compare the whole system of transportation with the automobile industry. As far back as 1915, when there were fewer than 2,500,000 motor vehicles in the United States, some of our more conservative bankers, manufacturers, and business men in other lines were already predicting that the saturation point would soon be reached. The same fear was expressed in 1920, when there were more than 9,000,000 cars, and in 1925, when the total had reached almost 20,000,000, and of course we are hearing it to-day. But the market for cars expanded as prices went down and the miles of good roads increased. In other words, there was a vast and unrealized market for transportation. I believe that such a market still exists and that all that the railroads, all that the motor industry, and all that the highway builders can do during the coming years will not be more than enough to meet its needs.

We must look at this problem as one affecting the welfare of the whole country and not one to me settled by adjustments and compromises among existing transportation agencies. Let me quote from a report by Leo J. Flynn, attorney-examiner to the Interstate Commerce Commission:

"It is the duty of the Government to see that adequate and efficient transportation service for the public is supplied and maintained. The problem, How can the commerce of the country be moved most efficiently and economically with assurance of dependable service? should be approached as one of national transportation and not primarily as one of transportation agencies. Legislation and regulation should not be with a view of preserving and protecting long-existent forms of transportation by stifling or restricting new forms of transportation which may be better equipped to perform certain transportation functions. The public is entitled to the best transportation service. No carrier by rail, water, motor vehicle, or air, has a vested right in the transportation of a single passenger or a pound of freight."

Carried to its logical extreme, this principle which I have just quoted means Government ownership of railroads if adequate transportation can not be secured in any other way. Personally

I hope and believe that this can be avoided, but we must not overlook the fact that a continuance on the part of the railroads of the present policy of high rates and hostility to other forms of transportation may force the issue. What else can the public conclude from the present-day railway propaganda than that the railways are unable properly to manage their own businesses?

But let us look at the other aspect of our transportation situation. The $26,000,000,000 or more invested in highways and motor cars is of at least equal importance with the $26,000,000,000 invested in railroads. Moreover, the development of our highway system will call for no such fundamental changes in our political and economic ideas as would Government ownership of railroads. The public, individually and as partners or stockholders in various enterprises, already owns the motor vehicles of the country. Government, Federal, State, and local, already owns the highways. State and National roads are as old as the National Government itself—and older.

Our present highway system is not adequate to our existing needs. It is hopelessly inadequate to the certain needs of tomorrow, even after the railroads shall have raised themselves to the highest pinnacles of efficiency and full use has been made of water transportation on the Great Lakes, the Mississippi River system, the canals and the coastal waters. It would be absurd to say that we are as badly off for roads as China is. Yet perhaps we are as badly off in proportion to our national wealth, the amount of our industry and commerce, and our habits of travel.

Suppose we sit down with a large map of the United States, ignore for the moment the existing railways and highways, and lay out a national system of fourfold superhighways. These superhighways would be much like those I suggested for China. Express traffic would be carried in two central roads bordered on each side with a road devoted to slower travel. All four roads would be restricted to one-way traffic. Local highways would be overpassed, so that there would be no interruption of the flow of vehicles. The highest speeds consistent with safety would be not only permitted but encouraged. Every device of modern road building would be adopted to promote the security of passengers and drivers. Probably special types of motor vehicles especially adapted for this fast service would be developed; indeed, we already have them. Ramps and approaches would be constructed so that cars could enter and leave the 4-road superhighway and pass to and from the local streets and roads without interfering with the main currents of travel.

I am under no delusions as to the opposition this plan will encounter. If it is regarded as an attempted blow at the railroads it will offend the vested interests not only of railroad officials themselves but perhaps also of banks, insurance companies, and individuals holding railway securities. To objections from these sources I can only repeat that if the railroads learn how to manage their own business properly they will gain and not lose by my proposals and that their securities will be worth more instead of less.

I believe that the railroads, organized and administered by scientific, fact-finding, fact-applying officials, with a competent research staff behind them, would be able to compete much more successfully with bus and autotruck transportation than now seems possible, and for these reasons:

1. The railroads could collect and distribute from house to house by their own autotrucks. These trucks could be so built that they could run as well on the railroads tracks as on the streets, thus doing away with the greater part of the expense and delay of reloading in the freight yards. A step toward this idea has already been taken in the use of so-called rail wagons, which are truck trailers built to be carried on a flat car. Two different types of rail wagons have been tried out on electric railways between Cleveland and Toledo and Chicago and Milwaukee. In each case the trailer is loaded at the shipper's door and unloaded at the consignee's door.

2. The railroads on an average could haul freight on rails faster than it could be hauled by autotrucks on even the best highways.

3. With the reorganization of transportation which I have described, the cost to the consumer of both freight and passenger transportation could be very greatly reduced. This would bring so many more goods and services within the buying power of the masses that an enormous increase in business would be sure to come, both for railroads and for motor-vehicle companies. I do not think it extravagant to say that traffic could be doubled. The railroads would certainly sacrifice nothing in the long run by relinquishing traffic which they can not economically handle and by greatly increasing the traffic which they can economically handle.

No wise reorganization of transportation can harm any legitimate business. If the railroads, like the stage coaches and the Conestoga wagons, were actually becoming obsolete, they would have to take their medicine with a good grace. The country is no more obligated to maintain an obsolete railroad than it was to maintain an obsolete prairie schooner. But the railroads are not in the position of the prairie schooner, nor are they likely to be for as long a time as we can see ahead.

Even if there were to be a transition from the old-fashioned railroad to some form of free-wheeled vehicle running on roads, the railways could, if they were sufficiently sagacious, adapt themselves to the change. They could even pave their rights of way, though I do not think they will have to do so. Some of them have already protected themselves by entering more or less completely into the operation of motor vehicles.

My plan, therefore, is in no way inconsistent with such progress as our transportation system has made. It merely carries to a logical conclusion what any unbiased survey of the present situation would reveal. It is a step toward a true and lasting remedy for our present dangerous depression. Just as the plan for China is expected largely to prevent revolutions and famines in that country in the future, so the corresponding plan for America will bring with it a basic, practical, scientific "way out" from our unemployment. Most of the remedies so far applied will for the most part help producers and financiers; but there can be no lasting recovery until our millions of unemployed are put back at work.

If we build these fourfold automobile roads we will be giving work directly to great masses of our unemployed. Indirectly we will increase, perhaps even double, the present market for auto trucks and private automobiles. By so doing we will restore a business which, with its enormous direct and indirect employing power, is generally admitted to have been the basis of the unprecedented prosperity from which we have passed into this depression. Incidentally, we will give, as I have indicated, an enormously increased traffic to the railroads.

It will be objected that the cost is so huge as to be prohibitive, but I firmly believe that a fact-finding study will show that however great the cost, it will still be less than the losses due to the present great mass of unemployment and the money which local, State, and National Governments will have to pay for relief if the present situation continues for two or three years longer. Assume that only 5,000,000 persons were out of work in the United States last year and that each individual lost only $1,000 in wages. Both estimates are undoubtedly too low, yet when so measured, the wage loss for the year was $5,000,000,000, or nearly one-fifth the capitalized value of all our railroads. In other words, we could better afford to abandon our railroads than to have five or six years of unemployment at the present rate. How much more, then, could we afford not to abandon them but to supplement them and make them more productive than they have ever been!

I would not say that the country could not afford the plan I have proposed. I would say that the country could not afford not to put some such plan into effect. We have already expended a grand total of more than $50,000,000,000 upon existing facilities for getting ourselves and our goods from place to place. If we are not getting returns upon the investment it is because it is less than adequate and being less than adequately handled. To complete the transportation system upon the scale which our needs demand would add far more to its value than the amount we would have to invest. The desperate need of the day is not capital—we have as much real capital as we had at the height of the boom in 1929—but a profitable use for capital.

Palliatives may produce a temporary reemployment through inflation and a return of prices "to the standards of 1928." But such an effect can be only temporary. To restore prosperity on a permanent basis we must dig deep and build sound foundations. I believe that the fourfold super auto highway is in more senses than one literally the road back to plenty and security.

BETTERMENT OF COTTON PRICES

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Asheville Citizen of February 13, 1933, having to do with the cotton situation.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AT LAST, A SOUND COTTON PLAN

The Smith plan, designed to better the price of cotton by reducing the supply, has been given a unanimously favorable report by the Senate Committee on Agriculture. The Citizen, which is generally skeptical of all price-fixing measures, believes that here at last is a plan which, as an emergency measure, is sound in principle, avoiding, it seems to us, all of the objections which existed in the case of domestic-allotment scheme, which the Smith bill replaces, as regards cotton.

Briefly, the Smith plan proposes that a cotton board, appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, shall be empowered to take over and impound all of the cotton which the Government or any of its agencies may own or upon which loans may have been made. The board will also be empowered to purchase at the market value any other cotton owned by producers in all cases where the producers will agree in writing to reduce their cotton acreage by not less than 30 per cent without increase in fertilization per acre.

The board will hold the cotton thus acquired and the Secretary of Agriculture will then enter into contracts with the producers of cotton to sell each producer an amount of cotton equivalent to the estimated amount of reduction in cotton by such producer below the amount produced by him in the preceding crop year. The idea is that in this way the acreage planted to cotton can be reduced by at least a third, and perhaps by more than a third. The grower will contract to reduce his yield. Thereupon he is given an option to purchase cotton from the Government pool at any time within the next year at the price cotton is bringing on the day he makes the contract. If cotton goes down he does not have to exercise the option. If cotton goes up, he can exercise it and get the benefit of the rise, less the actual carrying charges. His only obligation will be to show proof that he has complied with his contract, which is simply to produce less cotton than he produced in 1932.

The supreme merit of this plan is that it is not a defiance of but a compliance with the economic laws of supply and demand. The domestic-allotment plan sought to fix the price of cotton and the price of various other farm commodities arbitrarily. There is nothing arbitrary about the Smith plan. It uses the Government credit to take over a considerable part of the existing cotton supply and hold it off the market, conditioned upon an immediate reduction in the cotton acreage to be planted this spring. But the plan will finance itself in large measure, because most of the money that will be needed can be borrowed on the warehouse receipts for the cotton. The Government can lose only if cotton goes still lower in price; and if that should happen, there is not much for anyone to look forward to, anyway.

The success of the Smith plan would depend, of course, upon the extent to which the cotton growers availed themselves of the opportunity which it would offer them to stand a better chance of making money by not planting cotton than they can possibly stand of making money by planting cotton. It is a simple plan, easily understood, requiring no cumbersome machinery for its operation; and it seems to us that it is in all respects eminently practical. We know that its feasibility will be questioned by those who will have in mind the failure of Brazil's efforts to valorize the price of coffee and of Britain's efforts to valorize the price of rubber. But there is no parallel between what Brazil attempted or what England attempted and what is proposed in the Smith plan. The supply of coffee could not be quickly reduced, because coffee comes from trees which produce over a number of years and new orchards are continually coming into production. The situation as to rubber is similar to that of coffee. But the cotton plant is in this country an annual. All that is necessary to reduce the cotton supply is to plant less cotton. The problem has always been to cut the acreage. How was the cotton farmer to go on living unless he grew cotton? The Smith plan gives the first intelligible answer to that question. Instead of planting cotton he pledges himself not to plant it, and the Government thereupon gives him an option to purchase from the Government at any time within the next year the amount of cotton he could reasonably have expected to produce, based on his experience of last year, at the price cotton is bringing at the time he would have planted this year's crop. He can then sell this cotton at the price it is then bringing. If cotton goes up, he will make as much money as he would have made if he had planted. If it goes down, he is better off than he would have been had he planted. In short, he stands to gain either way.

It is a most persuasive proposal. If it has any fatal weakness, we confess that we are unable to see it. The conditions are favorable in all respects for its success. The consumption of cotton is showing a tendency to increase. Our own mills are using more of the raw supply and our exports have risen. But the surplus of American cotton is excessive and the problem is to bring down this surplus. That can be done quickly only by decreasing the production. It is this that the Smith plan seeks to accomplish, by making it attractive to the cotton grower not to grow as much cotton as he has been growing. The financial support lent to the plan by the Government would not involve a serious increase in the financial commitment which the Government already has in cotton.

The adjustment of the supply of cotton to the demand for cotton and the improvement in the price of cotton which could be anticipated as a result would mean the turning of the economic tide upward in and for the South. It would mark the beginning of the return of prosperity for this entire region.

In the opinion of this newspaper the Smith plan conforms in all particulars to the realities and to the basic principles of sound economics. Both branches of Congress should pass it without delay, but without amendment. As it stands it is simple and workable. It is not a flash scheme. Senator SMITH, who knows more about cotton than any man in Congress, has been working on this plan for at least a year and a half. He has discussed it from every angle with those whose advice was most worth having. The plan in the form to which it has now been reduced represents the consensus of the cotton interests. It is a thoroughly informed plan and if it is adopted promptly, we believe that it can be made operative with the minimum of time and effort and risk.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION—REPEAL OF PROHIBITION

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from a recent issue of the Florida Times-Union relative to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

R. H. ANDERSON, COAUTHOR OF REPEAL PLANK, ASSAILS PROPOSAL

The following statement was made yesterday by Robert H. Anderson, Jacksonville attorney, who was a member of the National Democratic Convention in Chicago last June which nominated President-elect Roosevelt. Mr. Anderson was a member of the resolutions committee which drafted the Democratic platform and a coauthor of the repeal plank, in support of which he spoke before the convention.

His statement follows:

"The National Democratic Convention held in Chicago last summer adopted a platform which has been generally conceded to be one of the finest declarations of party principles ever promulgated by a political party in this country. Its chief qualities were its brevity, its obvious sincerity, its directness, and its want of equivocation on any subject. On prohibition the platform declared:

"'We advocate the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

"'To effect such repeal we demand that the Congress immediately propose a constitutional amendment to truly representative conventions in States called to act solely on that proposal; we urge the enactment of such measures by the several States as will actually promote temperance, effectively prevent the return of the saloon and bring the liquor traffic into the open under complete supervision and control by the States.

"'We demand that the Federal Government effectively exercise its power to enable the States to protect themselves against importation of intoxicating liquor in violation of their laws.

"'Pending repeal, we favor adequate modification of the Volstead Act to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer and other beverages of such alcoholic content as is permissible under the Constitution, and to derive therefrom a proper and needed revenue.'

ADOPTED OVERWHELMINGLY

"This platform was overwhelmingly adopted in the resolutions committee and by the convention in open session. Upon it the Democratic Party went before the people of this country in November, 1932, and its candidates received the largest vote ever recorded.

"There can be no possible doubt that the Democratic Party's platform on the subject of prohibition is backed by tremendous popular sentiment in the United States.

"Notwithstanding these facts, however, the Judiciary Committee of the Senate of the United States has proposed a resolution which, in substance, provides:

"1. The repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

"2. The prohibition of the transportation or importing into any State or Territory for delivery or use therein, of intoxicating liquors in violation of the laws thereof.

"3. That Congress shall have concurrent power to regulate or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquor to be drunk on the premises where sold.

"4. That the amendments shall be ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

"This proposal is about as far from that which the Democratic Party in its platform promised the people it would support as one can possibly be. It violates almost every provision of the party platform. It is true that it repeals the eighteenth amendment but it substitutes for it a Federal control of the sale of intoxicating liquors to be drunk on the premises where sold. This will authorize the continued employment of the army of Federal "snoopers" at a cost of millions of dollars—one of the chief causes of prohibition's unpopularity and one of the principal reasons that the American people are determined to get rid of it.

"It is now generally conceded that national prohibition was a mistake because prohibition is a police regulation and has no place in the Federal Constitution. It is a matter for regulation by the States and its regulation ought to be confined to the States. The attempted regulation of the sale of intoxicating liquors by the Federal Government is the chief reason for prohibition's miserable failure.

"The Democratic Party solemnly promised the people to return the prohibition question to the States where it belongs. The pending Senate resolution is a violation of that promise and Democratic Senators supporting it are breaking the party's faith with the people. A plainer and more deliberate breach of faith can hardly be conceived. I therefore call upon Democratic Senators to eliminate from this resolution Section 3 and to keep their party's promise to the people by urging the enactment of such measures 'by the several States' as will actually promote temperance, effectively prevent the return of the saloon, and bring the liquor traffic into the open 'under complete supervision and control by the States.'

"I have no particular objection to section 2, which prohibits the transportation of liquor into dry States in violation of the laws thereof, although it is unnecessary, because Congress indisputably has that power anyhow. However, if the dry States wish it written into the Constitution any more plainly than it is already, I shall not protest.

FOR CONVENTION PLAN

"I do object, however, to that part of the resolution which proposes its ratification by the legislatures of the several States. There is just one phase of the prohibition question upon which sentiment was unanimous in both Republican and Democratic conventions, and that is that the proposed amendment should be submitted for ratification or rejection to conventions of the several States instead of to the legislatures. In this way the question would be divorced from all others and an expression of popular sentiment obtained upon one of the most controversial issues which has ever faced this country. Both the majority and the minority planks which were proposed at the Republican convention favored submission to conventions, and both the majority and minority planks in the Democratic convention proposed submission to conventions. Never did anyone object to it, but, on the contrary, everyone agreed that this was the most desirable plan. Now comes along the Senate of the United States and proposes something entirely different.

"I protest against it and insist upon a resolution in full compliance with the Democratic platform.

"All my life I have fought prohibition. For 12 years I have looked forward to the day when I should see it taken out of the Federal Constitution. But I shall not support this resolution which is pending in the Senate, for the reason that it is not the resolution which we promised the people. If and when it is passed, as much as I dislike to do so, I shall join hands with the drys in an effort to defeat its ratification in the Florida Legislature, because I know that if we defeat this one, the time will come when we will have a Senate composed of men who are responsive to popular demands and who will submit the kind of amendment the people have said they want."

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION—REPEAL OF PROHIBITION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 211, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to address myself to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to take up for consideration the joint resolution providing for the submission of the question of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the States.

I now am opposed to the joint resolution. I presume it will be in such form when we come to a final vote upon it that I shall still be opposed to it at that time and shall vote against it. I presume that statement will lessen the effect of what I have to say, but I think it fair to make the record full and complete.

While I am opposed to the joint resolution, I know of no reason, so far as the resolution itself is concerned, why it should not be voted upon by the States at the earliest practicable date. I can see nothing to be gained by delaying action upon the part of the States, assuming that there are a sufficient number of votes in the Senate and the House to submit the proposed constitutional amendment; and if the situation with reference to the calendar of legislative business were different, I should not interpose any objection whatever to taking up the joint resolution for consideration at this time.

I was one of the members of the subcommittee which had to do with the framing of the joint resolution, and I think my colleagues will bear me out when I say that I sought in no manner to delay the consideration of the question. I should not seek now to delay it if it were not for the situation, as I see it, with reference to the legislative calendar.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I do not see how voting upon the joint resolution and submitting it by Congress prior to the 4th of March will expedite the ratification of the proposed constitutional amendment or its rejection by the States in any respect whatever. By the time it shall have reached the States very few of the legislatures will be in session; it will be practically impossible to secure any final action—I should say it will be impossible to secure any final action—by the present legislatures; there will not be a sufficient number in session to make any considerable showing with reference to action upon the joint resolution. Even if we should incorporate an amendment which would provide for ratification by conventions instead of the legislatures, still no progress would have been made, for the legislatures undoubtedly will have to provide for such conventions. So I can see no progress to be gained in the question of time by reason of our acting upon the joint resolution prior to the 4th of March. There are bills upon the calendar, however, upon which speedy action should be had, and which will lose much of their effect and much of their benefit to those whom we would serve if they are not speedily enacted. I do not think it is practically possible to take up this joint resolution and dispose of these other bills to which I am going to make reference in a moment.

If we take up the joint resolution I think we must make up our minds, as was indicated yesterday by the able Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], that any matter of relief legislation either for the farmers or of a general nature must be postponed until after the 4th of March. After the 4th of March there will be no special session called certainly before the middle of March or the first of April; and then it will be, say, the 1st of May before we are organized and before we shall have opportunity to consider and pass upon these questions, act as speedily as we may, and that will rob two of these measures of very much of their benefit.

For instance, we have on the calendar what is known as the bankruptcy bill, or, as I prefer to call it, the insolvency bill, which includes the measure introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] looking to a composition of the indebtedness upon the farms throughout the United States. Certainly there can be no measure of more importance for immediate action than that measure; and if it is not enacted at this session hundreds and perhaps thousands of homes and farms will have been forfeited or abandoned, if not held by force, by reason of the delay. It does seem to me that we are confronted with the question of whether we are going to adjourn without having done anything with reference to relief for agriculture or for the general relief of unemployment if we proceed with the consideration of this measure.

I need not say to the Senate how serious the situation in the country is. Every Senator knows it. It would be merely repeating what is in the minds of Senators to say how serious the situation is in the agricultural regions. If something is not done along the lines covered by the bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], or some measure of that kind, literally thousands of these people are going to lose their farms, unless, as I say, they proceed to do as they have been doing—hold their farms by force.

It is often said that there is impending in this country a revolution; and that, of course, is discounted very largely by many people. Mr. President, there is already a revolution, and it has been consummated in many places. There are places in the United States now where courts can not operate, where the processes of the courts are frustrated by sheer force; and that spreads from the old State of Pennsylvania to the State of Idaho.

I read a day or two ago of where a crowd of farmers took possession of a sale in Pennsylvania and decided how it should be conducted, when it should cease, and under what circumstances the sale should be made. I read in my State that where an effort was made to foreclose a mortgage, the gentleman who undertook to do it was tarred and feathered and sent out of the State. We know what is happening in Nebraska and Minnesota and Iowa.

Mr. President, every farmer in the United States is looking with anxious solicitude to the Congress of the United States to know whether or not anything is going to be done prior to the 4th day of March. If nothing is done by that time, knowing the situation as they will know it, this condition will be accentuated and aggravated beyond the power of language to portray.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator is familiar with the fact that both political parties pledged themselves to submit to the people this question of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. In view of the pledges of the two parties, does not the Senator think the matter might be taken up and disposed of within a very short time?

Mr. BORAH. I think the parties can control some things, but not time in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not true that the new Congress is going to convene soon after the 4th of March, and these pledges can be redeemed by the party that will then be in power, and redeemed at a time to which it is only fair to say that all the resolutions of both political parties had reference when they agreed to them?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit another question?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Nebraska mean that the Republican Party is absolved from its pledge to redeem the promise made? If not, it is in power to-day. It has the Executive and the Senate. Why should not it proceed to the redemption of its pledge?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I do not know. The country seemed to go over to the other side and place the responsibility and the power in the Democratic Party. They have not gone into power yet; and I do not want to be so cruel to them as to insist that they carry out their pledges before they get in power.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I recognize that a general pledge touching this subject was made by both parties, and that there is a party obligation to submit this question; and I have no desire to stand in the way of its submission. We are confronted, however, with a situation in which, if this pledge is carried out, it is proof positive that other pledges which have been made can not be carried out; and I am simply contending before the Senate now that we ought to make up our minds at this time as to whether we are going to carry out our pledges with reference to relief of agriculture and unemployment relief. Those were acute questions in the campaign, thoroughly discussed by both parties, and pledges made without any equivocation, far more direct as to one party than the pledge with reference to repeal.

We not only have the insolvency bill to which I have referred, but we also have the unemployment bill, pending on the calendar of the Senate; and both those questions are matters which certainly call for immediate action.

The question with me is, Can we dispose of this joint resolution and also dispose of these other matters? If I thought we could do so, it would not make a particle of difference to me which precedes the other, just so that we are able to dispose of them before the 4th day of March.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The questions involved in the joint resolution which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] has moved to consider are comparatively simple and few in number. Does not the Senator from Idaho think that if the Senate really wishes to transact business it can dispose of this question and vote on the joint resolution, and also consider the emergency relief legislation, including the amendments to the bankruptcy law to which the Senator has made such impressive reference?

I agree that if a situation is brought about where the Senate must elect between a bill authorizing the composition of farm indebtedness and legislation relating to the liquor question, it would present an embarrassing and difficult situation with respect to the repeal resolution. It seems to me, however, that there are only a few questions to be determined in connection with this subject of submitting a joint resolution for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment; and I say now that there is scarcely a Member of the Senate who does not already know exactly how he is going to vote.

I intend to offer amendments, at the request and suggestion of Senators on both sides of the Chamber, that will reach a resolution as to the preference of the Senate between conventions and legislatures as the agency for ratification, and also an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the joint resolution which will provide for repeal without imposing upon the Federal Government the obligation to prevent the return of saloons or to impose constitutional arrangements for the prevention of the importation of alcoholic liquors into dry territory.

Realizing that it is possible under the rules of the Senate to prolong a debate indefinitely, and knowing that the Senator from Idaho never indulges in the practice of filibustering, I am wondering why we can not do the sensible and practical thing—discuss this joint resolution fairly, and the amendments that are proposed to it, and vote on it.

I desire to make this additional suggestion: If it is necessary to accomplish that end and to pass upon the various bills to which the Senator from Idaho has referred, we ought to be willing to stay in session here of evenings. We always do that toward the close of a session, especially a short session. If the Senate really desires to do business, there is no reason why we can not vote on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] and on the amendments that are proposed to the joint resolution and dispose of this question between now and 10 o'clock to-night, and then proceed to the consideration of the so-called bankruptcy bill and other measures of relief, including the destitution relief bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion there?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I have not the faith that the Senator has that we shall be able to do that, and yet I agree with him that there is really no reason why we should not. But, Mr. President, if that is true, the farm bill is now on the calendar; and in view of the fact that that bill has to go to the House, and will undoubtedly take time, would not the Senator from Wisconsin be willing to let us dispose of the farm bill first, with the understanding that as soon as that is disposed of this measure is to follow? That will give us an assurance of doing something for a situation which every Senator here knows is a dangerous one.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield; and to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the senior Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it seems to me that the unemployment relief bill is entitled to precedence over the bankruptcy bill. I am interested in both; but the unemployment relief bill has been on the calendar for many days. I have patiently awaited an opportunity to get it up for consideration, and have received sympathetic assurances from the leaders on both sides of the Chamber that the bill is entitled to consideration; but at every conference I was met with the statement that there was a general understanding that the repeal joint resolution should be given an opportunity for hearing first.

I feel, Mr. President, that I could not agree to the procedure which the Senator from Idaho has suggested, because I feel a certain responsibility and obligation so far as the unemployment-relief legislation is concerned.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I can well understand the feeling of the Senator from Wisconsin. I know his deep interest in the subject, and he has given a vast amount of time to it. He knows the facts of the situation, and I am thoroughly in favor of his measure. I mentioned it as one of the measures we ought to pass before the 4th of March. But I felt this way in regard to the matter, that the States and the cities are, in a measure, taking care of that situation, although I have no idea that they will be able to carry on any great length of time. It seemed to me, in view of the fact that the American farmer, the backbone of law and order in the United States, is now defending his title with force, that there was a necessity for prompt action, not only for the relief which such action would give, but for the psychological effect which it would have upon those who are getting into a state of mind so that we can not foretell what will happen in the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, which farm bill has the Senator in mind, the one that has been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. BORAH. I have reference to the bill which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, known as the bankruptcy bill, but really a composition bill, or insolvency bill, which, I think, has tremendous merit. I know that there is a difference of opinion about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want to get into an argument over that bill now, but, having in mind the farm situation with respect to foreclosure of mortgages, I wanted to inquire of the Senator whether he thinks the bankruptcy bill, so called, would offer any real relief or remedy to the average farmer?

Mr. BORAH. I think it would offer real relief, and I think it would offer the most immediate relief. The allotment plan, whatever good there may be in it, could not operate sufficiently speedily to protect those who are being sold out. The bill offered by the Senator from Arkansas has speedy action in view. I believe that it would accomplish it in a reasonable way. It would bridge over the chasm until there was a possibility that the people might save their farms and save their homes, either through resuscitation of the economic situation generally or through some relief measure which may be passed by Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield further, I may say that I am in entire sympathy with what the Senator has in mind, and with the plans to alleviate the situation. A subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency has been considering for some days, and has reported to the full committee, a measure dealing with the temporary needs for a period of two years while we undertake to write permanent legislation for the farm-mortgage situation. That measure would not require the farmer to take advantage of the bankruptcy law in order to get the benefits of the relief offered.

Mr. BORAH. The bill of the Senator from Arkansas would not require the farmer to take advantage of the bankruptcy law. He would not even be referred to as a bankrupt; he would be referred to as a debtor, and the other man as a creditor. It would furnish an arrangement by which they might compose their differences and readjust them in accordance with the equities of the situation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The arrangement for compositions contemplated by the bill to which the Senator from Idaho has referred would work in with the bill which the Senator from Kentucky has in mind, to be reported, we hope, from the Committee on Banking and Currency. When compositions are made between farmers and their creditors, if the bill the Senator from Kentucky has in mind, a temporary measure for suspending foreclosure, is passed, it will enable the farmer who has composed his indebtedness in a satisfactory way with his creditors to refinance his obligations over a period, which will save him from seeing his home sold from under him.

The Senator from Idaho is entirely correct; without some arrangement to scale down these debts, it will be impossible, in my judgment, to refinance them under present conditions.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly. As has been said upon the floor of the Senate, the indebtedness of the farmers of the United States now is something like twelve or thirteen billion dollars. That is the amount of the face of the paper. Measured by commodity prices which prevailed at the time the indebtedness was contracted, the debt now amounts to nearer $30,000,000,000, and unless we can do something, such as what is provided in the bill to which we have made reference introduced by the Senator from Arkansas, unless we can scale down the interest, unless we can reduce the mortgage itself, there will be absolutely no hope for the American farmer, because a return of prices of commodities will not come in time to save him. He must have a remedy at hand.

I have gone over all the bills introduced by different Senators who are anxious to deal with the situation, and the only bill that would afford immediate relief and place the farmer in a position where he could really adjust himself to the situation and perhaps get an extension of economic life, in my judgment, is the bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas.

The allotment plan is lying back in the committee, and the longer it lies in the committee the more it will be opposed. I do not know whether it will be reported or not. If it does, it could not possibly affect favorably the situation until another crop has been sowed and reaped.

Therefore, Mr. President, I beg with all earnestness that we make absolutely certain that the 4th of March shall not pass before we enact a measure which will enable the farmer to get some relief against the crushing forces which are now driving him from his home.

It seems to me nothing less than fair to the situation to put the bill of the Senator from Arkansas ahead of the joint resolution of the Senator from Wisconsin. So far as I am concerned, I do not propose to waste time upon either one of the measures, taking time for the sake of taking time, but I feel rather intense about the fact that we should not put ahead of farm relief the matter of repealing the eighteenth amendment, when the legislatures of the States could not possibly act upon it within the next 12 months.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Idaho has said, although I expect to vote for the joint resolution of the Senator from Wisconsin. I do not see why we can not have a unanimous-consent agreement to vote within a reasonable time. If the consideration of the joint resolution should lead to extended debate, I would be ready at any time to vote to lay it aside for the consideration of more important and more pressing business.

In regard to what has been said here to-day about saving the farmer, I need not recall what has been repeated for the last 10 or 15 years. I do want to call attention, however, to the fact that there are those who now need to be saved other than the farmer. It is very easy to talk about scaling down the debts of the farmer, and that ought to be done, but when it is done, let us bear in mind also, when we are dealing with the debts of the farmers, that we are dealing with the savings of millions of other people. The farm mortgages are piled up in the life insurance companies and savings banks. The savings of the people are invested in these mortgages. If the desire is to save the farmer, bear in mind the savings of those whose funds are invested in the mortgages of the farmers. And if we come to pass legislation to cut the mortgages of the farmers in two, we must frame some compensatory legislation to take care of those who have invested their savings in farm mortgages.

If we write down the face of a farm mortgage, we will have to write down the face value of life insurance policies and savings bank accounts. This will not be necessary if we write down the interest rate rather than principal.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I have talked with the representatives of some insurance companies, and they would a great deal rather have a mortgage on a farm on which the farmer has a chance to pay out than to have a farm which they would have to take over and pay taxes on themselves, run by a tenant who would be less capable than the man who is now on the farm. Their security lies in the fact of getting prosperity to the American farmer. Otherwise their savings are worthless.

Of course, we would have to take into consideration the insurance companies, the policyholders, and so forth, but it is not correct to say that the insurance policies and the savings accounts would be scaled down in the same proportion in which the farm mortgages were, because they are deriving benefit out of the fact that their security is made better by reason of the readjustment which is to be made.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I make no denial of anything the Senator has said. I am talking about protecting the savings of the people, and I think it can be done without writing down the face of the mortgages. We can preserve the savings and the principal involved at the expense of income by writing down the interest rates, instead of taking it out of capital savings.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, logically the same result would be accomplished by a reduction of the interest payment where the payment comprehends amortization as by scaling down the debts, although in a less degree.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But the Senator must bear in mind the conditions which now exist with respect to farm mortgages. In many parts of the country those who have their savings invested in farm mortgages are losing them by reason of the foreclosures which are in progress and by reason of the fact that at the sale the property brings practically nothing. The lands are so depreciated and the prices bid are such that those who have savings in farm mortgages are losing far more now than they could possibly lose under the arrangement for compositions contemplated by the bill to which reference has been made. And they realize it. I have encountered no substantial objection on the part of actual investors who are alleged to have their savings in farm mortgages. They know that unless something is done, and speedily done, they will lose practically everything they have invested in those mortgages, and they infinitely prefer an arrangement which will give them good security, even though they have to sacrifice a part of the principal.

If the present condition is permitted to go on and gather volume, we will see a most alarming situation in all the agricultural sections of the country. Farmers are going to the courthouses and objecting to sales for taxes and under mortgage foreclosures, and when sales are made the property is bringing practically nothing. Not only is the investor losing but that measure of confidence and hope which is essential to a revival of business is being constantly diminished.

I do feel, however, that there is no occasion for reaching the conclusion now that so simple a matter as is involved in the repeal resolution must be treated as if it were a subject of great complexity, and debated after the character of frequent proceedings in the Senate for days and weeks. If we desire to do business, and will demonstrate the fact by staying here at night, we ought to vote on this joint resolution before the end of the day.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I have no desire to continue the debate on this farm question now, but I want to say a few words of warning lest when we deal with the farm question we do not initiate measures which will bring on a worse condition than exists now.

As I said in the beginning there are two sides to the question. If we begin on the theory of reduction through bankruptcy proceedings, we will have to go through to the ultimate conclusion. We are not going to be able to stop with farm mortgages. We are going to have to cut, possibly by 50 per cent, every bond issued in the United States. Go ahead and do it, but what happens to the liabilities? The liabilities are piled up against these assets. If we are going to take the bankruptcy route instead of some other way of more constructive legislation, we will close every bank in the country and bankrupt every life-insurance company in the country. I do not believe farmers can be saved in that way.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I realize the necessity for solving the farm problem so far as we can, but it strikes me that the purpose of the joint resolution embraced in the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin is well known to everybody. I do not see why at 4 o'clock this afternoon we can not vote on it and all amendments to it.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. Let us get an agreement to that effect right now.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator from Arkansas that at 4 o'clock this afternoon every man will know what he wants, and we can vote on the proposal and every amendment pending to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if we can not do it by 4 o'clock this afternoon, we can do it at 9 o'clock to-night.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask unanimous consent that at 5 o'clock this afternoon the Senate proceed to vote upon Senate Joint Resolution 211 and all amendments thereto, without any further debate of any kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. BORAH. I will wait until we hear from the request of the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, it would take until two weeks after the 4th of March to reply to all the arguments the Senator from Maryland has made on the booze question in the Senate during the last year, so I shall object to his unanimous-consent request.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator set some time to which he will consent? I want to get to the agricultural problem and its solution. That is the only reason why I made the suggestion.

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes; I will agree that a vote shall be taken on the first day of the first session of the new Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS. Here we are, Mr. President, with a great need for agricultural legislation. I, as one who believes in the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, am ready to eliminate all debate, to say not a word about it at all, and to take a vote at this very minute without any debate at all, because every Senator knows how he will vote. No votes are going to be changed by discussion or argument. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that after 2 o'clock, one hour from now, there shall be no further debate on the joint resolution or any amendment offered thereto, and that we shall proceed to vote upon the joint resolution and all amendments offered thereto without any further debate of any kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, this is just a little bit worse than the other request, so I object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire briefly to reply to one or two suggestions made by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I do not believe the Senate should be led into the assumption that a repeal resolution will pass at the next session of the Congress that will not delay ratification of such a resolution four years. As I understand, there are some 41 or 42 State legislatures now in session. In none of the States in which the legislature is in session is the legislative period less than 60 legislative days. Sixty legislative days carry the final adjournment of the legislature of such States a trifle beyond the 4th of March. There is another class of States which have a 90-day limitation on their legislative sessions. Then there are other States having longer periods of limitation and some without any limitation whatever.

Therefore if the joint resolution is acted upon by this Congress it can go to 41 or 42 State legislatures immediately for action. If that does not occur, if the joint resolution is defeated at this session of the Congress, then Senators can make up their minds that since there will be very few State legislatures meeting in 1934 there will be no chance for ratification whatever until the legislative sessions of 1935. If the convention system is agreed upon as the mode for ratification, then it is obvious that ratification will be deferred about four years, or even more.

Mr. President, the subject of the eighteenth amendment has been a disturbing political question in the country for the last few years. The political parties have finally resolved upon the question very definitely. Now is the time and now is the occasion to carry out that resolve which in my opinion reflects the mature judgment of the people of the country. When the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] undertakes to exaggerate the importance of the so-called bankruptcy bill in order to displace the consideration of this repeal measure, it seems to me that the Senate might well be informed of some matters respecting the so-called bankruptcy proposal.

The Senator from Idaho knows full well my opinion about the bankruptcy measure. In my humble opinion, the passage of the measure so far as it relates to agriculture means more distress and harm to agriculture. Unless the bankruptcy measure or insolvency measure, or whatever it may be called, is modified to protect the farmer in his right to his homestead, in his right to his exemptions, then we are placing all that he has in the hands of those who want to tyrannize over him as creditors.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I point this out to show that there is a keen difference of opinion, and it is an easy matter to exaggerate the importance of particular measures, whether they are so-called farm-relief measures or unemployment-relief measures. I have heard the debate going on for the last several years.

I will yield to the Senator from Arizona in just a moment, unless the Senator has something apropos of what I have just said.

Mr. ASHURST. I am sure the Senator does not wish to give the inference—because the Senator is too able a lawyer to give such an inference—that the Congress has power, in dealing with the manner in which the estate of a bankrupt shall be distributed, to override or annul State laws as to homestead exemptions and dower rights. Congress has no such power.

Mr. BLAINE. I appreciate the attitude of the Senator from Arizona. Of course, as the Senator from Arizona well understood when the bill was before the committee, it was my contention that the bill, in so far as it undertook to deprive the farmer of those rights, would be unconstitutional; but the bill as reported out by the committee assumes that authority, and it is proposed to drive that bill through the Congress with that authority in it. I must therefore assume that the other members of the Judiciary Committee, all of whom are distinguished lawyers, disagree with my position respecting the invalidity of those provisions of the bill. I do not believe that those lawyers, all able men and sincere men, would report out a bill which they believe would be held to be invalid and unconstitutional in any of its provisions.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator will do me the justice to recall that I stated in the committee just what I said here a moment ago. Congress has no power to sweep away the homestead exemption or the dower right which some States have seen fit to grant to their citizens.

Mr. BLAINE. The bill takes the property and all property of the debtor—exempt property, homestead rights, and all other property—and puts it under the control and jurisdiction of the court, and the court may determine the priority of payments out of the proceeds from that property.

It was not my purpose to engage in a discussion of the so-called bankruptcy bill. I merely wanted to point out these matters in order, if possible, to indicate the exaggerations to which men are prone to go in advancing some of their particular theories and opinions.

Mr. President, in my opinion not only can the joint resolution be disposed of but the bill providing for revenue from the manufacture and sale of malted liquors can be passed, the so-called farm-relief measures can be considered and passed, the unemployment-relief measure can be passed at this session of Congress if Congress will get down to work. But if the Senate is to meet at 12 o'clock noon and adjourn or recess before 6 o'clock in the afternoon, with the interminable debate that is carried on, then we can not do it. Senators will recall that we took 21 or 22 days on one bill. One appropriation measure consumed two weeks of the time of the Senate. As I recall, we held night sessions during the consideration of that appropriation bill only on two nights, and then not later than 10 o'clock at night. If the Senate is willing to work, if the Senate is industrious, if we want to consider any of these propositions, if it is our conscientious opinion and belief that these measures should be passed, then we can legislate if we will stay here until a reasonable hour of the night.

Mr. President, I shall not discuss the merits of this proposition; that I shall forbear presently. It could be pointed out as to the great benefits that would flow to agriculture and to the workingmen of this country if we once should take prohibition out of the Constitution and permit the Congress and the States to legislate freely upon the subject; but I am not going to discuss that feature at this time.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BLAINE. I want first to make a unanimous-consent request; and I do so in the interest of expedition not only of the joint resolution but of all other legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that, beginning at 3 o'clock this afternoon, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes upon the motion.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. There has been an enormous amount of debate on this question in the Senate during the last year or two, in nearly all cases from the wet side. It is the wets who have done the talking. They have corrupted the public sentiment of the country; they have brought the big newspapers into line with them; they have created a political situation here that may be binding on the next Congress. At the present time the House majority would stand on one party platform, and, if the Republicans were united, the Senate majority would stand on a different platform.

This is the most controversial subject in the United States, and to bring it up in this short session at this late day, and after all that the wet side of the question has done in the last year is the most unreasonable proposition ever presented to the Senate; and, of course, I shall object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa objects.

Mr. BLAINE. I am sure the Senator from Iowa can not charge that I have devoted much time of the Senate to a discussion of the wet and dry question. The time that I have consumed on that subject during my tenure here has been very limited. I have desired action, not words.

Now, Mr. President, just another suggestion. I shall renew this request at 2 o'clock this afternoon. I want to be reasonable; there is nothing about the motion that is technical; everyone understands the motion. Therefore I want to suggest to the Senator from Iowa and to other Senators who may object to the unanimous-consent request that, if I can obtain the floor, at 2 o'clock I shall renew my request, placing the hour then at 4 o'clock; and in the event that I can not obtain unanimous consent on some reasonable ground, I shall then ask the Senate to stay in continuous session until this motion can be determined, and we shall undertake to decide whether or not a majority of the Senate can function.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me say that I have never, as has been previously stated, engaged in a filibuster here, but there are two ways by which one can filibuster; and if there is going to be an undertaking in the first hours of this debate to wear men down physically in order to get a vote, I assure the Senator from Wisconsin that there will be two sides to that proposition.

Mr. BLAINE. I accept the assurance of the Senator from Idaho, but I want to point out to the Senator from Idaho that if he is going to get action upon the so-called bankruptcy bill, if he is going to get action upon other legislation of a general character, he will find that it will require industry and attention, and that we can not adjourn or recess between 5 or 6 o'clock and transact the business of the Senate. It will require night sessions and sometimes, perhaps, sessions long into the night. It is not a question of wearing men down; it is a question of determining whether or not we are going to pursue a course of industry in the Senate, or are we going to surrender to a small minority.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator is now speaking about a different proposition. I am perfectly willing to utilize all reasonable hours; I am perfectly willing to come here at 10 o'clock in the morning; but, Mr. President, we are not going to stay here all night—I serve notice of that fact—and make any progress whatever.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, Mr. President, I will mellow my request. If we shall not have made some reasonable progress within the next hour or two, I shall request the Senate to stay in session at least until 10 o'clock this evening.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise merely to seek information and direction from the Senator from Idaho. With my colleague, I represent a State wherein is located the city of Chicago, representing one-half of the population of that State. That city, its toilers, its laborers, and its people generally may be said to have a great interest in the measure referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. A large element in that city have equally a very great interest in the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the results which may directly flow therefrom.

On the other side are the farmers of the great State of Illinois. My colleague and myself have tried to voice their interest. They are, of course, greatly concerned in any form of relief for agriculture. I therefore wish to ask the eminent Senator from Idaho a question. First, however, I call his attention to the fact that the statement he made on the floor of the Senate a few moments ago, that the so-called bankruptcy bill, to which he has alluded, would carry relief to the farmers in their present unhappy distress, will reach very far, and because of his eminent position here will be circulated generally, so that the belief will prevail that in this particular measure there is a feature of some nature that will give to the farmer as such immediate relief.

I am unable to see in the bankruptcy bill what provision it is that my eminent friend the Senator from Idaho alludes to as covering such a subject and describing such a possibility of relief. I rise to ask the Senator from Idaho, both because of his association with the Judiciary Committee and his well-known position on questions of relief in behalf of the needy, what provision of the bankruptcy bill that is now before us, which many of us have considered in committee, does my eminent friend feel is addressed to agriculture whereby the farmer would get any immediate relief if that bill were passed?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I referred to that portion of the bill which incorporates a measure introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], dealing exclusively with the question of the indebtedness between the farmer and his creditors, and which sets up the machinery for composing the differences with some detail. I do not know whether the Senator is referring to the bill that passed the House; that bill contained no such provision; but if the Senator will refer to the bill as it came out of the Judiciary Committee, he will see that we have incorporated in it the bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas dealing with that subject.

Mr. LEWIS. I do refer to the bill coming out of the Judiciary Committee, and my judgment was, upon reading it, that the provision that permits the composure of obligations between creditor and debtor, as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, calls for the consent of the creditor to the desires of the debtor, and therefore presumes special negotiations between the debtor and the creditor. We will thus be launched upon individual action on the part of the debtor and the creditor, which will extend through such periods of time that I fear none of us, in view of the tendency of creditors generally, will live long enough to see such a composure as could relieve the farmer who might finally be yielded to or that would be of any benefit whatever to any of those who may be interested. Such is my fear. I would hope to the contrary, but I wish to point out to the eminent Senator from Idaho that that bill as it stands, instead of giving relief to the farmer, turns him over to the creditor to consent to that relief or to withhold it, to the complete destruction of the debtor at the will of the creditor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to put in the RECORD, in connection with the question asked of me by the able Senator from Illinois, a portion of the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee, beginning with section 75 and including the remainder of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The portion of the bill referred to is as follows:

SEC. 75. Agricultural compositions and extensions: (a) Courts of bankruptcy are authorized, upon petition of at least 15 farmers within any county who certify that they intend to file petitions under this section, to appoint for such county one or more referees to be known as conciliation commissioners, or to designate for service in such county a conciliation commissioner previously appointed for an adjacent county. In case more than one conciliation commissioner is appointed for a county, each commissioner shall act separately and shall have such territorial jurisdiction within the county as the court shall specify. A conciliation commissioner shall have a term of office of one year and may be removed by the court if his services are no longer needed or for other cause. No individual shall be eligible to appointment as a conciliation commissioner unless he is eligible for appointment as a referee and in addition is a resident of the county, familiar with agricultural conditions therein and not engaged in the farm-mortgage business, the business of financing farmers or transactions in agricultural commodities or the business of marketing or dealing in agricultural commodities or of furnishing agricultural supplies. In each judicial district the court may, if it finds it necessary or desirable, appoint a suitable person as a supervising conciliation commissioner. The supervising conciliation commissioner shall have such supervisory functions under this section as the court may by order specify.

(b) Upon filing of any petition by a farmer or creditor under this section there shall be paid a fee of $10, to be transmitted to the clerk of the court and covered into the Treasury. The conciliation commissioner shall receive as compensation for his services, including all expenses, a fee of $10 for each case docketed and submitted to him, to be paid out of the Treasury. A supervising conciliation commissioner shall receive as compensation for his services a per diem allowance to be fixed by the court, in an amount not in excess of $5 per day, together with subsistence and travel expenses in accordance with the law applicable to officers of the Department of Justice. Such compensation and expenses shall be paid out of the Treasury. If the creditors at any time desire supervision over the farming operations of a farmer, the cost of such supervision shall be borne by such creditors or by the farmer, as may be agreed upon by them, but in no instance shall the farmer be required to pay more than one-half of the cost of such supervision. Nothing contained in this section shall prevent a conciliation commissioner who supervises such farming operations from receiving such compensation therefor as may be so agreed upon. No fees, costs, or other charges shall be charged or taxed to any farmer or his creditors by any conciliation commissioner or with respect to any proceeding under this section, except as hereinbefore in this section provided. The conciliation commissioner may accept and avail himself of office space, equipment, and assistance furnished him by other Federal officials, or by any State, county, or other public officials. The Supreme Court is authorized to make such general orders as it may find necessary properly to govern the administration of the office of conciliation commissioner and proceedings under this section; but any district court of the United States may, for good cause shown and in the interests of justice, permit any such general order to be waived.

(c) At any time within five years after this section takes effect a petition may be filed by any farmer, or by any creditor of such farmer, stating that the farmer is insolvent or unable to meet his debts as they mature, and that it is desirable to effect a composition or an extension of time to pay his debts. The petition or answer of the farmer shall be accompanied by his schedules. The petition and answer shall be filed with the court, but shall, on request of the farmer or creditor, be received by the conciliation commissioner for the county in which the farmer resides and promptly transmitted by him to the clerk of the court for filing. If any such petition is filed, an order of adjudication shall not be entered, except as provided hereinafter in this section.

(d) After the filing of such petition or answer by the farmer, the farmer shall, within such time and in such form as the conciliation commissioner shall determine, file an inventory of his estate.

(e) The conciliation commissioner shall promptly call the first meeting of creditors, stating in the notice that the farmer proposes to offer terms of composition or extension, and inclosing with the notice a summary of the inventory, a brief statement of the farmer's indebtedness as shown by the schedules, and a list of the names and addresses of the secured creditors and unsecured creditors, with the amounts owing to each as shown by the schedules. At the first meeting of the creditors the farmer may be examined, and the creditors may appoint a committee to submit to the conciliation commissioner a supplementary inventory of the farmer's estate. The conciliation commissioner shall, after hearing the parties in interest, fix a reasonable time within which application for confirmation shall be made, and may later extend such time for cause shown. After the filing of the petition and prior to the confirmation or other disposition of the composition or extension proposal by the court, the court shall exercise such control over the property of the farmer as the court deems in the best interests of the farmer and his creditors.

(f) There shall be prepared by, or under the supervision of, the conciliation commissioner a final inventory of the farmer's estate, and in the preparation of such inventory the commissioner shall give due consideration to the inventory filed by the farmer and to any supplementary inventory filed by a committee of the creditors.

(g) An application for the confirmation of a composition or extension proposal may be filed in the court of bankruptcy after but not before (1) it has been accepted in writing by a majority in number of all creditors whose claims have been allowed, including secured creditors whose claims are affected, which number shall represent a majority in amount of such claims, and (2) the money or security necessary to pay all debts which have priority unless waived, and in case of a composition, the consideration to be paid by the farmer to his creditors has been deposited in such place as shall be designated by and subject to the order of the court.

(h) A date and place, with reference to the convenience of the parties in interest, shall be fixed for a hearing upon each application for the confirmation of the composition or extension proposal and upon such objections as may be made to its confirmation.

(i) The court shall confirm the proposal if satisfied that (1) it includes an equitable and feasible method of liquidation for secured creditors and of financial rehabilitation for the farmer; (2) it is for the best interests of all creditors; and (3) the offer and its acceptance are in good faith, and have not been made or procured except as herein provided, or by any means, promises, or acts herein forbidden. In applications for extensions the court shall require proof from each creditor filing a claim that such claim is free from usury as defined by the laws of the place where the debt is contracted.

(j) The terms of a composition or extension proposal may extend the time of payment of either secured or unsecured debts, or both, and may provide for priority of payments to be made during the period of extension as between secured and unsecured creditors. It may also include specific undertakings by the farmer during the period of the extension, including provisions for payments on account, and may provide for supervisory or other control by the conciliation commissioner over the farmer's affairs during such period, and for the termination of such period of supervision or control under conditions specified.

(k) Upon its confirmation a composition or extension proposal shall be binding upon the farmer and his secured and unsecured creditors affected thereby: Provided, That such composition or extension shall not impair the lien of any secured creditor, but shall affect only the time and method of its liquidation.

(l) Upon the confirmation of a composition the consideration shall be distributed under the supervision of the conciliation commissioner as the court shall direct, and the case dismissed. Upon the confirmation of an extension proposal the court may dismiss the proceeding or retain jurisdiction of the farmer and his property during the period of the extension in order to protect and preserve the estate and enforce through the conciliation commissioner the terms of the extension proposal. The court may, after hearing and for good cause shown, at any time during the period covered by an extension proposal that has been confirmed by the court, set the same aside, reinstate the case, and modify the terms of the extension proposal.

(m) The judge may, upon the application of any party in interest, file at any time within six months after the composition or extension proposal has been confirmed, set the same aside and reinstate the case, if it shall be made to appear upon a trial that fraud was practiced in the procuring of such composition or extension, and that knowledge thereof has come to the petitioners since the confirmation thereof.

(n) The filing of a petition pleading for relief under this section shall subject the farmer and his property, wherever located, to the exclusive jurisdiction of the court. In proceedings under this section, except as otherwise provided herein, the jurisdiction and powers of the court, the title, powers, and duties of its officers, the duties of the farmer, and the rights and liabilities of creditors, and of all persons with respect to the property of the farmer and the jurisdiction of the appellate courts, shall be the same as if a voluntary petition for adjudication had been filed and a decree of adjudication had been entered on the day when the farmer's petition or answer was filed.

(o) Except upon petition made to and granted by a court of bankruptcy after hearing and report by the conciliation commissioner, the following proceedings shall not be instituted, or if instituted at any time prior to the filing of a petition under this section, shall not be maintained, in any court or otherwise, against the farmer or his property, at any time after the filing of the petition under this section, and prior to the confirmation or other disposition of the composition or extension proposal by the court:

(1) Proceedings for any demand, debt, or account, including any money demand;

(2) Proceedings for foreclosure of a mortgage on land, or for cancellation, recision, or specific performance of an agreement for sale of land or for recovery of possession of land;

(3) Proceedings to acquire title to land by virtue of any tax sale;

(4) Proceedings by way of execution, attachment, or garnishment;

(5) Proceedings to sell land under or in satisfaction of any judgment or mechanic's lien; and

(6) Seizure, distress, sale, or other proceedings under an execution or under any lease, lien, chattel mortgage, conditional sale agreement, crop payment agreement, or mortgage.

(p) The prohibitions of subdivisions (o) shall not apply to proceedings for the collection of taxes, or interest or penalties with respect thereto, nor to proceedings affecting solely property other than that used in farming operations or comprising the home or household effects of the farmer or his family.

(q) A conciliation commissioner shall upon request assist any farmer in preparing and filing a petition under this section and in all matters subsequent thereto arising under this section and farmers shall not be required to be represented by an attorney in any proceeding under this section.

(r) For the purpose of this section and section 74, the term "farmer" means any individual who is personally bona fide engaged primarily in farming operations or the principal part of whose income is derived from farming operations, and includes the personal representative of a deceased farmer; and a farmer shall be deemed a resident of any county in which such farming operations occur.

WORK OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS FROM JULY 24, 1922, TO SEPTEMBER 30, 1922

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I feel justified in fighting this motion with every weapon at my command.

I have addressed the Senate so often on the subject of prohibition that I desire at this time to take up another question.

About 10 years ago—10 years lacking just 6 days—I addressed the Senate on the subject of the proceedings of the League of Nations, and brought those proceedings to July 24, 1922. I now propose to give an account of the league's transactions from July 24, 1922, to September 30, 1922.

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE

The league's official journal for September, 1922, shows that by September, 1922, the following 34 members of the league had ratified their signatures to the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice: Albania, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Denmark, Finland, France, Greece, Haiti, India, Italy, Japan, Lithuania, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Serb-Croat-Slovene State, Siam, Union of South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Uruguay, Venezuela;

That the following 13 had accepted and put into force among themselves the optional clause: Austria, Brazil, China, Denmark, Haiti, Lithuania, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland, Uruguay;

That the following had not yet ratified their signatures to the statute: Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Estonia, Latvia, Liberia, Luxemburg, Panama, Paraguay, Persia, Salvador.

BARCELONA CONVENTION OF APRIL 20, 1922

The official journal also shows that by September, 1922, Albania, Bulgaria, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, India, New Zealand, and Italy had ratified the Barcelona convention and statutes of April 20, 1922, relating to freedom of transit and the régime of navigable waterways of international concern; that Albania, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, India, and New Zealand had ratified the additional protocol of that date relating to the régime of navigable waterways of international concern; and that Albania and Bulgaria had ratified the Barcelona convention of that date recognizing the right to a flag of States having no sea coast.

TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN

The official journal shows further that by September, 1922, the following members of the league had signed the convention on the traffic in women and children, adopted at Geneva, September 30, 1921, and known as the convention of 1921: South Africa, Albania, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Great Britain, Canada, China, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Greece, India, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Lithuania, New Zealand, Norway, Netherlands, Persia, Poland and Free City of Danzig, Portugal, Rumania, Siam, Switzerland, Sweden.

That the following members had ratified their signatures: South Africa, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Great Britain, Canada, India, New Zealand, Norway, Siam.

That the following nonmembers of the league had signed said convention: Germany, Hungary.

RATIFICATION OF AMENDMENT TO THE COVENANT

The official journal further shows that by September, 1922, the following members had ratified the amendments to the covenant submitted October 5, 1921: Denmark, Italy; and that Norway had ratified all the amendments except the amendment to article 6.

REPLIES AS TO EXPENDITURE ON ARMAMENTS

It is further shown by the official journal that on June 22, 1922, the Italian Government, from which the league had, on June 7, requested a reply to its letter of January 17, 1922, regarding the resolution of the second assembly on the question of limitation of national expenditure for the next two fiscal years, replied confirming that Government's letter of May 23, 1921, in which was stated a willingness to adhere to the similar resolution by the first assembly, provided all the other league members would also adhere, excluding naval estimates for purposes not connected with war preparations, such as naval instruction, naval signals, and so forth. To an inquiry, dated June 7, regarding the same resolution, the Swiss Government in July, 1918, replied that on September 14, 1921, the head of the Swiss delegation in the assembly had stated the reason preventing the Swiss Government from limiting its military expenditure in 1922 and 1923 to a sum no larger than that of 1921, namely, the unusually small military outlay for that year due to pressure of other expenses; that this temporary condition was disappearing; and that it had hoped to be able not to exceed in 1923 and 1924 the expenditures on armaments in 1922. To a similar inquiry, dated June 17, the Finnish Government answered on July 10, 1922, with a reaffirmation of its letter of April 26, 1921, stating that it welcomed the proposal for a general limitation of armaments, and had adopted a policy of decreasing the period of military service.

On July 10, 1922, the Japanese Government replied to the league's letter of January 19 on military expenditure that said government maintained the attitude expressed in its letter of April 26, 1921; that it desired, however, to draw attention to the fact that the total estimates for military, naval, and air expenditure in its 1922 budget were lower than those of 1921; that a further decrease was in view for 1923; that these reductions seemed to be in conformity with the assembly's recommendation. The Netherlands Government on July 25, 1922, advised that its military and naval expenses were lower in 1922 than in 1921; that it pointed to this fact in connection with the second assembly's armament recommendation. The Norwegian Government on July 26, 1922, pointed to similar reductions in response to the league's inquiries of January 17 and June 7, 1922. On July 31, 1922, the Government of the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes advised in response to the league council's decision of January 13, 1922, submitting the recommendations of the first and second assemblies on the subject of reduction of armaments, that it had reduced the numerical strength of its army to the minimum compatible with its necessities; that it was making, and would continue to make, every effort within its power to comply with these recommendations of the league.

REPLIES RELATING TO SECOND ASSEMBLY'S ACTION ON ARTICLE 16

On July 19, 1922, the British Government replied to the league's letter of January 27, 1922, stating that said government approved generally the resolutions of the second assembly regarding article 16 of the covenant, which set up provisional rules for the council's guidance pending compliance with article 26 as to ratification of proposed amendments to article 16, provided the other league members concurred. The British Government added, however, that the meaning of resolution 2 was not clear, but was presumably intended to be merely declaratory, and to mean that the obligation to adopt economic pressure arose only in the specific cases covered by articles 16 and 17, that if it was intended to preclude economic pressure except in case of actual war, a new obligation would be created requiring an amendment to the covenant and beyond the scope of a mere rule, that the resolution should be redrafted to make it clear. The British Government suggested further that the distinction suggested by resolution 14 between civil and military populations was hardly possible under modern conditions, and that the word "civil" had probably crept in through oversight.

The Swedish Government replied on July 21, 1922, to the league's inquiry of January 27, 1922, that it had encountered constitutional and legal difficulties in connection with the question of economic pressure and could not for the present furnish any definite information.

CONVENTION BETWEEN GREECE AND BULGARIA CONCERNING RECIPROCAL EMIGRATION

On July 28, 1922, the mixed Greco-Bulgarian Emigration Commission advised the league that on July 27 it had extended until October 15, 1923, the period fixed in article 4 of the convention between Greece and Bulgaria concerning reciprocal emigration signed at Neuilly-sur-Seine on November 27, 1919. The letter stated that in view of its importance the commission thought the decision should be communicated to the league. The text of the decision accompanied the letter.

PROTECTION OF MINORITIES IN LATVIA

At this point there appears in the league's official journal a letter from Doctor Walters, Latvian minister at Rome, written on July 17, 1922, to Mr. da Gama, Brazilian representative on the council of the league, to whom had been referred the question of minorities in Latvia. The letter began by stating that the writer had received Mr. da Gama's telegram of June 19, 1922, and noted with great satisfaction that Mr. da Gama was now considering the memorandum transmitted by the writer on behalf of Latvia.

The writer, Doctor Walters, then referred to the preliminary report which Mr. da Gama had drafted for the council and challenged its intimation that in the case of protection for minorities Latvia was in the same position as the countries which had concluded treaties with the Allied Powers. He contended that these countries depended on the peace treaties for their boundaries, and to a certain extent for their national life, whereas Latvia was in no such condition; that she was recognized de jure as an independent state by the allied powers without qualification at the supreme council held on January 26, 1921, and later by the other states, that Latvia had made no such agreement as the states in question had made when they accepted articles 86 and 93 of the treaty of Versailles by which they agreed to embody in a treaty with the allied powers such provisions as said powers might deem necessary to protect the interests of the inhabitants differing from the majority in race, language, or religion.

Latvia had undertaken only to approach the league council for the purpose of discussing the protection of minorities, thereby accepting the assembly's recommendation of December 15, 1920, a recommendation not legally binding, not imposing a condition, but expressing a desire, a recommendation based on the principle that the rights of minorities remain within the jurisdiction of the state, and merely appealing to the good will of the state to see that these rights were established. The recommendation had invited the Latvian representative to arrange with the council as to the details involved in the application of such rights. The assembly had not required the creation of any international or supernational law concerning minorities, and still less had authorized the council to draw up any such ordainments. It must above all be remembered, the writer continued, that assembly recommendations must conform to the covenant, which requires that a state's internal government shall in no way be violated.

The assembly had expressed a desire, without exacting it as a condition, that Latvian laws should be brought into harmony with existing general principles, the assumption being that if no agreement should follow, each party would be where it was at first. Latvia was carrying out socially and legally the principles regarding minorities in the peace treaties voluntarily, and not as a matter of obligation under treaties imposed by force, bilateral in form, but unilateral in reality. She could be bound only by treaties which were really international and reciprocal, and until a reciprocal arrangement for some general scheme of protection for minorities had been reached she reserved the right freely to make her own internal laws. In the meantime there should be drawn up for Latvia, as had been done for Finland, a declaration recognizing that the Latvian guaranties, as set forth in the memoranda Latvia had supplied, were adequate for minority protection. The writer held that if any particular right of minorities in Latvia should be internationalized, or described as a right of general concern, a menacing situation might develop both for Latvia and for peace. Such a course might endow every other State and the league with a political right of intervention if it considered these rights had been threatened. Pursuant to instructions from his government the writer would refuse to sign a unilateral declaration the effect being under the terms of articles 4 and 5 of the covenant that no decision, either as to subject-matter or procedure, could be taken.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC

The league journal next contains a memorandum sent by the United States Government to the Netherland Government in accordance with the opium convention of 1912 and transmitted by the latter Government to the league for distribution to all league members signatory to the convention.

The first observation in the memorandum relates to the contraband trade in opium in China, dealt with in article 15 of said convention, and states in reference to the fact that the powers having treaties with China had been directed to article 15 that the United States Government had concluded a treaty with China on November 17, 1880, as to commercial intercourse and judicial procedure. By article 2 of that treaty both Governments had agreed to prohibit the importation of opium into the United States by Chinese citizens and the importation of and traffic in opium by citizens of the United States in China. Accordingly, Congress had enacted a law on February 23, 1887, prohibiting importation of opium into the United States by Chinese citizens and the importation, transportation, purchase, and sale of opium on the part of China by citizens of the United States. Every effort had been made to enforce the law, and large quantities of opium had been destroyed by authorities of the United States functioning in China.

The second observation recited section 6 of the act of Congress approved January 7, 1914, relating to import certificates and the regulations applicable thereto, and described further legislation pending in Congress.

The third observation related to the statistics the United States had been compiling as to production, manufacture, and sale of narcotic drugs within its territory and added that it was prepared to communicate through the Netherland Government to the powers signatory to the International Opium Convention an annual report comprising these statistics and such information concerning the illicit traffic in such drugs as would in its opinion assist in combating the opium evil. The United States thought that the adoption of the suggestions in the notes of the Netherland Government on these subjects by all the signatory powers of the international convention would bring about better regulation of the traffic in narcotic drugs.

INTERNATIONAL HYDROGRAPHIC BUREAU

The official journal next contains a notation to the effect that the directing board of the International Hydrographic Bureau at Monaco had advised the league that Egypt had been authorized by its Council of Ministers on March 25, 1922, to become a member of the bureau. The journal noted that this brought the number of countries associated with the bureau to 22.

The journal then presents a summary of information received from the states belonging to the Hydrographic Bureau showing what their hydrographic offices had done in 1921 and intended doing in 1922.

Chile reported that the hydrographic service of its navy in 1921 had made 14 surveys of bays, harbors, and so forth, on the Chilean coast; that 15 charts of ports, anchorages, channels, and portions of the coast of Chile had been drawn and made ready for engraving; that 4 charts were being engraved, 4 others were being drawn, that 2 had been engraved, and 1 reproduced by photolithography. Chile reported further that in 1922 surveys of the western entrance to the Magellan Straits and of the coast of the Province of Tacna had been completed; that 3 new coastal charts, with numerous plans, and 1 plan of ports in the Gulf of Aranco were being engraved, and 3 new plans of various ports were being prepared.

Greece reported that on account of war conditions and the death of its hydrographic director, only work of strictly local nature had been done in 1921 by the hydrographic service of its navy.

Japan reported that the hydrographic service of the Imperial Japanese Navy had made in 1921, 9 new surveys in the Caroline and Marshall Islands, and 2 sketch surveys on the coast of Siberia, 4 resurveys of the coasts of Japan, 4 of Korea, and 2 of Taiwan; had published 11 new charts compiled from Japanese sources, 114 from foreign sources, and 4 miscellaneous; had issued 19 new editions of charts from Japanese sources, 23 from foreign sources, and 18 miscellaneous; had published 3 volumes of sailing directions, 1 list of lights, tide tables for 1922, and a volume of miscellaneous reports on hydrography. Japan further reported that it was engaged during 1922 in making 4 hydrographic surveys on the coasts of Japan and of its dependencies, in making search for and examination of 2 reported shoals, in making observations of tidal currents, in making magnetic surveys at various points in Japan, and in publishing 12 new charts.

Siam reported that the hydrographic office of the Royal Siamese Navy had during the fiscal year 1921–22 made a survey of part of the east coast of Siam and had published 2 charts and 2 tide tables; that the work projected for 1922–23 consisted of 2 surveys of parts of the Siamese coasts and the publication of 6 charts and of the tide tables for 1923.

RELIEF WORK IN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

The league's official journal here notes that at Paris on February 26, 1921, the council of the league recommended that the League of Red Cross Societies and the International Committee of the Red Cross form a joint council to deal with voluntary relief work in Europe, the council agreeing in such event to notify all league members and ask them for assistance; that after the formation of such joint council the league council on June 22, 1921, so notified and requested league members suggesting, first, free transport by governments of material destined by the joint council for use of distressed areas; second, exemption from customs duty for all such material; third, opportunities for local purchase of foodstuffs and necessities at lowest prices. On July 8, 1922, a reply had been received from Czechoslovakia stating that substantial reductions had been secured in transport rates.

SAAR BASIN

The league journal then shows that on July 27, 1922, the chairman of the governing commission of the Saar basin had written the league a letter advising concerning the work of the advisory council constituted in the Saar territory by the governing commissioners' decree of March 24, 1922, the members of the council having been elected on June 25, 1922. The letter stated that the governing commission had appointed as chairman of the council Mr. Kossmann, a former Reichstag member belonging to the Center Party having a majority in the advisory council; that at the opening of the council's first session the chairman of the governing commission read a message to the council from the commission, a copy of which was attached to this letter to the league. After the reading of the message representatives of the different political parties in the council asked to speak in reply in order to state their political programs. Copies of their addresses accompanied this letter to the league. The advisory council then appointed a committee to examine the draft rules of procedure for the council drawn up by the governing commission. The commission took under consideration the opinions expressed by the council as to those rules, but acted immediately on the recommendation of the council regarding payment of its members.

STAFF LIST OF SECRETARIAT AND INTERNATIONAL LABOR OFFICE

The official journal next presents a staff list of the secretariat of the league and of the International Labor Office with salaries paid each official and employee in accordance with the first assembly's resolution of December 17, 1920.

REGISTRATION OF INTERNATIONAL ENGAGEMENTS WITH LEAGUE

The official journal for October, 1922, shows that in April, 1922, the British Empire, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, and Sweden had filed with the league ratifications of the convention of October 20, 1921, regarding the nonfortification and neutralization of the Aaland Islands, that Italy had filed its ratification in May, 1922, Latvia in September, Poland in June. On September 6, 1921, Panama filed its adhesion to the convention of September 30, 1921, on the suppression of the traffic in women and children, subject to ratification. Sweden and Siam, in August and September, 1922, respectively, filed protocols regarding amendments to the covenant submitted October 5, 1921.

CONVENTION OF ST. GERMAIN ON TRAFFIC IN ARMS

According to the official journal, Canada, on July 28, 1922, replied to the league's letter of June 13, 1922, in reference to the arms traffic convention of St. Germain that it was prepared to agree to ratification by His Majesty as soon as all the principal allied and associated powers were prepared to ratify, and subject to safeguards against nugatory action by nonsignatory states. Estonia replied that the question of adherence would be submitted to the next session of the State assembly. Portugal replied that its ratifications of the international conventions signed at St. Germain on September 10, 1919, concerning the liquor traffic in Africa and the control of the traffic in arms and munitions had been delivered at Paris on July 17, 1922.

LIMITATION OF NATIONAL EXPENDITURE ON ARMAMENTS

Siam replied on August 19, 1922, to the league's note of March 8, 1921, regarding limitation of armament that internal conditions made her situation exceptional, but that every effort would be made to limit the military budget for the succeeding two years in accordance with the spirit of the assembly's recommendation.

MINORITIES IN LATVIA

The league journal sets out a letter to the league from Doctor Walters dated July 31, 1922, and giving a detailed account of the condition of minorities in Latvia.

SAAR BASIN AND DANZIG

The league journal sets out the secretary-general's report on the Saar Basin and Danzig, summarizing important features for consideration of the twenty-first meeting of the league council.

INCURSIONS OF BANDS IN FRONTIER DISTRICTS OF STATES BORDERING ON BULGARIA

The official journal contains a copy of a memorandum filed with the league which had been sent on June 19, 1922, by the Bulgarian Government to the Greek, Rumanian, and Serb-Croat-Slovene Governments. It is stated that the Bulgarian Government, actuated by a sincere desire, of which it had given many proofs, to solve the question of the armed bands of which the Serb-Croat-Slovene Government had complained, had proposed on June 9, 1922, that a Serbo-Bulgarian mixed commission should be formed to decide what immediate steps should be taken to restore peace on the frontier and to clear neighboring districts of all elements which threatened peace; that on June 14 the Royal Serb-Croat-Slovene Government sent a reply appearing to indicate that it considered such a commission inadvisable. The Bulgarian State then stated that inasmuch as the object it had in view was cooperation of two official forces in suppressing any threatening movements in the frontier zone, it suggested that the military and administrative authorities on the Serbo-Bulgarian frontier should agree on a plan of common action and should organize telegraphic and telephonic communication between the posts in the frontier zone for the exchange of information relating to movements of armed bands in order to facilitate pursuit.

On July 16, 1922, the Rumanian, Greek, and Serb-Croat-Slovene Kingdoms replied in a note, a copy of which was filed with the league, accepting the Bulgarian proposal, but adding that in order to render the proposal effective the three Governments were of opinion that the Bulgarian Government should withdraw from the frontier zone all officials and State servants and all comitadjis notorious in the countries bordering on Bulgaria, and should in future suppress the activities of the so-called charitable associations which, under cover of charitable work, organized the dispatch of armed bands into the territory of the three Governments to terrorize the population precisely as was done under Turkish rule.

On August 17, 1922, the Bulgarian Government, in a letter to the Greek, Rumanian, and Serb-Croat-Slovene Governments, a copy of which was filed with the league, stated that as a result of the resolution of the Council of the League of Nations adopted at the meeting of July 19, 1922, in which the Bulgarian Government recommended the opening of direct negotiations on the question of armed bands, it noted with pleasure the acceptance of its proposal of June 19, 1922. It was greatly surprised, however, by the preliminary conditions required, stating that the first suggested removal from frontier zone of officials and other persons alleged to be guilty of illegal activities. These demands, the letter continued, contained fresh accusations and imposed responsibilities not established by any inquiry or legal investigation and could not be accepted. The letter insisted in joint action in line with the proposal of June 19.

According to the official journal, Mr. Dendramis, director of the permanent Greek secretariat accredited to the League of Nations, stated in a letter to the secretary general of the league, dated August 18, 1922, that in a note dated June 17, 1922, Mr. Mikoff, the Bulgarian representative accredited to the League of Nations, had requested the secretary general to draw the attention of the league council to the dispute between Bulgaria and her neighbors as a result of the activities of Bulgarian armed bands; that on page 4 of this note it was asserted that Greek armed bands and agitators enter Bulgarian territory. The letter from Dr. Dendramis added that this was so baseless that the Bulgarian Government itself denied ever having made such a statement; that the Bulgarian delegation to the league had said that the rumors that Bulgaria had accused her neighbors of invading her territory with bands was devoid of foundation.

The league's official journal next sets forth a letter from the Serb-Croat-Slovene Government to the league reviewing the dispute with Bulgaria to the time of the Bulgarian note of August 17, already mentioned, and stating that the Serb-Croat-Slovene Government would suggest to Greece and Rumania that the three governments would request that the Bulgarian Government remove notorious comitadjis officials from the frontier to the interior of Bulgaria and cease to allow refugees from neighboring countries to establish themselves on the frontier where they were a source of disturbance.

REPRESENTATION OF CUBA IN THE LEAGUE

On September 11, 1922, Cosme de la Torriente, president of the Cuban delegation in the assembly of the league, addressed a letter to the secretary general asking him in view of paragraph 5, article 7 of the covenant to inform league members and the Swiss Federal Council that under decree 806, issued by the Cuban Government June 1, 1922, the present representatives of Cuba in the Assembly of the League of Nations had been made permanent representatives. The decree of the Cuban Government accompanied the letter. It recited that whereas membership in the league imposed international obligations, the fulfillment of which would materially contribute at the present time to furtherance of friendly relations and to strengthening the position of Cuba as a sovereign state, the President of Cuba, Alfredo Zayas, by virtue of the powers conferred on him by the constitution and laws and by advice of the Ministry of State, decreed first that the recommendations in the memorandum on the second assembly of the league submitted by Mr. Torriente be approved; second, that the League of Nations auxiliary committee referred to in recommendation No. 12 of chapter 14 of the memorandum, be created and summoned to meet immediately; third, that a department of the ministry of state be created to deal with matters relating to the League of Nations; fourth, that the appointment of the Cuban delegation to the assembly of the League of Nations be permanent, and that in recognition of their valuable services at the second assembly the following gentlemen be appointed to be representatives in accordance with article 3 of the covenant: Messrs. Torriente, Aguero, and DeBlanck, and that Mr. Campa be appointed a substitute representative and secretary general to the delegation, and so forth.

WASHINGTON CONVENTION CONCERNING NIGHT EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN

It appears in the league journal that on September 4, 1922, the league announced that it had been advised by the Netherland Government of the ratification by that government of the convention concerning employment of women during the night adopted by the International Labor Conference which met at Washington, October 29 to November 29, 1919, and of the registration by that Government of said ratification with the secretariat of the league in accordance with article 406, part 13, of the treaty of Versailles.

REGISTRATION OF INTERNATIONAL ENGAGEMENTS WITH LEAGUE

The official journal of the league for November, 1922, shows that the Czechoslovak Government advised the league on July 24, 1922, that it had decided to respect the régime established by the convention relating to nonfortification and neutralization of the Aland Islands.

PROTOCOLS REGARDING AMENDMENTS TO COVENANT

The league's official journal shows that on October 4, 1922, Bulgaria ratified the protocols regarding amendments to the covenant proposal on October 5, 1921.

TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN

The official journal notes that on September 18, 1922, adhesion was given by the following British colonies and protectorates to the convention of September 30, 1921, on the suppression of the traffic in women and children: Bahamas, Ceylon, Cyprus, Gibraltar, Hong Kong, Kenya, Malta, Nyasaland, Straits Settlements, Southern Rhodesia, Trinidad.

BARCELONA CONVENTIONS

According to the official journal the declaration of the Barcelona conventions of April 20, 1921, recognizing the right to a flag of states having no seacoast was adhered to on October 9, 1922, by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, India, New Zealand, and Newfoundland.

CONVENTION OF ST. GERMAIN ON THE TRAFFIC IN ARMS

It is shown by the league's official journal that on July 28, 1922, the Government of the United States, through its Secretary of State, wrote the league stating that the communication which the secretary general of the league addressed to the Secretary of State of the United States on November 21, 1921, had received careful consideration. The letter from the United States Government, which is set out in the league's official journal, states further that in its communication of November 21, 1921, the league had been so good as to bring to the knowledge of the Secretary of State a resolution adopted on October 1, 1921, by the league assembly suggesting that the importance of ratifying the arms traffic convention of St. Germain should be strongly impressed on all the states signatories thereto, whether members of the league or not, as well as the decision of the council of the league that the assembly's resolution should be brought to the notice of all states which had not notified the league of their intentions on the subject.

The letter then stated that in reply to the inquiry made by the league through its secretary-general in pursuance of this action by the assembly and the council, the Secretary of State begged to say that the terms of the proposed convention had been carefully examined and, that while the Government of the United States was in cordial sympathy with efforts to restrict the traffic in arms and munitions of war, it found itself unable to approve the provisions of the convention and to give any assurance of its ratification. The letter stated further that the Secretary of State also desired to call attention to the fact that the Government of the United States was desirous of cooperating for the purpose of suitably controlling traffic in arms and ammunition, and, to that end, the Congress of the United States had already enacted legislation providing that whenever the President found that in any American territory, or in any country in which the United States exercised extra-territorial jurisdiction, conditions of domestic violence existed, which were or might be promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured from the United States, and made proclamation thereof, it would thereafter be unlawful to export, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President prescribed, any arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

The league journal shows that the Australian Government on August 25, 1922, notified the league that it was prepared to ratify the Arms Traffic Convention signed at Paris on September 10, 1919, its ratification not to take effect until the other signatory powers had ratified, and safeguards had been provided against nugatory action by nonsignatory states.

LIMITATION OF ARMAMENT

According to the league's official journal, Rumania replied on the question of armament limitation on July 1, 1922, that, on account of the threatening position of Soviet Russia, she could not, while that condition continued, entertain any policy of limiting the number of military effectives. On the same subject New Zealand replied on September 30, 1922, that it adopted as its own the answer of the British Government of March 21, 1922, subject to the further reservation that the New Zealand Government might at any time increase its share in the defense of the Empire.

SAAR BASIN

The official journal records a letter from the German Government dated August 18, 1922, asking the league for the early withdrawal of French troops from the Saar Territory, and a letter to the league from the governing commission, dated September 22, 1922, commenting on the German letter and advocating the retention of the troops.

INCURSIONS OF BANDS INTO FRONTIER DISTRICTS OF STATE BORDERING ON BULGARIA

The league journal contains a copy of the note of the Serb-Croat-Slovene Government in reply to the note of August 17 from Bulgaria to the three neighbor governments, stating that in refusing to withdraw from the frontier zone those officials who were aiding and abetting comitadjis and emigrants the Bulgarian Government had asserted that it was accused of actions of which it knew nothing; that it was strange that the Bulgarian Government should be totally unaware of the complicity of these officials in the exploits of the comitadjis; that this ignorance was especially strange in the case of emigrants, since Mr. Stambouliski had admitted in his memorandum to the Genoa conference that the emigrants shared in the activities of the comitadjis, being accustomed to their "idyllic life." The Serb note to Bulgaria added that it was a matter of common knowledge that emigrants had settled in easy reach of the respective frontiers of Bulgaria's neighbors; that practically all the comitadji bands were recruited from the emigrants, and that with the emigrants near the frontiers bands could be more easily organized and raids more readily carried out; that accordingly the Serb-Croat-Slovene Government and the Rumanian Government, being desirous of reaching an agreement in this matter with Bulgaria, considered it imperative, before any combined action was undertaken by the four states concerned, that those emigrants at least who had become involved in the activities of the comitadjis should be withdrawn from the frontier zone and sent into the interior.

RUSSIAN REFUGEES

It is noted in the official journal that Finland on August 15, 1922; France on September 4, 1922; and Great Britain on September 7, 1922, had replied to the league circular of August 11, 1922, proposing on the suggestion of the Geneva conference and the league council a form of identity passport certificate for Russian refugees, that they agreed to such unified form.

ASIA MINOR REFUGEES

The league's official journal records contributions for relief of refugees from Asia Minor as follows: Great Britain, £16,000; Canada, £5,000; Greece, 1,000,000 drachmas (about £5,000); New Zealand, £1,000; Sweden, £1,000. Great Britain, in response to the third assembly's resolution, had promised £50,000, conditioned on a similar amount from remainder of league members combined. Denmark had promised £1,000, Brazil, £1,000, Norway, £1,000, Spain, £1,000. The journal published Doctor Nansen's appeal to the world in behalf of these refugees, stating that they were in a deplorable condition, were without money, sufficient clothing, or shelter, and frequently without food, and so forth; that they numbered about 750,000 men, women, and children.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION

The journal shows that on September 8, 1922, Estonia advised the league of the ratification of the draft conventions of the International Labor Conference at Geneva October 25–November 29, 1921, first, concerning the age for admission of children to employment in agriculture; second, concerning the rights of association and combination of agricultural workers; third, concerning workmen's compensation in agriculture; fourth, concerning the use of white lead in painting; fifth, fixing the minimum age for the admission of young persons to employment as trimmers and stokers; sixth, concerning compulsory medical examination of children and young persons employed at sea.

On October 7, 1922, Finland advised the league of its ratification of the draft convention for establishing facilities for finding employment for seamen adopted by the International Labor Conference at Genoa June 15–July 10, 1920.

On October 9, 1922, Switzerland advised the league of its ratification of the draft conventions of the International Labor Conference at Washington October 29–November 29, 1919, first concerning unemployment; second, concerning employment of women during the night; third, fixing the minimum age for admission of children to industrial employment; fourth, concerning the night work of young persons employed in industry.

Twentieth session of the council, held at Geneva on August 31 and October 4, 1922

At the twentieth session of the council member nations had the following representatives: Spain, Mr. Quinones de Leon, president; Belgium, Mr. Paul Hymans; Brazil, Mr. Domicio da Gama; British Empire, Lord Balfour; China, Mr. Tang Tsai-Fou; France, Mr. Gabriel Hanotaux; Italy, Marquis Imperiali; Japan, Viscount Ishii and Mr. Adatci.

First meeting (public), August 31, 3.30 p. m.

"A" MANDATES—THE COMMISSION FOR THE HOLY PLACES

Lord Balfour said that agreement had been reached at the London session in July, 1922, regarding the mandate for Palestine, but that the question of the holy places remained unsettled; that the mandatory power was charged with the difficult task of proposals regarding them, and that the British Government had prepared a scheme intended to do justice to all concerned as far as possible. He added that the members of the council were invited to examine the scheme and consult their governments; that the council was not called upon to make a decision before the governments had opportunity to be heard.

These declarations were noted by the council.

BRITISH PROPOSAL REGARDING HOLY PLACES IN PALESTINE

The British proposal submitted by Lord Balfour to the council in relation to the holy places in Palestine was as follows:

First. Article 14 of the Mandate for Palestine provides that a special commission shall be appointed by the mandatory to study, define, and determine the rights and claims in connection with the holy places and the rights and claims relating to the different religious communities in Palestine; the method of nomination, the composition and functions of the commission to be submitted to the council of the league for its approval; the commission not to be appointed or enter upon its functions without the council's approval. This provision must be considered in connection with article 13, which requires the mandatory to preserve existing rights in connection with the holy places, including the maintenance of the status quo.

Second. To insure that questions affecting Christians should be considered and settled by Christians without the intervention of Jews and Mohammedans, the Holy Places Commission should be divided into 3 subcommissions—1 Christian, 1 Moslem, 1 Jewish—each subcommission to deal exclusively with its own religion, and to have its own president who would preside over its deliberations.

Third. There was to be, as chairman of the commission, an individual of high standing and judicial temperament, and of such character as to insure confidence in his impartiality.

Fourth. In each subcommission should be represented the States and confessions more especially concerned. The Christian subcommission might be composed of a French president, three Catholic representatives (Italian, Spanish, and Belgian), three orthodox (one of whom should be Greek and one Russian), one Armenian, and one or possibly two representatives of the Abyssinians and the Copts, unless both were of same confession, in which case one would suffice. The Moslem subcommission might be made up of an Italian president, with a Palestinian, French, and Indian Moslem; the Jewish subcommission of an American president, with a Palestinian, a British and a Portuguese or Spanish Jew to represent the Sephardia sect.

Fifth. Unanimous report by a subcommission to be final except where the council, under whose guaranty the holy places were to rest, referred back some point for further consideration. Where no unanimous report could be had in a subcommission, the point involved was to be decided by the chairman of the whole commission.

Sixth. Questions affecting more than one religion might be handled by representatives of the subcommissions concerned sitting together; and where no agreement could be reached, the point involved was to be settled by the chairman of the whole commission.

Seventh. The commission to have a secretariat, and the secretary-general to be appointed by the British Government, since the expense of the secretariat would fall on the administration of Palestine.

Eighth. An American citizen reasonably prominent would seem to be most suitable chairman of the whole commission, inasmuch as this would give representation to Protestant communities not otherwise represented on the commission.

Ninth. The chairman of the commission and president of each subcommission to be appointed by the mandatory after consultation between the British Government and the government concerned. Representatives of various confessions to be appointed in consultation with heads of religious denominations concerned, or, if this is not possible, with the governments concerned. These appointments not to be made until approved by the league council.

Tenth. Expenses of chairman of commission and of presidents of subcommissions to be borne by League of Nations. Expenses of representatives of various religious and confessions to be borne by the religious communities they represent. Expenses of secretariat to be borne by administration of Palestine.

Eleventh. If permanent arrangements should be necessary for dealing with questions which might arise in the future as to interpretation of reports and recommendations of commission, or on new questions, they might be provided by creating small local committees selected and nominated by each subcommission. If these local committees should be unable to agree, the subcommittee concerned, or, if necessary, the entire commission might reassemble.

Twelfth. It was to be clearly understood that the functions of the Holy Places Commission do not include any administrative responsibilities nor any interference with right and duty of the mandatory to preserve order and decorum.

Second meeting (private), October 4, 3.30 p. m.

"A" MANDATES—THE COMMISSION FOR THE HOLY PLACES

Lord Balfour discussed the British proposal regarding the holy places in Palestine, which, he said, had been prepared by the British Colonial Office, and which he had submitted to the council on August 31. He said that while this proposal represented an honest effort to solve the problem, and embodied valuable suggestions, many of which would probably be followed in the final settlement, the plan itself had met with the great disfavor from those who represented Catholic opinion throughout the world. Under such circumstances he stated that it would be folly to attempt to force the scheme through, even if the attempt would probably be successful.

Great Britain, the mandatory power, felt, he continued, that it was of the very greatest importance to carry out a plan relating to the holy places with the "consenting feeling," not necessarily with the absolute agreement, of all the great religious denominations concerned, and that resentment in certain very important quarters was sufficient reason for another effort.

He stated that he thought the prejudice against the scheme proposed by Great Britain was based largely on a misunderstanding; that under the scheme the final court of appeal was to be an American Protestant; that he thought there was a very strong feeling throughout the Catholic world that to place a Protestant in that position was to outrage the spirit of history and to offend a great many very strong susceptibilities. To put a Protestant, he said, where he could render opinion on Catholic dogma or Catholic ritual or Catholic ecclesiastical practice and law would be a "gross impertinence" of which the British Government was incapable; and this was not what the Protestant chairman of the commission was intended to do. He was to act only as a court of appeal in a dispute between Christian denominations and not in matters concerning Catholic opinion as such.

Lord Balfour contended that there was advantage in having as a judge one who widely sympathized with the religious sentiments of all concerned and was wholly unconnected with either party to the litigation. The new proposal was an improvement, he urged, over the old system. Under the old system of dealing with the holy places Mohammedans had composed the court of appeal for more than a thousand years. The speaker thought something was gained by substituting on a matter which concerned Christians a Christian judge for a Mohammedan judge, adding that while the Turks and their Mohammedan predecessors controlled Palestine and the holy places decision rested with people "who, whatever their sentiments may be, are not, by common consent, in the forefront of juridical practice."

Again, he said, under the old system the rulers of the country were judges between Christian sects, and the same objection could have been made if a British court of appeal had been designated. So a court of appeal from a country not the mandatory power, entirely separated from the local politics and local interests of Palestine, had been suggested. In view of the developments mentioned, however, Lord Balfour thought the British proposal for a commission for the holy places should not be pressed, and he stated that the scheme in its entirety was to be understood as being no longer before public opinion. Misunderstandings were too easy and explanations too difficult. He said that further efforts to reach common ground among representatives on the council had failed, that he did not consider himself capable of suggesting a remedy, that the difficulties must be settled by the interested powers themselves. The British scheme had been shipwrecked, he stated, by the fact that an American Protestant was to be the arbiter between the contending churches in Palestine, but that when that difficulty was removed others developed, and no agreement was found possible at the time between his colleagues on the council, who represented countries in which the great majority of Christians were Catholic Christians.

He then said that if the powers interested could not agree he did not see how they could ask an outside power to mediate, that he appealed to the representatives of the countries of which he now spoke to make every effort to reconcile views through their governments, views which so far seemed irreconcilable; that unless Catholic opinion could be harmonized, he did not see how a satisfactory conclusion could easily and quickly be obtained. He then stated that there were still other difficulties. It was the duty of the mandatory power not only to find or adopt a solution of differences of opinion within the Catholic community, but to see that justice was done between Catholic and Orthodox, Orthodox and Jew, Orthodox and Armenian, indeed, between all Christian sects which for centuries had made disputing contentions in relation to the holy places. The mandatory power was also to see justice done between Turk and Jew, Christian and Turk, and between all disputing sects that had so long contended over questions of management and ritual, times and seasons of ceremonies relating to these ancient and sacred places.

He observed that next to the great Catholic body in the world stood the Orthodox, the latter, however, not being strongly represented in the League of Nations, the four member nations in which a majority of Christians belonged to the Orthodox being Greece, Bulgaria, old Serbia, and Rumania. While the percentage of Orthodox nations in the league was small, the populations concerned were large, had taken for centuries a deep interest in the holy places, and historically might be said to be more intimately connected with them than the Catholics, although the speaker was well aware that the two had been united in the earlier days when these places began to be officially reverenced by large religious populations. The Orthodox Church had no representative on the council and few representatives in the league, and that no system would be accepted by the mandatory power which did not deal justly with Orthodox nations. There were two difficulties to meet, therefore; the difficulty within the Catholic Church itself which the speaker begged the representatives of the countries in which a majority of Christians were Catholic to do their utmost to settle, and the difficulty of settling disputes between Catholic and Orthodox. He urged a united effort to reach a solution satisfactory to all the world, to Catholic, to Orthodox, to Protestant, and to all others, to the end that peace, order, and decorum might prevail in Palestine.

Mr. Hanotaux remarked that the only course open to the council was to submit the question to the governments interested; that, like Lord Balfour, he thought the first step was agreement among the Catholic powers, and then between Catholic and Orthodox.

Mr. Quinones de Leon and the Marquis Imperiali stated that they would communicate Lord Balfour's statement to their governments; that they felt that their governments would endeavor to the utmost to devise a scheme which would serve as a basis for further deliberation by the council.

The twentieth session of the council adjourned.

Twenty-first session of council held at Geneva from August 31 to October 31, 1922

Representation of member nations composing the council at its twenty-first session was as follows: Brazil, Mr. Domicio da Gama (president); Belgium, Mr. Paul Hymans; British Empire, Lord Balfour; China, Mr. Tang Tsai-Fow; France, Mr. Gabriel Hanotaux; Italy, Marquis Imperiali; Japan, Viscount Ishii and Mr. Adatci; Spain, Mr. Quinones de Leon.

First meeting (private), August 31, 5.30 p. m.

QUESTION OF EIGHT STATES OF CHIEF INDUSTRIAL IMPORTANCE; INDIA'S CLAIM

A telegram was read from the Indian Government asking to be invited to send a representative to attend the council when her claim for inclusion among the eight States of chief industrial importance was considered. The question arose as to whether India could be represented on council with right to vote under article 4 of covenant, or whether council sat in connection with this subject as in some sense a court of arbitration. The council asked the opinion of the director of the legal section of the secretariat of the league. He read article 4 of the covenant and article 393 of the treaty of Versailles, stating that in his opinion the council would act as arbitrator; that India could not be both judge and party to the case. All states signing treaty of Versailles had accepted article 393 and the jurisdiction it provided for the council. Moreover, other states were involved in the present question. India might be invited, however, to send a representative to attend the council and present its case. Lord Balfour agreed with the legal director, Dr. Van Hamel. Mr. Hymans approved in principle, but said that if one of the states concerned should be heard the rest might ask the same privilege and endless discussion follow. He said a competent commission had made a thorough inquiry and had prepared a provisional list of states whose claims must be considered. The secretary general of the league stated that the data prepared by the commission would form sufficient basis for a decision; that the present question was one of procedure.

The council decided to inform the Indian Government that while it was ready to hear the Indian representative it suggested for the Indian Government's consideration that it might be better to submit a written statement, as Poland had done.

TRANSFERS IN BUDGET OF 1922

Mr. Tang Tsai-Fou presented a report authorizing certain transfers in the budget of the fourth financial period. Mr. Hanotaux agreed but said that these transfers should be avoided as far as possible. The report consisted of a memorandum by the secretary general calling attention to the fact that the assembly at its second session authorized transfers from one item to another of the same section of the budget, subject to previous sanction by council. Because the Swiss franc had during 1922 appreciated in relation to the gold franc in a manner unforeseen when the budget of 1922 was drawn up, two transfers of small amounts had become necessary to meet charges under two items where the budget allowance would fall a little short. The memorandum proposed that the secertary general be authorized to transfer the sum of 15,000 gold francs from item 3a of the budget, "Salaries, wages, and allowances of the secretariat at Geneva," to item 3b, "Salaries of the house staff at Geneva," thus reducing the former item to 4,091,300 gold francs and increasing the latter to 235,000 gold francs. It also proposed the transfer of 15,000 gold francs from item 21 of the budget, "International blockade committee," to item 16, "Permanent advisory commission for military, naval, and air questions," reducing former item to 60,000 gold francs and increasing latter to 115,000 gold francs.

These proposals were approved by the council.

EXPENSES OF MISSION SENT TO NEUTRAL ZONE BETWEEN POLAND AND LITHUANIA

Mr. Hymans announced that pursuant to the resolution adopted at the eighteenth session Mr. Saura had been appointed sole commissioner and had gone to the neutral zone between Poland and Lithuania accompanied by Mr. Lassitch, a member of the league secretariat, as secretary. The council resolved to charge the expense of this mission to an amount not exceeding 15,000 francs to item 25 of budget, "Unforeseen expenditure, such as special commissions of inquiry, and so forth (subject to special vote of council)", the expense to be apportioned as follows: Salaries and traveling allowances, 9,000 Swiss francs, traveling and transport expenses, 3,000 Swiss francs, unforeseen and miscellaneous expenses, 3,000 Swiss francs.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF LEAGUE

A periodical report on the financial position of the league was submitted to the council by the secretary-general and was merely noted inasmuch as the question was soon to be taken up by the assembly.

PLACING CERTAIN OFFICIALS OF SAAR BASIN TERRITORY AT DISPOSAL OF GERMAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Tang Tsai-Fou reported on the question involved in the appeal by the German Government on July 23, 1922, for league intervention in a controversy with the Governing Commission of the Saar Basin regarding the placing of certain officials at the disposal of the German Government. The report suggested that negotiations in progress between the parties be permitted to continue and that the parties be so advised. Report adopted.

PRELIMINARY MEASURES IN VIEW OF PLEBISCITE IN SAAR BASIN TERRITORY

Mr. Tang Tsai-Fou submitted a report on the preliminary measures to be taken for preservation of information in connection with the plebiscite in the Saar Territory. He called attention to paragraph 34, chapter 2 of annex to article 50, Versailles treaty, providing that 15 years from date of treaty population of Territory of Saar Basin would be called upon to vote by communes or districts on the three following alternatives: (1) Maintenance of régime established by Versailles treaty and said annex to article 50; (2) union with France; (3) union with Germany—that all persons regardless of sex, more than 20 years old at date of voting, resident in territory at date of signature of present treaty, would have the right to vote; that the other conditions, methods, and date of voting should be fixed by the council in such way as to secure freedom, secrecy, and trustworthiness of voting. He stated that on March 26, 1922, the council had adopted a memorandum by the secretary general concerning steps to be taken for preservation of information in connection with this plebiscite; that in doing this the council meant to take only such measures as were urgently needed to preserve legal evidence.

The speaker believed that no decision should be made at present as to what individuals would be entitled to vote, that no lists of voters should be drawn up at present, and that there should be no interpretation of specific provisions of the treaty. It would be sufficient to provide for the safe-keeping of any local official records which might be useful in determining at the proper time whether a particular individual met the treaty requirements for participation in the plebiscite, copies of the records to be compiled for the use of the council and kept at the secretariat of the league, the work of examining and classifying the records to be done by a provisional records commissioner for the Saar plebiscite, appointed by the league. The commissioner's term should not exceed one year, and his staff, if any, should be provided through agreement with the secretary general.

The report was approved.

SALARY OF REGISTRAR OF PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE

The council decided, after considering a letter to the secretary general of the league from the president of the Permanent Court of International Justice, dated August 12, 1922, concerning the salary of the registrar of the court, that, in deference to the wishes expressed by the court, the salary of the present registrar, beginning at 22,000 florins per annum should rise by successive yearly increases of 1,250 florins to 27,000 florins.

TERM OF PRESIDENT OF PERMANENT HYDRAULIC SYSTEM COMMISSION OF THE DANUBE

After considering a report from the Marquis Imperiali, the council decided to invite the Permanent Hydraulic System Commission of the Danube to insert in the regulations concerning its powers and duties set out in article 293, treaty of Trianon, a clause determining the normal term of office of its chairman.

While reserving the right to reconsider the appointment of chairman of the commission when these regulations became effective, the council decided in the meantime to extend the term of its chairman now in office, the matter to be reconsidered at the end of year if the regulations had not gone into effect by that time.

COMPENSATION OF TEMPORARY MIXED COMMISSION FOR REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS

Prince Sapieha, member of Temporary Mixed Commission for Reduction of Armaments, having resigned in August, 1922, for health and family reasons, the council approved nomination of Prince Lubomirski as his successor.

COMPOSITION OF ECONOMIC COMMITTEE

Informed by Viscount Ishii that the Japanese Government desired that Mr. Matsuyama should replace Mr. Sakiba as a member of the economic committee, the council assented.

Second meeting (private), Friday, September 1, 1922, 11 a. m.

PLAN FOR AN INTERNATIONAL RELIEF ORGANIZATION

Senator Ciraolo, president of the Italian Red Cross, was invited to the council table. The Senator explained his plan for a covenant of mutual insurance between states submitted by him to the Genoa conference and referred by the conference to the League of Nations. It contemplated an international organization for relief and assistance of peoples suffering from disaster established and operated under protection and supervision of the League of Nations, financed by small annual contributions by the various states in proportion to territory, population, and budget. The organization would be directed by the International Red Cross Committee, its technical bodies to be provided by all the Red Cross societies of the world. When a national catastrophe now occurred there was an organization of sympathy but no corresponding organization of relief. Public subscriptions were made and government subsidies contributed, but technical staffs and stocks of material were not forthcoming. There was no provision for organization and distribution of relief, and this had a discouraging effect. Recent examples had shown that private charity, though supported by governments, was inadequate without proper organization. Attention had heretofore been given to the military organization of States, and the time had come for an international relief organization. It was desirable to prepare relief in advance under a definite plan. The member nations of the league had by virtue of article 25 of the league covenant undertaken to encourage and promote the establishment and cooperation of Red Cross organizations in order to mitigate suffering throughout the world. The League of Nations with its lofty aims should be the first to welcome such a plan as the speaker presented.

The Marquis Imperiali presented a report on this plan which had received the approval of the International Red Cross Committee. He suggested that as to the proposal of the plan for wider recognition of the Red Cross in time of peace the council should await the revision of the Geneva convention now in force by the International Red Cross committee, and that as to the plan itself the council should request the secretary general to present a report to the council in time to be considered by it and submitted to the fourth assembly of the league.

Lord Balfour, after discussing the subject, proposed that the report suggested by Marquis Imperiali should cover not only legal and financial, but also political and administrative, aspects. The Marquis Imperiali accepted these suggestions and his proposals as thus amended were approved by the council.

CONTROL AND ADMINISTRATION OF THE VISTULA WITHIN THE TERRITORY OF THE FREE CITY OF DANZIG

Mr. Askenazy, representing Poland; Doctor Sahm, representing Danzig; and General Haking, high commissioner in Danzig for the League of Nations, took seats at the council table.

Viscount Ishii made a report, recommending that the council confirm the decision of the high commissioner of the league in Danzig of September 1, 1921, concerning control and administration of the Vistula within the territory of the free city of Danzig, and that the secretary general be requested to advise the Polish and Danzig Governments of such action and to send them a copy of the speaker's report. These recommendations were adopted after discussion in which Askenazy, Sahm, and Haking took part, Askenazy opposing, Sahm favoring the high commissioner's decision.

Third meeting (public), Friday, September 1, 1922, 4 p. m.

SITE FOR POLISH WAR MATERIALS IN DANZIG

The council, after hearing a report from Viscount Ishii on the decision of the league's high commissioner as to the site of a depot for Polish war material in transit through Danzig, from which both Danzig and Poland had appealed, and after hearing the discussion in which Askenazy for Poland, Sahm for Danzig, and the high commissioner participated, adopted Ishii's suggestion that the high commissioner's decision be approved.

REPATRIATION OF PRISONERS OF WAR

The secretary general read to the council in the absence of Doctor Nansen the latter's report on repatriation of prisoners of war. In this report Doctor Nansen stated that he was happy to be able to report to the members of the assembly and the members of the league that he had brought to a satisfactory conclusion the work he had carried out on behalf of the league for the repatriation of prisoners of war. The total number of prisoners thus brought to their homes was 427,886. The report expressed Doctor Nansen's deep indebtedness to the organizations and individuals assisting him, making "very special mention" of the assistance given by the international committee of the Red Cross, "without whose cooperation and practical help the whole work could scarcely have been carried out so rapidly and at such small cost." Then came the following statement of prisoners repatriated by countries and routes:

Total number of prisoners of war repatriated by the high commissioner of the League of Nations with the assistance of the international committee of the Red Cross from May, 1920, to July, 1922

N. B.—These figures are to be taken as provisional only, the final returns concerning distribution between various nationalities not having yet been received.

The secretary general, after reading this report, suggested that the reference to the International Red Cross committee be brought to the attention of that committee, and that the council add its own thanks to the committee.

Mr. Hanotaux agreed. He pointed out that Doctor Nansen had left himself out of account, and said that the council should take this last opportunity of stating that Doctor Nansen had distinguished himself as much in great works of charity as in science; that numberless families owed him a debt of gratitude; that in compensation for its evils, war gave rise to great virtues; that Doctor Nansen was the embodiment of courage and charity; that the work of repatriation was one of the league's greatest achievements, and Docton Nansen had carried it out most worthily.

The council agreed to transmit the last paragraph of Doctor Nansen's report and its own thanks to Doctor Nansen, and to express to Doctor Nansen its deep gratitude for his great services.

RUSSIAN REFUGEES

The secretary general read the report of Doctor Nansen, in the latter's absence, on the work in connection with Russian refugees, adding that Doctor Nansen would soon arrive and would develop and amplify the report before the assembly.

The report stated that Doctor Nansen had appointed a special committee at Constantinople to assist him in administering the fund of 30,000 pounds contributed by member nations of the league and the American Red Cross for the evacuation of Russian refugees from Constantinople; the committee consisting of Colonel Proctor and Mr. Burnier, delegates of the high commission (Doctor Nansen); Mr. Ringland, representing the American relief administration; and Major Davis, of the American Red Cross. Admiral Bristol, United States high commissioner at Constantinople, had approved the American appointments and had agreed to aid the committee. The organization perfected by Doctor Nansen had been instrumental in getting 10,000 Russian refugees out of Constantinople, and in getting permanent employment for about 1,000 in the vicinity. Approximately 18,000 were still to be dealt with in Constantinople, all of whom, however, were not destitute. The acute part of the problem related to the 10,000 now being fed by the American relief administration. Arrangements have been made with Bulgaria and the Russian Red Cross in Bulgaria for the evacuation of about 1,000 Russian invalids and other families into Bulgaria, the Russian Red Cross to assume responsibility for them after their arrival. Steps were being taken for the repatriation of about 1,000 Siberians from Constantinople to Vladivostok. Negotiations were under way with the Jewish Colonies Association and the central Zionist committee for transfer of about 600 Jewish refugees to Palestine, where Jewish organizations were preparing employment for them. On the suggestion of the American Relief Association, the American Red Cross, and on solicitation from representatives of the Soviet Government and refugee organizations, steps for reparation of all or a large part of Russian refugees in Europe were being considered by Doctor Nansen.

ADVISORY OPINIONS FROM PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE

The Marquis Imperiali reported that the council had received from the Permanent Court of International Justice advisory opinions on the three questions the council had addressed to the court relative to the nomination of the worker's delegate to the Netherlands for the third International Labor Conference, the competence of the international labor organization in regard to agriculture, and the competence of the international labor organization in regard to proposals for the organization and development of methods of agricultural production and similar questions. The speaker proposed that the council transmit these opinions to the director of the international labor office, the director to be asked to communicate the opinions to States which are members of the labor organization, but not of the league. He understood that state members of the league had already received copies. The proposal was adopted.

REPAYMENT OF EXPENSES OF NORWEGIAN VILNA CONTINGENT

Mr. Irgens, representing the Norwegian Government, was invited to the council table. Mr. Hymans summarized the documents relating to expense of the Norwegian Government in raising troops for Vilna, stating that the question of repayment to a government of expense incurred in raising a special force had still to be settled. There was a precedent, he said, in the cases of Sweden and Denmark. The council had decided on May 12, 1922, that in view of the special character of expenses incurred by Sweden and Denmark, which were quite exceptional as compared with the normal expenditures of these countries, the sums in question should be repaid by a credit to the draft budget to be sent to all league members on June 4, and that Poland and Lithuania should be approached for repayment of sums for which they had been asked, and for sums now under discussion. Mr. Hymans suggested that in view of these precedents the council should renew its decision of May 12, 1922, and comply with request of the Norwegian Government.

The secretary general thought the proper procedure would be to submit the Norwegian Government's claim to the assembly as a supplement to the budget; that it should be left to the assembly to say whether sums like this should be regarded as recoverable. The secretary general's suggestion was agreed to.

MINORITIES IN ALBANIA

Mr. Frasheri, representing Albania, was asked to the council table. Mr. da Gama reviewed the question of minorities in Albania; said that the Albanian report of July 7, 1922, had been transmitted to members of the council; that it gave detailed information on the general elections of 1920 for the Legislative Parliament, on the education of minorities, and the situation of religious communities. He said that it had not yet been possible for the Albanian Government to submit to the Parliament the laws mentioned by the Albanian representative at the council meeting of May 12. He proposed that the council make note of the Albanian report of July 7, 1922, and instruct the secretary general to collect and submit to the council in due course further information concerning the legislative measures relating to legal status of religious communities, churches, convents, schools, and voluntary establishments of racial, religious, and linguistic minorities in Albania. The proposal was accepted.

MINORITIES IN ESTONIA

Mr. Pusta, Estonian representative, was invited to the council table.

Mr. da Gama, in a report on Estonian minorities, expressed the opinion that the obligation assumed by the Estonian Government in its declaration of September 13, 1921, implied the acceptance of stipulations conforming to those in the various treaties already in force for the protection of minorities. He said that such treaties had been concluded with Poland, Rumania, Czechoslovakia, and the Serb-Croat-Slovene State; that stipulations for protection of minorities had been inserted in the treaties of peace with Austria, Bulgaria, and Hungary; that these provisions relating to minorities had been placed under the guaranty of the league; that similar stipulations had been embodied in certain other treaties which had not yet come into force; that Albania in a declaration to the council on October 2, 1921, and Lithuania by declaration of May 12, 1921, had assumed obligations for protection of minorities generally similar to those in the various treaties.

He stated that the minority protection provisions of these treaties formed the basis of the third section of the German-Polish agreement relating to upper Silesia concluded at Geneva May 15, 1922. That this section (arts. 64–158) contained detailed clauses relating to rights of minorities in both German and Polish parts of upper Silesia. He gave it as his judgment that the international obligations of Estonia as to protection of minorities should be defined in a declaration to the council of the League of Nations conforming as far as possible to these treaties. Inasmuch as representatives in council had not had full opportunity to examine his written report, and the comments of the Estonian representative thereon, he suggested that the matter go over to a later meeting of the present session. Agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF COMMERCE

The secretary general reported that he had received from the president of the International Parliamentary Conference on Commerce a recommendation adopted at its eighth assembly expressing the hope that the council of the League of Nations would recognize the International Institute of Commerce as its organ for commercial documentation, without, however, interfering with its autonomy. The secretary general asked authority to forward the recommendation to the economic committee of the league, which was now considering the general question of organization of international statistics. The council instructed the secretary general to take this action, with a request that the economic committee consider the matter at its current session.

Fourth meeting (public), September 2, 1922, 11.45 a. m.

APPOINTMENT OF SAAR MEMBER OF SAAR BASIN GOVERNING COMMISSION

Mr. Tang Tsai-Fou reported that the appointment of Doctor Hector as the member from the Saar territory of the Saar Basin Governing Commission would expire September 20, 1922; that representatives of certain political parties in the Saar territory claiming that the parties held 26 out of the 30 seats in the advisory council had recently transmitted to the secretary general of the league, through the governing commission, a request that Doctor Hector be not reappointed, and the further request that the population of the advisory council be permitted to suggest names of candidates possessing that confidence.

Mr. Tsai-Fou stated that a petition had been received through the governing commission from the Chamber of Agriculture of the Saar territory disagreeing to this request, and asking the appointment of Doctor Hector. Further petitions, the speaker said, had been received through the governing commission from farmers or farmers' organizations both for and against Doctor Hector's reappointment. The council adopted a resolution proposed by Mr. Tsai-Fou to the effect that Doctor Hector be reappointed for one year from September 20, 1922, and that the thanks of the council be conveyed to him for the services he had rendered to the League of Nations during his period in office.

APPOINTMENTS TO AND RESIGNATIONS FROM THE STAFF OF THE SECRETARIAT

The council received and offered a report from the secretary general of the league containing appointments, promotions, and resignations in the staff of the secretariat of the league since the last session of the council.

FINANCIAL SITUATION OF DANZIG

General Haking, Danzig high commissioner for the League of Nations, and Doctor Volkmann, representative of Danzig, discussed before the council and Mr. Askenazy, a representative of Poland, the report of the provisional economical and financial committee of the league on the financial situation of the Free City of Danzig, referred to the Danzig Government by the council on May 18, 1922. The reply of the Danzig Government and of the high commissioner, dated August 24, 1922, as well as the observations of the commissioner and Doctor Volkmann at the present meeting, were referred to the provisional economic and financial committee of the league for consideration, with the request for a further report at the earliest convenient moment.

NATIONAL STATUS OF INHABITANTS OF B AND C MANDATED TERRITORIES

Mr. de Leon reported on the question of the national status of inhabitants of B and C mandated territories which had been discussed at the August session of the Permanent Mandates Commission on the request of the council at its meeting of May 12, 1922.

The report of the commission proposed first, that in order to carry out the spirit of article 22 of the covenant, the native inhabitants of B and C mandated territories should be granted a national status wholly distinct from that of the nationals of the mandatory powers; second, that a special law of the mandatory powers should determine the status of these native inhabitants who might be designated as "administered persons under mandate" or "protected persons under mandate of the mandatory power"; third, that it was open to B and C mandatory powers to make arrangements in conformity with their own laws for the individual and purely voluntary acquisition of their nationality by inhabitants of these territories. The report then summarized the reasons for these proposals, setting forth in reference to the third, that it would be contrary to the spirit of the covenant and to the essence of the institution of the mandates to permit compulsory naturalization by a single act of all the inhabitants of B and C mandated territories—that the treaty of Versailles, by the terms of which the former German colonies were handed over to the principal allied and associated powers to be administered on behalf of the League of Nations by powers called mandatories, contained no clause imposing the nationality of the mandatory power on the inhabitants of those colonies; that specific authority for a step of this kind would have to be found in the treaty itself.

The council decided on motion of Mr. de Leon to postpone final decision on these proposals, meanwhile to forward them to league members, requesting the especial attention of mandatory powers, and to inform them that the proposal would be discussed at the next session.

PETITIONS FROM INHABITANTS OF MANDATED TERRITORIES

Mr. de Leon reported on the memorandum of the British Government submitted to the council on July 22, 1922, and suggesting procedure in respect to petitions to the league by communities or sections of the populations of mandated territories. The speaker proposed that consideration be postponed to a subsequent session; that the British Government's suggestions be forwarded to the Permanent Mandates Commission with a summary of the council's procedure on petitions from minorities or from inhabitants of Saar Basin; that this commission be requested to report not later than the end of 1922; that the council would then be in a position to discuss the British Government's suggestions and to make suitable decision.

REPORT OF HEALTH COMMITTEE

Mr. Hanotaux reported on the work of the health committee at its fourth session, which had been held at Geneva,

August 14–21, 1922. He stated that the results of this work were given in a report which had been held at Geneva, August 14–21, 1922. He stated that the results of the work were given in a report which had been submitted to the council. This report may be analyzed as follows:

ANALYSIS OF REPORT OF HEALTH COMMITTEE OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS TO COUNCIL ON SEPTEMBER 2, 1922, ON THE WORK OF THE FOURTH SESSION (AUGUST 14–21, 1922)

This report just takes up the health committee's negotiations with the International Health Board of the Rockefeller Foundation. It stated that the council at its nineteenth session had considered the correspondence between the International Health Board of the Rockefeller Foundation and the secretariat of the league; that the council had expressed its gratitude to the Rockefeller Foundation for its generous assistance in the construction work undertaken by the health organization of the league, and had invited the health committee to consider the details and the administration of the funds placed at its disposal for the purposes proposed by the Rockefeller Foundation. The report stated further that after thorough discussion the health committee had adopted the text of two letters, including a draft agreement to be addressed to the secretary general of the League of Nations to the International Health Board of the Rockefeller Foundation. Appendix 1 of the report sets out the first of these proposed letters. This letter begins by referring to Mr. Wicliffe Rose's letter to Doctor Rajchman of June 14, 1922, in which he stated that the executive committee of the International Health Board of the Rockefeller Foundation at its meeting of June 12, 1922, had authorized the officers of the board to enter into an arrangement with the health organization of the League of Nations for the maintenance of an international interchange of public-health personnel on an international scale for a period of three years, beginning October 1, 1922, and for this purpose to commit the board for a sum not to exceed $60,000 for any one year.

The letter then stated that Mr. Wickliff Rose also suggested the formulation of an agreement which might be adopted to this end by the League of Nations and the Rockefeller Foundation. The letter then avers that the signer thereof, the secretary general of the league, proposed in response to this generous offer of the Rockefeller Foundation and with the approval of the council of the League of Nations that the suggested agreement should be embodied in the following articles:

1. This agreement is made between the League of Nations acting through the secretary general on the one hand, and the Rockefeller Foundation acting through the executive committee of the International Health Board on the other hand for the maintenance of an international interchange of public-health personnel on an international scale.

2. The health organization of the League of Nations to establish and maintain an international exchange of public-health personnel as a separate branch of its work, to begin operations not later than October 1, 1922, continuing thereafter for not less than three years unless by mutual agreement between the league and the foundation some other arrangement is made.

3. The work of the interchange of public-health personnel to be conducted along the following general lines:

(1) To bring public-health administration in different countries into closer relationship with each other.

(2) To make comparative examination of the organization and of legislation regarding public health in different countries.

(3) To endeavor to obtain the cooperation of the public-health administrations for the purpose of agreeing on a uniform standard of public health and uniform regulations.

To bring about these objects it will be necessary—

A. To organize meetings of public-health officials from various countries and make it possible for these officials to remain for a certain time attached to the health services of other countries so that—

(a) They may have opportunities of exchanging views on health problems.

(b) They may have opportunities of acquainting themselves with the public-health organizations of those countries, with their methods of applying regulations, and with the duties of health officials.

(c) To make grants toward the expense of sending from time to time a small number of health officials to study on the spot the public-health organizations in other countries, the methods of applying regulations and the duties of health officials.

(4) Annual reports of the administration of the interchange of public-health personnel to be made to the Council and Assembly of the League of Nations and copies thereof to be forwarded regularly to the International Health Board of the Rockefeller Foundation. Representatives of foundation to be kept closely and regularly informed of the activities of the interchange of public-health personnel.

(5) The Rockefeller Foundation to pay an annual subvention to meet the expense of the interchange of public-health personnel, not to exceed $60,000 a year for each of three years, 1922–23, 1923–24, and 1924–25.

(6) The foundation to pay the annual subvention in quarterly installments beginning October 1, 1922, directly to the financial director of the secretariat of the League of Nations.

(7) The financial director of the secretariat of the League of Nations to administer the subventions as a separate fund for the maintenance of the interchange of public-health personnel, to be known as the interchange of public-health personnel fund, and to make disbursements therefrom at the direction of the secretary general of the League of Nations after a budget has been approved by the health organization of the league.

(8) The special accounts of the financial director for the interchange of public-health personnel fund to be audited as directed by the council of the League of Nations.

(9) Annual statements of account of the interchange of public-health personnel fund to be rendered to the council and assembly of the League of Nations, and copies thereof to be forwarded regularly to the International Health Board of the Rockefeller Foundation.

(10) These articles of agreement may be modified by mutual consent of the council of the League of Nations and the Rockefeller Foundation.

(11) These articles have been approved by the council of the League of Nations and will become effective on approval by the International Health Board of the Rockefeller Foundation.

The letter then states that the foregoing articles of agreement, having been approved by the council of the League of Nations, now await the approval of said board.

Appendix 2 of the report sets out the second suggested draft letter to the Rockefeller Foundation. This letter begins by referring to a letter from Mr. Wicliffe Rose to Doctor Rajchman of June 14, 1922, in which Mr. Rose stated that the executive committee of the International Health Board of the Rockefeller Foundation at its meeting on June 12, 1922, had authorized the officers of the board to enter into an arrangement with the health organization of the League of Nations for the maintenance of a special international service of epidemiological intelligence and public-health statistics on an international scale for a period of five years beginning January 1, 1923, and for the purpose to commit the board for a sum not to exceed $32,840 for any one year. This second letter then stated that Mr. Wicliffe Rose also suggested the formulation of an agreement which might be adopted to this end by the League of Nations and the Rockefeller Foundation. It is next stated in this letter that the signer thereof, the secretary general of the league, proposed in response to the generous offer of the Rockefeller Foundation and with the approval of the council of the League of Nations that the suggested agreement should be embodied in the following articles:

1. The agreement is made between the League of Nations acting through its secretary general, on the one hand, and the Rockefeller Foundation acting through the executive committee of the International Health Board, on the other hand, for the maintenance of a special international service of epidemiological intelligence and public-health statistics on an international scale.

2. The health organization of the League of Nations to establish and maintain a special international service of epidemiological intelligence and public-health statistics as a separate branch of its work, to begin operation June 1, 1923, continuing thereafter not less than five years unless by mutual agreement between the parties some other arrangement should be made.

3. The work of the special international service of epidemiological intelligence and public-health statistics to be conducted along the following general lines:

(1) The service to undertake to obtain, study, and distribute information regarding disease in different countries, including medical statistics, with the object of adding to the knowledge on which public-health measures, national and international, are based. To bring about these ends the service will—

(a) Study the simplest and most reliable methods of obtaining information regarding the incidence of disease and the progress of epidemics.

(b) Make a comparative study of public-health statistics of different countries.

(c) Study world distribution of particular diseases.

(d) Make a comparative study of the incidence of particular diseases in different countries and their public-health statistics with a view to determining the nature and practical significance of observed difference between them.

(e) Study the periodicity of epidemics and the factors which cause or influence such periodicity.

(f) Organize, with the concurrence of the public-health administrations of the countries affected, missions of inquiry regarding the development of epidemics, or for the other purposes heretofore indicated.

(g) Publish and distribute special reports and periodical bulletins.

(h) Review the public health of the principal countries of the world with a view to the issue, circumstances permitting, of reports on the subject as a whole.

(i) Organize a rapid interchange of information regarding particular diseases where immediate action seems necessary.

(j) Employ at headquarters or elsewhere experts provided with requisite assistance and technical equipment.

The remainder of the articles and of the letter are of similar import as the corresponding portions of the first letter.

The report states further that after adopting these letters the health committee empowered the medical director to prepare for the Rockefeller Foundation a budget of the expenditure involved in the first scheme of interchange of public-health personnel for 1922.

The health committee's report then takes up further the interchange of public-health personnel. It states that at its third session, held in May, 1922, the health committee had instructed the medical director to take the necessary steps to effect an interchange of sanitary staff between different countries, at least as a provisional and experimental measure, esteeming it of the greatest utility for sanitary officers to become acquainted with practical solutions of public-health problems as well as with the organization of public-health services in various countries. Accordingly, steps had been taken for a first experiment which would be tried at Brussels in October, 1922. Some 23 medical officers of public health would be commissioned by the public-health administrations of different countries—Belgium, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Italy, Poland, Russia, Serb-Croat-Slovene State—to proceed to Brussels. The director of Belgian public-health services would give a series of lectures describing in detail the working of the public-health services of the country and would explain the principles of Belgian sanitary legislation, and so forth. The medical officers would then make, for a period of two months, a similar study in various countries selected by their national health administrations, principally in Italy, Poland, and the Netherlands. The health committee had at this third session recommended, first, that the medical director proceed with the study and application of the scheme he had submitted for a collective system of interchange of public-health personnel during the present year; second, that he at once undertake negotiations for future experiments and submit further proposals at the next meeting; third, that he submit at the same time proposals for the most suitable means of interchange of public-health personnel on an individual basis and in respect of countries in any part of the world; fourth, that the plan for collective interchange of public-health officials should, so far as theoretical instruction was concerned, provide for instruction limited to a study of health legislation and health administration, and should be based on a period of practical instruction in the health service of the country concerning which the instruction was given, it being understood that the instruction was intended above all as a preparation for the practical work; fifth, that the committee congratulated itself on the temporary cooperation of the Rockefeller Foundation in the organization of an interchange of public-health personnel and considered it indispensable to the completion and permanence of such an organization that the credit provided in the league budget for this purpose be retained.

The health committee's report then took up the report of the epidemic commission of the League of Nations, stating that the commission had been amalgamated with the health organization of the league in accordance with the resolution of the second assembly, and had been placed under the direction of the health organization and of the medical director in accordance with the council's resolution of January 14, 1922. Accordingly, the present report of that commission had been presented to the health committee for consideration. The health committee's report then proceeded to comment on the report of the epidemic commission, saying that it was doing a work of great value. It had aided in the establishment and maintenance of disinfecting, cleansing, and observation stations on the main routes by which infection was constantly being brought from Russia westward into the border states, especially Poland, in making improvements in hospitals for infectious diseases in internment camps and establishments for repatriates and refugees, and had helped in other ways in resisting disease.

I have concluded my summary of what happened in connection with the league from the time I left off 10 years ago to the meeting of the assembly of the league in September, 1922.

I now take up the third assembly of the League of Nations, which met at Geneva September 4, 1922. The session began on Monday.

THIRD ASSEMBLY OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS, GENEVA, SEPTEMBER 4, 1922

First meeting Monday, September 4, 1922, 11 a. m.

ADDRESS OF ACTING PRESIDENT

The first meeting of the third assembly of the League of Nations was declared to be open on September 4, 1922, 11 a. m., at Geneva, by Mr. da Gama, Brazil, acting president of the council of the league. He said that his regret at being absent from Brazil on the first centenary of its independence was mitigated by the fact that he was taking part in an international enterprise of high importance, that the League of Nations had now become so integral a part of the political system of the world that it was already indispensable, that the annual reports of the activities of the council were the best retort to the critics and enemies of the league, that the assembly must have for its object the continuance of the work which had begun in a spirit of international cooperation, that there was no danger that the league would become a superstate, that the sovereignty of states remained unimpaired, that difficulties were inevitable but with perseverance and faith would be overcome.

APPOINTMENT OF CREDENTIALS COMMITTEE

Jonkheer Loudon, Netherlands, proposed the following committee on verification of credentials: Mr. Albert Mensdorff-Pouilly-Dietrichstein, Austria; Mr. Tang Tsai-Fou, China; Mr. de Aguero Y. Bethancourt, Cuba; the Maharajah Jam Sahib de Nawanager, India; Doctor Velasquez, Paraguay; Mr. Leon Plucinski, Poland; Mr. Yovanovitch, Serbia; Mr. Fernandez y Medina, Uruguay. This proposal was adopted, and the acting president, suggesting that the committee should sit immediately, adjourned the meeting of the assembly.

Second meeting Monday, September 4, 1922, 4 p. m.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CREDENTIALS

At the opening of the second meeting Mr. de Bethancourt, chairman and rapporteur of the committee, submitted the report on credentials. The credentials of delegates of the following states were found in order: Albania, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, British Empire, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Finland, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, India, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Liberia, Lithuania, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Persia, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Serb-Croat-Slovene State, Siam, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Uruguay, Venezuela.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT—HIS ADDRESS

Mr. Augustine Edwards (Chile) was elected president of the third assembly. He thanked the assembly for what he called a tribute to Latin America, and to his native country, Chile, saying that the Latin American nations, on the eve of their periodical conference at Santiago, would be happy to receive from the assembly proof that they were regarded as essential to the great cause for the maintenance of peace and international justice. He said he was sensible of the responsibility he was assuming, of the prestige conferred on the presidency by his predecessors, Mr. Hymans and Mr. Karnebeek, whose examples he would try to follow; that to the first assembly had fallen the task of creating and beginning the work of the League of Nations; that the second assembly had instituted the Permanent Court of International Justice; that it would be for the third assembly to strengthen and coordinate the organization necessary to assure a general cooperation of the nations.

COMMITTEES

On the president's proposal the assembly decided, as in previous years, in accordance with traditional procedure, to appoint six general committees and a small committee to examine questions proposed for the agenda during the meetings of the assembly, the small committee to be composed of Mr. Hymans, of Belgium; Mr. Blanco, of Uruguay; Lord Robert Cecil, of South Africa; Mr. Erich, of Finland; Mr. Dissesco, of Rumania.

Third meeting, Tuesday, September 5, 1922, 12 m.

POSTPONEMENT OF ELECTION OF VICE PRESIDENTS

On the president's proposal, it was decided to defer the election of vice presidents until Wednesday morning, September 6, at 10 o'clock.

REPORT OF COUNCIL

The president proposed that the report of the council on its work and its measures taken to execute the decisions of the assembly be taken up and discussed in detail. The Count de Gimeno (Spain) asked if a question of procedure could be taken up before electing the six vice presidents and thus constituting the general committee. The president replied that though article 8 of the rules of procedure prescribed that the president should be assisted by the officers of the assembly in his conduct of the proceedings, this did not prevent the assembly from deciding as to the order in which it would deal with questions on the agenda. Mr. Hymans, Belgium, asserted that article 8 did not imply that the president could do nothing without consulting the general committee. By a vote of 18 to 16 the assembly decided to continue the discussion on the procedure to be adopted in dealing with the report of the work of the council.

Lord Robert Cecil (South Africa) said that while the president's suggestion was valuable there were objections, that on previous occasions the assembly had felt so strongly the difficulty of detailed discussions at the outset that it had decided to discuss in detail no specific item or proposal until it had been referred to a committee and until that committee had made recommendations; that this procedure had worked well. He said that without previous examination the debate on any question would, in his opinion, lose interest; that the president's proposal might lead the assembly to review in detail the action of the council, which would be contrary to the spirit of the covenant; that the debate on the report of the work of the council would be unduly prolonged. He proposed that no change in procedure should be made at the assembly then in session; that the president's suggestion be referred to the general committee of the assembly when appointed, and that general discussion of the council's report and the course and attitude of the league be had as theretofore.

The president stated that on reflection he agreed with Lord Cecil, whereupon Lord Cecil's proposal to refer the president's suggestion to the general committee was adopted.

Fourth meeting, Tuesday, September 5, 1922, 4 p. m.

GENERAL DISCUSSION OF REPORT ON WORK OF COUNCIL

Mr. Midhat Frasheri (Albania) conveyed to the assembly on behalf of his Government the gratitude of the Albanian people, stating that the anarchy which had prevailed in Albania in consequence of foreign interference had been supplanted by tranquillity; that despite all kinds of difficulties the country was moving toward order and progress; that this result was due in large measure to the activities of the League of Nations and of the commissions which had been sent to Albania. He said that the neighbor States which had opposed the admission of Albania into the League of Nations had been happy to collaborate with her in the common work of civilization; that it was to be hoped that difficulties still outstanding in the southern part of the country would be settled satisfactorily to both parties; that the Greek Government would not fail to appreciate the advantages, both for the peace of the Balkans and the world, of the existence of a free and independent Albania.

PROTECTION OF MINORITIES

Prof. Gilbert Murray (South Africa) extended his congratulations to the council of the league on the general success of its procedure for dealing with questions relating to protection of minorities, adding that it could not have worked so well without the cooperation of the governments concerned. He said that the action contemplated by the league was as much in the interests of the governments as of the minorities themselves; that there has been a new distribution of Europe; and that the new situation would be seriously threatened if permanently disaffected elements remained in any of the new states. He stated that the method followed by the council was one of discreet and informal conversations with the governments; that instead of making an international issue of every grievance, some one was sent to talk with the officials concerned; that thus very considerable grievances had been removed. The method was not completely successful, he continued, because he had himself received complaints from representatives of minorities who had said they were afraid to appeal to the league. He stated that security did not exist as long as there were such apprehensions; that it was the business of the league to restore security in Macedonia and to insure that the Jews might everywhere live like ordinary citizens.

He proposed this resolution:

That the questions dealt with in chapter 9, sections A, B, C, and D, of the general report to the assembly on the work of the council, be referred to a committee of the assembly, with the request to report thereon to the assembly, in order that the latter may have an opportunity of expressing its considered view on these questions.

He disclaimed any desire in submitting the resolution to direct the assembly's attention to any particular action of the council but only to bring about discussion on the general principles.

The president stated that the resolution would be printed and circulated in accordance with article 17, Rules of Procedure.

RISING IN SOUTHWEST AFRICA

Sir Edgar Walton (South Africa) presented a report on the administration of Southwest Africa, relating to the recent native rising in the mandated territory. He said that the Government of South Africa had appointed a commission of inquiry into charges against officers and men engaged in suppressing the outbreak; that he hoped judgment would be suspended until the report had been seen.

The president stated that the report would be deposited in the library of the league, where it could be consulted by all delegates.

Fifth meeting, Wednesday, September 6, 1922, 10.30 a. m.

Election of vice presidents was taken up and the following chosen: Lord Balfour, Great Britain; Mr. Hanotaux, France; Mr. Gomes, Portugal; Mr. Branting, Sweden; Count de Gimeno, Spain; Mr. Nintchitch, Serb-Croat-Slovene State.

DISCUSSION OF COUNCIL'S REPORT—BULGARIA AND QUESTION OF MINORITIES

Mr. Radeff (Bulgaria) expressed a desire to pay tribute to the work of the council and the secretariat. He called attention to the difficulties, about the end of the preceding spring, between Bulgaria and the adjacent states—Rumania, Serb-Croat-Slovene State, and Greece—saying that the council's intervention at Bulgaria's invitation had immediately alleviated these difficulties and smoothed the way to a direct understanding between Bulgaria and her neighbors. He said that the question of minorities was one with which the council had had to deal, a question which closely concerned the work of consolidating the peace of Europe. He said that Bulgaria supported Prof. Gilbert Murray's proposal of the day before; that Bulgaria also had her national susceptibilities, but that he hardly believed that such susceptibilities could be wounded by the organization of a supervision over the application of clauses which Bulgaria had applied in principle and the consequences of which she had accepted. Bulgaria, he added, assented in advance to any procedure appearing to be necessary to assure the rights of minorities as defined in the treaties, and approved any steps which might be taken for the maintenance of peace.

WORK OF COUNCIL—ALAND ISLANDS

Lord Robert Cecil reviewed the work of the council of the league during the past year. The conclusion of the convention for the neutralization of the Aland Islands had settled a question of great difficulty and complexity, an achievement entitling the league to universal gratitude.

SILESIAN QUESTION

He said that a convention regulating the details of the settlement of Upper Silesia had been negotiated between Poland and Germany under the auspices of the League of Nations, the negotiations having been presided over by Mr. Calonder, nominated by the league, and all disputed points having been settled by agreement between the parties. He pronounced this a conspicuous success for the league.

ALBANIAN QUESTION

He said further, that the success attending the league in settling the Albanian question had been due in no small degree to the far-sighted self-control of the Serb-Croat-Slovene State. The settlement of this question, he added, was a great achievement which, so Lord Balfour had publicly stated, could not have been accomplished by any statesman, organization, or machinery in the world but the League of Nations.

SAAR BASIN AND DANZIG

He said that he would like to ask the council whether it would not be well for the advisory council, assisting the Saar Basin Governing Commission, to collaborate in nominating the Saar Basin member of that commission, and whether it would not be advisable for the council to create a small, administrative subcommittee to handle the numerous details connected with the administration of the Saar Basin and the Free City of Danzig.

EUROPEAN HEALTH CONFERENCE AT WARSAW

He stated that representatives of Germany and Russia along with representatives of the league had attended the European health conference at Warsaw, and expressed the hope that this was an augury of the time when the league would be representative of all the nations of the world.

HUMANITARIAN EFFORTS

He alluded to what he termed the important work of the league in suppressing the opium traffic, the traffic in women and children, the relief of Russian refugees, the repatriation of Russian prisoners of war, and stated that Doctor Nansen's work in repatriating 450,000 prisoners of war was a great achievement.

WAR BETWEEN GREECE AND TURKEY

Referring to the war between Greece and Turkey, he said that the assembly or council under articles 3, 4, and 11 of the covenant was empowered to deal with any matter affecting the peace of the world; that it was the friendly right of every member of the league to bring to the attention of the assembly any circumstances affecting international relations which threatened to disturb international peace; that the present activities of the league did not extend so far as to cover these obligations; that no appeal had been made and no opportunity given to the league to intervene in the war between Greece and Turkey.

RUSSIA

Taking up the question of Russia, he stated that no material progress had been made in dealing therewith; that the league, if it had intervened more decisively the year before, might have lessened the horrors of famine and opened the door for renewal of commercial intercourse between the Russian people and the rest of the world; that at present there was seemingly little the league could do, but he was glad to hear that the council had begun an inquiry into the present situation in Russia.

AUSTRIAN QUESTION AND EUROPEAN FINANCIAL SITUATION

Turning to the question of Austria, he said that this was under consideration by the council and he would abstain from comment; that this question, however, was only part of the great economic crisis threatening Europe; that it was believed by some authorities that Germany would shortly be in the same position as Austria. He said that the Austrian question turned upon the problem of reparations and intergovernmental indebtedness; that he would ask how long these questions would poison the international atmosphere; that all nations were affected and he would ask the assembly to consider carefully whether the league should not take some useful action in that regard before adjournment; that if the assembly did not do so there would be universal disappointment.

REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS

As to armament reduction, he said that important proposals from the temporary Mixed Commission for Reduction of Armaments would come before the council that afternoon; that the proposals would aid in mapping out lines of advance in bringing about armament reduction; that it had to be admitted that the attitude of the international mind was not yet favorable to reduction, an attitude depending largely on the present economic situation.

He added that the league could not forever be barred from considering these great international questions, that it could not continue to exist merely to settle matters of secondary importance, that it must sooner or later take over the full responsibilities laid upon it by the covenant.

PROTECTION OF MINORITIES

Doctor Walters, Latvia, presented the following amendment to the motion of Prof. Gilbert Murray on the day before:

That the questions dealt with in chapter 9, sections A, B, C, and D, of the general report to the assembly on the work of the council, on the general questions arising out of the protection of minorities by all the members of the League of Nations be referred to a committee of the assembly with the request to report thereon to the assembly in order that the latter may have an opportunity of expressing its considered view on these questions and of laying down the main lines for the general protection of minorities in all States members of the League of Nations.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Sir Arthur Steel-Maitland, New Zealand, stated that the Bureau for Control of the Liquor Traffic should be transferred to Geneva so that its activities might be coordinated with those of other organs of the league, that the bureau should remain in Brussels for the current year, but that a date for its subsequent removal should be fixed by the assembly or the council.

REVIVAL OF SLAVERY IN AFRICA

Sir Arthur Steel-Maitland then said that there was reason to believe that there had been a recent revival of slavery in Africa, due to the continued existence of the traffic in arms and ammunition, that slavery existed at that moment in Abyssinia, the ruler being unable to suppress it on account of difficulties for which he was not responsible. He offered the following resolution:

The assembly resolves to refer to the appropriate committee the question of the recrudescence of slavery in Africa in order that it may consider and propose the best methods for combating that evil.

EASTERN CARELIA

Mr. Holsti, Finland, said that Eastern Carelia was still deprived of the autonomy which should have been granted it under the treaty between Finland and the Russian Soviet Republic at Dorpat on October 18, 1920, that steps taken as a result of the council's decision in January to settle the Eastern Carelian question had so far failed, that the Soviet Government had refused to enter into direct negotiations with Finland, rejecting the proposed reference of the matter to the council for impartial consideration, and that Finland had been unable to obtain satisfaction either through organs of the league or by arbitration. The Government of Finland hoped, he continued, that the council would keep up its endeavors in line with the principles of the covenant, and intended to ask through the council the advisory opinion of the Permanent Court of International Justice on the juridical aspects of the question.

Sixth meeting, Thursday, September 7, 1922, 11 p. m.

TRIBUTE TO BRAZIL

The president proposed a message from the assembly to Brazil, which was celebrating the centenary of its independence, stating that the separation of Brazil from its mother country had been accomplished in a peaceful and friendly manner, that Brazil had been one of the founders of the League of Nations, and had incorporated into its constitution the system of arbitration.

Mr. da Gama, Brazil, expressed the gratitude of the Brazilian delegation, saying that Brazil would continue to make efforts to further the success of the league.

The president's proposal was adopted unanimously.

CONTINUED DISCUSSION OF REPORT ON WORK OF COUNCIL—UPPER SILESIA

Viscount Ishii, Japan, said that the record of three years proved the steady and healthful development of the league and the weakness of the criticisms against it; that the settlement of the Silesian question was a tribute to the league's efficiency; that the great powers had admitted their impotence to settle it; that the league freed it from internal politics and found a just and equitable solution.

DISARMAMENT

Viscount Ishii said further that despite what had been accomplished by the Washington conference, the question of disarmament presented such important and difficult problems that the league would be compelled to examine them constantly with utmost care, that in this work the league would have the sincere and active support of Japan.

COMPETENCE OF COUNCIL AND ASSEMBLY

Mr. Motta, Switzerland, said that the council and the assembly were two coordinated bodies possessing equal competence, that the discussion on the report of the council to the assembly was no more than a general exchange of views on the work of the League of Nations, that a warm tribute was due the council for what it had done, but that entrance into questions of detail was impossible and dangerous.

FUTURE OF LEAGUE

Mr. Motta said further that since the second assembly international affairs had become more serious and that it might be asked whether the League of Nations was realizing the hopes of the peoples. There were two viewpoints, he said; first, the thought by some that the league merely supplied a method of international work and cooperation and should be confined to the creation of a technical nucleus for international conferences; second, the idea that the league should become a great organization giving expression to the views of all nations. He contended that under the second viewpoint the league could not remain inactive before the political, financial, and economic disasters threatening civilization, and said that the whole Swiss Nation approved the declarations of Lord Robert Cecil that the league must be all or nothing.

THE COVENANT AND THE TREATIES OF PEACE

Mr. Motta then averred that a distinction should be drawn between the treaties of peace and the League of Nations; that certain problems, such as reparations and the interallied indebtedness, must be settled outside the league, although it had been realized during the last three years that all the great international questions were interdependent; that all countries, for instance, were interested in the fall of the mark, and that the council should keep in mind certain aspects of this problem.

THE AUSTRIAN QUESTION

Referring to Austria, Mr. Matta said that it presented a very serious question; that thanks were due the council for having immediately taken up the question; that Europe was to be congratulated that there was a League of Nations to deal with it; that Austria might be assured that its territorial integrity and political independence would be safeguarded; that the league's solution would give to Austria the confidence and vitality essential to a State.

EUROPEAN CONDITIONS

Doctor Nansen, Norway, took the floor, saying that the council's report showed the league's increasing strength; that the economic condition of Europe was growing worse; that there was no salvation without the league; that Norway was especially affected by the economic crisis, and looked to the league as the only means for the alleviation of Norway's economic distress.

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

Referring to the Russian famine, Doctor Nansen said that efforts of the previous year to induce the state's members of the league to take joint action had not been successful; that the Brussels conference, to which the matter was referred, had done nothing; that he believed it an error to refer questions requiring intergovernmental action on a large scale from the league with its permanent organization and machinery to temporary conferences with neither power nor will to enforce their decisions; that failure in this case had brought death to millions, the lowest figure being 2,000,000, and this, he believed, was an underestimate; that in the richest granary in Europe salted human flesh had been sold in the market places; that the survivors were much enfeebled, the famine having only been checked, not arrested. He added that the harvest was good, but insufficient for the needs of the people; that help now needed was in reconstruction, not charity; that accordingly the Norwegian Government had proposed that a commission of inquiry report on the economic condition of Russia and its effect on Europe; that the council had begun an inquiry, and he hoped it would create the commission; that it was essential to European prosperity that means should be found to put Russian agriculture on its feet again.

EPIDEMICS

Taking up the subject of epidemics, Doctor Nansen said that the Warsaw health conference had proved the imminent danger to Europe of epidemic diseases raging at the time he was speaking in Russia, and had made recommendations, asking what had been done to raise the money necessary to carry out these recommendations; that if nothing were done, the situation would be worse the next year; that the epidemic commission had done invaluable work with its limited funds; and that greater support for it was of urgent importance.

MANDATES

Alluding to mandates, Doctor Nansen stated that in approving them the council had taken a great step forward; that the accounts given of the session of the Mandates Commission had caused the warmest satisfaction; that the council and the Mandates Commission could count on the support of all members of the league. He moved the following resolution:

The assembly, having taken cognizance of the documents of the council and of the Permanent Mandates Commission concerning mandates, expresses its general satisfaction with the great progress realized since the last assembly, and resolves to refer the mandates question to the appropriate commission for closer examination.

MINORITIES

On the subject of "minorities," Doctor Nansen said this was one of the most important problems facing the league, that 80,000,000 people in Europe had changed their nationality as a result of the peace treaties; that the league should secure the legal rights conferred on minorities by the treaties; that it was extremely important that Latvia and Estonia sign as soon as possible declarations corresponding to the treaties, as they had agreed to do on their admission to the league a year before; that he hoped negotiations between the council and these countries would soon be satisfactorily concluded.

DISARMAMENT

On the topic of "disarmament," Doctor Nansen stated that the temporary Mixed Commission for the Reduction of Armaments and the Permanent Armaments Commission were the most important bodies of the league; that it was most unfortunate, therefore, that the composition of the temporary mixed commission had not been completed until July 3 of the current year; that it must be encouraged in every way; and that it was urgently desirable that it should formulate a definite and concrete plan for the reduction of armaments. He stated that Lord Esher had presented a plan of disarmament; that the plan's difficulties were great, but could be mastered; that the task, however, of the temporary mixed commission had not been lightened by the council of the league. One member of the council, he said, had stated that it was not the duty of the commission to propose a scale of coefficients for the limitation of land armaments, another member agreeing, but holding that the freedom of the commission should not be restricted. Still another member, he continued, had said that in studying a scale of coefficients the commission was exceeding its powers and encroaching on the practical side of the question, a matter reserved for the council and the governments. Doctor Nansen contended that such opinions were dangerous; that while final decision lay with the council and the governments, they could take no decision without a definite scheme on which to work. He added that the temporary mixed commission contained experts of every kind, was admirably equipped to devise a practical scheme as the basis of a final decision; that he hoped the commission would prepare a plan acceptable to the governments which could be presented to the next assembly.

AUSTRIA

Count Mensdorff, Austria, expressed gratitude on behalf of Austria for the statements of Mr. Motta and Doctor Nansen relating to that country, for the assurances of the former that Switzerland desired to assist Austria, and for the sympathy extended by Norway, an evidence that not merely the immediate neighbors of Austria but all nations were interested in helping one of the community of nations. He said that the council was handling the Austrian question, and that a prompt decision could be expected; that this question gave the league an opportunity to strengthen the high moral authority it had always possessed by showing that it could bring about practical results.

Seventh meeting, Friday, September 8, 1922, 10 a. m.

ALBANIA AND BULGARIA

The Earl of Balfour said that at the outset of his remarks he wished to thank the delegates from Albania and Bulgaria who had expressed their sense of the services rendered their countries by the council.

VISCOUNT ISHII AND THE WASHINGTON CONFERENCE

The Earl spoke of Viscount Ishii's reference to the Washington conference, and said that while it had been held in a country unhappily not yet a member of the league, it had been animated by the same spirit which was guiding the league.

MOTTA AND AUSTRIA

The Earl then stated that Mr. Motta's reference to Austria showed Switzerland's strong desire to succor her neighbor.

CRITICISMS OF CECIL AND NANSEN

The Earl of Balfour next asserted that the criticisms by Lord Cecil and Doctor Nansen were prompted by a most sympathetic consideration for the work of the council, that freedom of speech was an essential principle of the league.

SAAR BASIN

Balfour then said that the responsibilities of the council in connection with the Saar Basin were heavy, owing to vehement propaganda carried on to insure that the plebiscite in 1935 would favor Germany; that machinery existed by which every grievance of the Saar inhabitants could be considered by the council; that the league's duty in the Saar Valley was to insure just government in the interest of the people; that propagandists were more desirous that the government of the Saar Valley should be discredited than that the valley should be well governed.

RUSSIAN FAMINE

The speaker next stated that the British Government had given for relief of the Russian famine stores of the value of £250,000 and that the response of private charity in Great Britain to the prime minister's appeal had been larger than in any other country.

EPIDEMICS IN RUSSIA

As to Russian epidemics, the speaker remarked that the nations of the world had been backward in dealing with this menace; that the council had on several occasions appealed for funds and the response was admirable but inadequate; that the necessity was still great; that the British Government was prepared to give £100,000 if all the other nations of the world would give £200,000; that it was very important that a considerable sum be raised at once to deal with a danger affecting not only Russia but all central Europe.

THE NEAR EAST—THE LEAGUE'S POSITION

Answering Lord Cecil's criticism of the league for non-intervention in the Near East, Balfour said that the league was not in this case assisted by treaties; that it had not to deal with two members committed by pledges to certain obligations; that it had no money, ships, or men; that it had only moral influence, which in this case—the war between Greece and Turkey—might be regarded as a forlorn hope. He added that the league's machinery had not been constructed to deal with the postwar calamities at the time afflicting the world; that the league was not well equipped financially for doing many things effectively; that certain critics called the league the fantastic product of idle dreamers, while others regarded it as almost a substitute for national organizations; that it was neither, and would reach its predestined ideal by slow stages and by careful remodeling of its machinery.

THE WORLD CRISIS AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Mr. Scialoja, Italy, said that the world was facing a period of crisis; that the war had been followed by a kind of disintegration, both as to international relations and within the states themselves; that the league might, nevertheless, claim with pride that the most difficult questions of the day had been submitted to it. The league's founders, he asserted, had not claimed that the league would be perfect from the outset, the absence of strict sanctions being due to the fact that it was necessary to allow the nations as a whole to arrive gradually at an understanding of the new system of international relations. He asserted that, despite inevitable weakness, the league was the greatest force for cohesion between the people of the world in existence; that the council and the secretariat were to be congratulated on their work; that great progress, for instance, had been made with the question of disarmament. He stated that a just appreciation of the league's activities was made difficult by the fact that its action was preventive, not conspicuous and generally known; that the league must gradually develop the spirit of initiative, emerging from a passive state into that of concrete and direct performance.

AUSTRIA

As to Austria, Mr. Scialoja said it would be a great achievement if a resolution of the council and the assembly, after drawing attention to the importance to Europe of Austrian reconstruction, would lead to a removal of the difficulties which had caused certain states to hesitate in assisting Austria. He added that the council could do still more; that it might assure Austria and her neighbors that her international existence would be preserved, and that by coming to the aid of the Vienna Government the council might reestablish the confidence essential to the credit of Austria. He said further that the council might persuade the states succeeding the former Austrian Empire to apply the generous principles defined by Porto Rosa conference, and to examine again the proposals of Italy. No member was more anxious than Italy, he said, for effective action by the council in this difficult situation, the effective handling of which would enable the league finally to assert its strength and vitality.

THE WORK OF THE LEAGUE

Mr. Bellegarde, Haiti, stated that the council's report showed that on two occasions at least the league had saved the peace of the world; that numerous problems of humanitarian, social, and intellectual character had been solved, a work which might be regarded as a preparation for peace by international cooperation. He said that notwithstanding all this, indifference and skepticism were gaining ground because the high hopes of nations had been disappointed; that at that moment while they were talking of peace in the assembly of the league, war between Greece and Turkey was devastating Asia Minor. He stated that league opponents too often ignored political and economic conditions, underrating the difficulty of settling a dispute and at the same time avoiding offense to the parties; that the league, in the interest of self-preservation, had to avoid rash interventions; that it was not yet the universal association which it must eventually become, but it might be confidently anticipated that among the great nations still absent from the league, the United States of America would not long delay her collaboration. He urged that the time had come for the League of Nations to be discreetly bold, saying that good will and confidence would increase its authority; that there would be no certainty of world peace until all questions dividing peoples were submitted to compulsory arbitration; that it was necessary for the league to create guarantees assuring respect for international public order.

MANDATE FOR SOUTHWEST AFRICA

Mr. Bellegarde then called attention to what he termed "extremely grave occurrences" in Southwest Africa, saying that Sir Edgar Walton had referred to a native uprising; that, according to the press, a punitive expedition had been sent against the natives equipped with all the modern resources of war, although there had been no act of rebellion or disorder; that it was inadmissible that women and children should be massacred under the auspices of the League of Nations.

He then presented the following resolution:

The assembly, highly appreciating the action taken by the Government of South Africa in communicating, in its capacity of mandatory power for southwest Africa, the report of the Bondelzwart rebellion, 1922, moved by feelings of great anxiety for the welfare and relief of the survivors, resolves to express:

1. Its profound satisfaction with the official statement made by Sir Edgar Walton that a full and impartial inquiry will be made into all the facts of the Bondelzwart rebellion and its repression.

2. The confident hope that the permanent Mandates Commission at its next session will consider this question and be able to report that satisfactory conditions have been reestablished and that in the meanwhile the mandatory power will make every effort to relieve the suffering of the victims, particularly the women and children, and that it will insure protection and restitution of the remaining livestock and in general the restoration of the economic life of the Bondelzwart district.

MINORITIES

On the question of minorities, Mr. Charles Pusta, Estonia, said that if a committee of the assembly should take up this question, he hoped an answer could be found to the following inquiries: What constitutes an ethnical minority? What is the number of nationals differing in origin, religion, or language from the majority of the population which might be treated as a minority in any particular state? What is meant by cultural autonomy? How should such autonomy be organized and what are its limits? Could the league, pending an international treaty concerning minorities, recommend its members to conclude special treaties for their protection?

Mr. Pusta then remarked that if the committee found satisfactory replies to these inquiries it might be able to prepare a standard treaty for protection of minorities; that no such treaty was in existence. He added that the Estonian Government had adhered to the recommendation adopted by the assembly on September 15, 1920, inviting the Baltic States on admission to the league to apply the principles of the minorities treaties; that the Estonian constitution, adopted in January, 1920, provided all necessary guaranties for the minorities in Estonia; that Doctor Nansen had said that Estonia had not yet made a declaration as to protection of minorities although she had undertaken to do so; that this question involved legislation and the sovereignty of Estonia; and that he asked Doctor Nansen to await the results of the negotiations in progress between the council and the Estonian representative.

THE POSITION OF THE LEAGUE

Mr. Trygger, Sweden, averred that the league should not ignore the great questions of the moment in order to take up secondary matters; that a committee of the league has presented interesting reports on the economic and financial condition of Europe, but no appeal had yet been made to the conscience and common sense of all the States of the world; that the nations could not always be regarded as victors, vanquished, or neutrals, but as nations more or less compelled to unite in order to save civilization and the prosperity of the world.

MINORITIES

Doctor Walters, Latvia, referred to Doctor Nansen's statement that Latvia had not yet made a declaration to the league concerning minorities, stating that negotiations were under way between the Latvian Government and the council; that meanwhile Latvia had granted to her minorities equal rights with her other nationals; that the president of the council had stated that in his opinion the provisions in force in Latvia corresponded in effect with the principles of the minorities treaties.

MESSAGE FROM CUBAN SENATE

The president read a communication from the president of the Senate of Cuba expressing the cordial good wishes of the Cuban Senate for the success of the league and the third assembly.

Eighth meeting, Saturday, September 9, 1922, 10 a. m.

FUTURE OF LEAGUE—FIRST WORLD NAVIGATORS

Count de Gemeno, Spain, expressed confidence in the league's future, saying that it was at present in embryo, but timed developing spirit of justice. No matter what might be said, he continued, the Washington and Geneva conferences had in no way injured the prestige of the league. He added that Spain had just celebrated the fourth centenary of her great navigator, Sebastian Elcano, who had been the first to sail round the world, having been accompanied during a part of the voyage by the Portuguese navigator Magellan; that since universal peace was the purpose of the league it should keep in mind these navigators who had shown it possible for all peoples on the globe to join together in friendship.

PORTUGAL'S REPLY

Mr. Teixeira Gomes, Portugal, expressed his thanks for the mention of his country and the work of Magellan.

MESSAGES TO SPAIN AND PORTUGAL

The president proposed that telegrams be sent from the assembly to the King of Spain and the President of the Portuguese Republic in honor of the two celebrated navigators who had been the first to sail round the world. Proposal adopted.

WORK OF COUNCIL—NATURE OF LEAGUE

Mr. Hymanes, Belgium, said that the criticisms of the council had been made in friendly spirit, that the council had been animated by a spirit of disinterestedness and mutual confidence, the manner in which the Silesian question had been settled being proof of this. Thanks to this spirit, he continued, and to the help of the high commissioner, negotiations between Danzig and Poland were resulting in a practical agreement. He said that tribute should be paid to the important part of the secretariat in the council's work, that the league had before it a large number of questions, such as health, public morality, economics, and finance, which served as a basis for political cooperation, that while some impatience was to be foreseen, the league could not remake the world and realize its ideal by a single stroke. He stated that the fundamental nature of the league must not be forgotten, that the council and the assembly were composed of the representatives of governments, that while they had a certain liberty of action they received instructions and when they voted committed their governments, that it was this fact which gave the league its authority, that the council could not deal with questions which their governments were discussing elsewhere, that in order to develop on useful lines and win practical results the league must be invited to discuss questions by governments themselves. He stated further that the league must gain the support of public opinion which ruled governments and would give the league a moral authority in place of material power, that the authors of the covenant had desired to create a new world, but it should be remembered that the peace which had been signed was not yet an accomplished fact, that the feeling of security was still lacking, and that as long as certain problems remained unsolved efforts for general peace would necessarily be slow. He added that if the league restored an independent Austria, a great task would be accomplished, that the Armenian problem which had disturbed the first assembly had not yet been settled, that this persecuted people had never lost courage, always hoping that a national home for them would be established, that it was to be hoped that the great powers, dealing with Asia Minor, would not forget the Armenian people but would fulfill their promises, that it was the duty of all to carry on propaganda in every country, that public opinion must be directed toward the attainment of an idea combining the national ideal of justice with the European ideal and the ideal of humanity.

AUSTRIA

Mr. de Oliveira, Brazil, said that his country desired to respond to the appeal for Austria, that one of the league's first duties was to help a member threatened with ruin, that a remedy must be found for a situation whose consequences affected not only Europe but the world.

WORK OF COUNCIL AND COOPERATION OF SERB-CROAT-SLOVENE STATE

Mr. Nintchinch, Serb-Croat-Slovene State, expressed appreciation of the council's work, stating that it had acted prudently on the question of minorities and wisely in the Albanian controversy; that mutual trust now existed between Albania and the Serb-Croat-Slovene State; that the government of these states, inspired by the spirit of the league, had endeavored to better its system of communication in order to assist international commerce; to increase its production, and reduce its expenditure, especially military expenditure.

WORK OF LEAGUE

Mr. Hanotaux, France, stressed the importance of the league's achievements, saying that on several occasions it had contributed to peace in questions extremely complex, referred to it by the powers and was displaying fruitful activity in many different spheres; that it was wisely administering the territories placed under its control in the Saar and Danzig; that its actions were the best answer to criticisms; that new tasks were intrusted to it daily, the latest being the relief of Austria; that it was henceforth clear that if the league were suppressed, nothing could be found to replace it. He asserted that the cause of the league's success lay in its methods and in its spirit; that these methods consisted in careful preparation, in collaboration by an experienced secretariat, in keeping always in view the principles of right and the ideal of a peaceful human race; that article 1 of the covenant deferred the spirit of the league in obligating its members to loyalty and sincerity; that public opinion should have confidence in the league and allow it time to carry on a work strongly conceived and efficiently begun.

PROGRESS OF LEAGUE

Mr. Askenazy, Poland, said that the report on the council's work showed the progress made by the league; that the settlement of the Silesian question had been a brilliant success and the same might be said of the conference at Warsaw, held under the league's auspices; that the league had begun an inquiry into the Russian situation; that Poland had the deepest sympathy with Russia, in whose economic reconstruction she was more interested than was any other nation. He stated that the league had generously devoted itself to the protection of minorities; that the object must be to create an atmosphere of peace in the countries concerned; that it was necessary therefore to avoid too frequent interventions from the outside, especially in the case of countries still young.

THE WORLD CRISIS AND THE LEAGUE—ACHIEVEMENTS OF LEAGUE

Mr. Jonkhier Loudon, Netherlands, said that the economic disturbance of the whole world caused anxiety to all governments, whether belligerent or neutral in the World War; that it was right, therefore, for the league to deal with the problem and that it had already done much; that the Brussels conference had borne results and that the economic and financial committee of the league was working continuously, but the league's means were limited; that it was for the governments themselves, by direct negotiation, to solve the vast financial problem, the greatest barrier in the way of universal restoration of prosperity. He said that although certain questions, such as interallied indebtedness and reparations, could not be handled by the league, still a great deal could be done by way of general reconstruction; that Austria had been convinced that the league desired to do everything possible for her assistance; that the league had several questions under consideration, to wit, reduction of armaments, lowering of economic barriers between nations, application of mandates; that the work of the past justified the fullest confidence in the future, but the league would not reach its full strength until it was universal.

TRIBUTE TO LEAGUE—MINORITIES—GREECE RELATIONS

Mr. Streit, Greece, praised the league's wisdom and impartiality, stressing the importance of Professor Murray's proposal as supplemented by the proposals of the delegates of Latvia and Estonia, which were supported by the delegate of Bulgaria. He said that Greece was especially interested in the question of minorities—that a considerable Greek population, native of the soil, existed in countries under Turkish rule; that Greece had given to racial and religious minorities within its territories civil and political equality and had the right to require similar guaranties for Greek minorities; that it was unnecessary to remind the assembly of the long persecutions of the Christian Greek, Armenian, and other nations of Asia Minor and Pontus; that the assembly had been moved by the noble utterances of Mr. Hymans regarding Armenia; that there was no nobler task than the protection of these unfortunate minorities and that it was to be hoped that the league would support with its high authority any effort through a treaty for their protection. He expressed the hope that the intervention of the council into Bulgaria's relations with her neighbors and the direct negotiations between the countries would result in settlement, thus avoiding resort to the League of Nations. As to Albania, he said the Greek delegation could only repeat its declaration of the year before of the sincere desire of Greece to see Albania develop prosperously, independently, peacefully; that in this spirit Greece was negotiating with the conference of ambassadors as to the delimitation of Albania's frontiers and had already appointed a representative for diplomatic relations with Albania; that he hoped the commission of inquiry of the league still in Albania would be instructed by the council and the secretariat to extend its investigations to northern Epirus.

ARMENIA—COMMUNICATION FROM LORD CECIL

The president announced a communication from Lord Cecil, expressing the desire, if events showed such a course desirable, that the assembly be invited at some future date to renew its interest in and sympathy for the Armenian Nation.

The assembly decided to submit this question to the committee on agenda for submission, if necessary, to the sixth committee.

CLOSE OF GENERAL DISCUSSION ON REPORT OF WORK OF COUNCIL

The president closed the general discussion on the report on the work of the council.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGENDA

The committee on agenda recommended that Professor Murray's proposal on minorities, of September 5, and the amendment thereto by Doctor Walters, of September 6; that Sir Arthur Steel-Maitland's resolution on slavery in Africa, of September 6; that Doctor Nansen's resolution regarding mandates, of September 7; and that Mr. Bellegarde's resolution regarding the Bondelzwart rebellion, of September 8, be added to the agenda of the assembly and sent to the sixth committee. Recommendation adopted.

ELECTION OF NONPERMANENT MEMBERS OF COUNCIL

Mr. Tang Tsai-Fou, China, proposed the following motion:

The committee on amendments to the covenant is requested to draw up, during its next session, draft rules of procedure for the election of the nonpermanent members of the council in order that the third assembly shall have well-defined rules for the election of the four nonpermanent members of the council for the year 1923.

Referred to committee on agenda.

The assembly did not meet again until Friday, September 15, in order to give opportunity for committee work.

Ninth meeting, Friday, September 15, 1922, 10 a. m.

MESSAGE FROM PRESIDENT OF BRAZIL

The president read a message from the President of Brazil thanking the assembly for its good wishes on the centenary of Brazil's independence.

GEORGIA

Mr. de Brouckere, Belgium, offered this resolution:

The assembly of the League of Nations, moved by the present unhappy position of Georgia, as a country invaded and occupied contrary to the wishes of its inhabitants, writes the council to follow attentively the course of events in that part of the world so that it may be able to seize any opportunity which may occur to help in the restoration of this country to normal conditions.

Referred to committee on agenda.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGENDA ON QUESTIONS SUBMITTED BY LITHUANIAN AND POLISH DELEGATIONS

Mr. Hymans, Belgium, presented the report of the special committee on the retention on the agenda of the third assembly of the new question submitted by the Lithuanian Government and on the previous question raised by the Polish delegation.

Report approved and the following resolution adopted:

The third assembly being requested by the Lithuanian Government to include in its agenda a new question drafted, as follows:

"Protest against arbitrary actions of the Polish Government in connection with the territory of Vilna subsequent to the council's recommendation of January 13, 1922";

In view of the letter of the Polish Government raising the previous question;

In view of the reply of the Lithuanian Government dated September 6, 1922;

Approves the report presented for the special committee by Mr. Hymans, delegate of Belgium;

Decides in consequence that the previous question should be adopted as regards the Lithuanian complaint brought against the statute of Vilna and the elections which the Polish Government proposed to hold in that district;

Maintained on the agenda the new question so far as it concerns abusive treatment alleged to have been inflicted on the Lithuanian population in the Vilna district;

And as it is not desirable that the discussion of the Lithuanian allegations should be raised at the assembly before the competent committee has had an opportunity of investigating them, proposes to refer the question, thus clearly defined, directly and without discussion, to the sixth committee of the assembly which is responsible for the investigation of political questions.

REPORT OF SECOND COMMITTEE ON WORK OF THE HEALTH ORGANIZATION

Mr. Chodzko, Poland, chairman, and Mr. Rivas-Vicuna, Chili, reporter, second committee, came to the platform and the latter read the first resolution presented by the committee to the assembly which was as follows:

1. The assembly notes with satisfaction:

(a) The assistance given by the health organization to the work of the health conference of Warsaw and notes also that the Genoa conference, having considered the Warsaw conference report in accordance with the request contained in the resolution of the council forwarded on April 3, approved the principles of the antiepidemic campaign adopted by the Warsaw conference and that in consequence of this resolution of the Genoa conference, transmitted to the health organization by resolution of the council, dated July 21, the health organization has been charged with the duty of carrying on the program outlined by the conference;

(b) That the health organization has been authorized by various countries to undertake the duties of mediation entrusted to it by certain bilateral sanitary conventions which have been concluded as the result of the Warsaw conference and that the council has approved the discharge of these duties;

(c) The cooperation established between the health organization and the other technical organizations of the League of Nations, notably the permanent advisory committee on opium, the transit commission, and the mandates commission;

(d) The assistance given by the health organization in the work preparatory to the revision of the international sanitary convention of 1912 and the realization of cooperation with the "office international d' hygiene publique" thus effected and the fact that the council has decided to place the organization at the disposal of the conference, which is shortly to be convened by the "office international d' hygiene publique";

(e) The cooperation effected by the health organization in experimental research concerning the standardization of sera and serological tests, the first results of which will be presented to a conference which will be convened at Geneva in the near future;

(f) The development of the activities of the health organization with regard to epidemiological intelligence, which should not be limited to problems of importance to only a limited number of countries;

(g) The initiative taken by the health organization with regard to the interchange of the sanitary personnel of various governments, which system it desires, should be made applicable to as large a number of countries as possible.

2. The assembly desires to express its appreciation to the Rockefeller Foundation for the financial assistance that has been offered to the health organization to assist in the development of certain of its activities.

3. The assembly considers that the health organization of the League of Nations is undertaking a task of permanent utility, and that it is indispensable that it should continue its activities.

The assembly considers that it may be possible before the meeting of the fourth assembly to prepare on the basis and on the principles adopted by the first assembly for the technical organizations of the league the constitution of a permanent health organization which will be submitted to the fourth assembly for approval. In such case this organization will undertake the duties laid down in the resolutions of the first and the second assembly. It may, if necessary function meanwhile within the limits of the budget and in anticipation of the above-mentioned approval of the fourth assembly. To this end the assembly authorizes the council to take advantage of such general conference as may be convoked, it being understood that all states members of the League of Nations shall be invited to send delegates thereto.

It also suggests to the council that an attempt be made at the forthcoming conferences to make such arrangements as may be necessary to avoid duplication.

Mr. Zumeta, Venezuela, said that in the opinion of the Venezuelan delegation the advisory and technical duties of the provisional health committee of the permanent health organization should be more precisely defined, that except in case of urgency and with the approval of the council its technical organs should not proceed to the execution of any plan except in conformity with a scheme previously submitted to the assembly for its approval.

Mr. Rivas-Vicuna, Chile, reporter for the committee, replied that the committee had considered the point raised by Mr. Zumeta and pointed out passages in the report which in his view met the situation.

Mr. Zumeta, Venezuela, accepted this explanation on behalf of his delegation.

The first resolution was adopted.

Mr. Rivas-Vicuna, Chile, read the second resolution, which was as follows:

The assembly expresses the opinion that the persistence of epidemics in eastern Europe still constitutes a serious danger to the world and prejudices the reestablishment of normal economic conditions in the countries affected by the epidemics and in the whole world.

The assembly notes that all the governments represented at the International Economic Conference of Genoa accepted the principles of the participation of all European States in the expenditure necessary for the antiepidemic campaign and agreed to intrust the direction of this campaign to the temporary epidemic commission.

The assembly has taken note of considerable financial effort made by the states contiguous to Russia in order to carry on the campaign in their own territories.

The assembly notes that in conformity with the Genoa resolution, the British Government has offered a contribution of £100,000 to the temporary epidemic commission, subject to the condition that the total contributions of other governments should equal a sum of not less than £200,000, and that the council has decided to acquaint the delegations of all members of the League of Nations present at the assembly with this offer, asking them, if possible before the end of the assembly, to make an announcement regarding the assistance which their respective governments will be ready to furnish. The assembly hopes that the members of the League of Nations will be able to respond at an early date.

The second resolution was adopted.

Mr. Rivos Vicuna, Chili, read the third resolution which was as follows:

The assembly notes that hitherto the temporary epidemic commission, of which the funds are provided entirely by voluntary contributions intended for the campaign against epidemics and freely granted by certain states, has undertaken a series of epidemiological inquiries and has established a closer cooperation with the technical administrations, necessary in view of the aim which it pursues; but that its activities have been made use of by the health organization for its own requirements; and

Whereas, under these circumstances, it does not seem equitable that the cost of the work, in which all the states are interested, should be borne only by certain states, and this expenditure should rather be provided for under the ordinary budget of the league; and

Whereas, it is not admissible that these sums should be paid out of the contributions made by certain states for the clear and well-defined purpose of the campaign against epidemics properly so-called; and

Whereas, the effective continuation of this work and regard for its best results, from the economic point of view, renders it desirable that the temporary epidemic commission should continue to be entrusted with it:

Decides that the sum of ——— francs shall be included in the budget of the health organization as a contribution to the temporary epidemic commission.

Colonel John Ward, British Empire, said it was suggested that 125,000 Swiss francs should be voted for the purpose of handling epidemics, that he had insisted, with a majority of the committee, that the word "temporary" should be placed before "epidemic commission" to show clearly that this sum was to be a temporary and not a permanent charge.

This resolution, the third presented by the second committee, is referred to the fourth committee.

The president announced that he had received the report of the committee on agenda on the proposal of Mr. Tsai-Fou, China, of September 9, regarding the election of nonpermanent members of the council. The report recommended that the proposal should be placed on the agenda and referred to the first committee. Report adopted.

Tenth meeting, Monday, September 18, 1922, 11 a. m.

PROPOSED CHANGES ON PROCEDURE

The Spanish delegation proposed, through the president, changes in procedure allowing greater latitude as to the time of electing vice presidents and including a report on the work of the secretariat in the report on the work of the council. Referred to committee on agenda.

STATUS OF EASTERN GALICIA

The Canadian delegation proposed, through the president, a resolution renewing the action of the second assembly in requesting the council to draw the attention of the principal allied and associated powers to the desirability of determining at an early date the status of eastern Galicia. Referred to committee on agenda.

ADMISSION OF HUNGARY

Mr. Loudon, Netherlands, read a report from the sixth committee unanimously favoring the admission of Hungary to the League of Nations.

Mr. Osusky, Czechoslovakia, said he deemed it his duty in the name of the Czechoslovak, Rumanian, and Serb-Croat-Slovene delegations to call attention to certain facts, that in reality compulsory military service had not been abolished in Hungary, as was proved by articles in the Hungarian press and by a decree of the Ministry for National Defense; that the allied military commission at Versailles had stated that a number of measures had still to be taken to insure the material disarmament of Hungary; and that certain facts proved that equality of civil and political rights was not yet assured to all citizens. Nevertheless, he continued, the Czechoslovakian, Rumanian, and Serb-Croat-Slovene delegations recommended the admission of Hungary to the league in view of the solemn promise of Count Banffy that the Hungarian National Assembly would ratify as soon as possible the obligations assumed by Hungary to the league.

A roll-call vote was taken and Hungary unanimously admitted.

In the assembly's name the president congratulated Hungary on her admission, and invited the Hungarian delegation to submit their credentials and take seats in the assembly.

TRAFFIC IN OPIUM

Mr. Fielding, Canada, chairman, and Mademoiselle Bonnevie, Norway, reporter, fifth committee, came to the platform.

Mademoiselle Bonnevie presented the report of the fifth committee and read the following resolutions:

1. The assembly, being convinced that the most practical means of exercising control over the traffic in dangerous drugs is by means of the important export-certificate system, and believing that only international action can make this system a success, urges on all governments the vital necessity of adopting this import and export certificate system without delay.

2. The committee on traffic in opium inclines to the view that the governments which are parties to the international opium convention should be asked to agree not to issue licenses for the import of opium or the other drugs to which the convention applies from any country which has not yet ratified and put into force the convention and adopted the system for the control of exports and imports approved by the assembly in paragraph 1 (3) of the resolution adopted on September 30, 1921, and previously approved by the council on June 28, 1921. The committee considers this question important and urgent, but recognizing the complicated and technical character of issues involved, it is of opinion that the matter should be examined in detail by the advisory committee of the league on traffic in opium before any definite action is taken. It, therefore, recommends that the assembly should request the council to convene a meeting of the opium advisory committee, as soon as possible, to study the question and should that committee report in favor of the proposal that the council should be asked to act on the recommendations of the advisory committee in the form approved by the council, at the earliest possible date, and without further reference to the assembly of the council considers such reference unnecessary.

3. The assembly being of the opinion that the first steps necessary in limiting the world's supply of dangerous drugs to legitimate use is a knowledge of the amount of drugs required by each country for internal consumption, urges the governments to supply the returns asked for with the least possible delay and with the greatest accuracy in their power. The various governments should, with a view to allowing comparisons to be made, state clearly the system adopted in arriving at the estimate and should supply a secondary statement showing estimated consumption per 100,000 inhabitants.

4. The assembly of the League of Nations again desires to emphasize the view expressed in the report of the advisory committee that as long as the drugs to which part 3, particularly article 9, of the opium convention applies, are produced in quantities exceeding the legitimate requirements, there is a great danger that the surplus will find its way into illegitimate channels, and that the control of production, so as to limit it to the amount required for medical and legitimate purposes, is the most effective method of putting a stop to the illicit trade. It recommends that the inquiry, now proceeding into the world's legitimate requirements, should be pressed forward as rapidly as possible, expresses the hope that a provisional estimate and scheme will be submitted to the assembly next year.

5. The assembly, convinced of the urgent necessity of securing the fullest possible cooperation in the work of the advisory committee on traffic in opium and other dangerous drugs and considering the fact that the United States of America is one of the most important manufacturing and importing countries, recommends to the council of the league that it should address a pressing invitation to the Government of the United States to nominate a member to serve on the committee.

Mlle. Bonnevie, discussing the resolutions, insisted on the necessity for international cooperation, stating that the system of import and export certificates approved in the previous year by the assembly depended entirely on its universal adoption; that it had been adopted by a third of the members of the league; that even if January 1, 1923, should be set for the inauguration of the system difficulties would arise because certain states had not adhered to the opium convention. She said that the health committee was endeavoring to ascertain the medical needs for morphia and other drugs; that in the degree that the legitimate needs remained undefined illicit traffic would always be possible, and that it was necessary to have the cooperation of all countries.

Viscount Chelmsford, India, praised the good will and desire for cooperation shown by the assembly, asserting that the league had done its best to solve the problem of the traffic in opium and other dangerous drugs in conformity with the covenant, and that the advisory committee on the traffic in opium had done admirable work, but that unhappily has been disappointment in the matter of putting the resolutions into force. He said that the Hague convention had not been ratified or even signed by a great number of states, and that a great number of states had not adopted the system of import and export certificates. He added that the committee thought the second resolution should be referred to the advisory committee on the traffic in opium, and that if the advisory committee was favorable the council might carry out the proposals without reference to the assembly.

The assembly postponed further discussion of the report of the fifth committee.

FIRST DELEGATE FROM HUNGARY

Mr. Agnero y Bethancourt, Cuba, reporter for credentials committee, announced that the credentials of the first delegate from Hungary, Count Banffy, had been found in order. The assembly invited Count Banffy to take his seat.

GREEK AND ARMENIAN REFUGEES IN CONSTANTINOPLE PROPOSE INTERVENTION IN WAR BETWEEN GREECE AND TURKEY

The president read a communication to him from Doctor Nansen requesting that he be allowed to lay before the assembly the matter of permission to utilize the organization of the high commissariat in Constantinople for administration of relief to many thousands of Greek and Armenian refugees arriving, as he had been advised by wire, from Smyrna and Broussa. Doctor Nansen stated further that he would ask the assembly whether the league ought now, under article 11 of the covenant, take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations in the conflict which had caused so grave a situation, and asked permission in this communication to move a resolution, if it should seem right to do so, requesting the council to consider promptly what steps it could take by offer of its good offices to the belligerent parties or otherwise with a view to the immediate cessation of hostilities.

The president suggested that the first proposal be immediately put on the agenda and referred to the sixth committee and that the second, regarding intervention by the council in the conflict between Greece and Turkey, be referred to the committee on agenda with the request for a report at the earliest possible moment.

The president's suggestions were adopted.

NATIONAL HOME FOR ARMENIANS

The president announced that he had received from Lord Cecil, delegate for South Africa, the following proposal:

The assembly notes with gratitude the action taken by the council with respect to Armenia and declares that it is of the opinion that in any peace with Turkey it should be an essential condition that a national home should be provided for the Armenians and requests the council to take all steps which it may think useful to secure this result.

Referred to committee on agenda.

The committee on agenda recommended that the resolution of Mr. Brouckere, Belgium, of September 15, regarding Georgia be put on the agenda and referred to the sixth committee. Recommendation adopted.

Mr. da Gama, Brazil, suggested that the assembly express its good feeling for Chile, which was celebrating the anniversary of its independence. Suggestion adopted.

Mr. Rivas-Vicuna, Chile, thanked the Brazilian delegation and the assembly.

Eleventh meeting, Tuesday, September 19, 1922, 10.30 a. m.

COMMUNICATION FROM HUNGARIAN DELEGATE

The president presented a letter he had received from Count Banffy, the Hungarian delegate, stating that he had never been given an opportunity to clear up the matters mentioned by Mr. Osusky in his address to the assembly regarding Hungary.

CONTINUED DISCUSSION OF REPORT ON OPIUM TRAFFIC

Mr. Fielding, Canada, chairman, and Mlle. Bonneirè, Norway, reporter, fifth committee, took their places on the platform.

Mr. Chao-Hsin Chu, China, said that China would do everything possible to carry out the Hague convention, but that certain colonies in her neighborhood had established monopolies for the sale of opium and that certain opium-producing countries had not yet limited their output. He told the assembly that China had suffered especially from the introduction of morphia since the Anglo-Chinese agreement of 1907 had ended; that he hoped the assembly would adopt the recommendation that the powers signatory to the Hague convention should scrupulously respect article 9 of the convention; that it was the request of the Chinese Government to producers of dangerous drugs not to send them to countries where they might go into China as contraband; that a system of import and export certificates would restrict illicit traffic and that the reply of the governments to the questionnaire would facilitate the task of the advisory committee.

The Maharajah Jam Saheb, of Nawanagor, India, said that certain misconceptions were general in regard to opium; that it was believed that India and China were great producers of opium; that western public opinion saw nothing beyond opium profits and opium dens. It was important to realize, he continued, that in certain eastern countries, including India, outside the regular scientific, medical use of opium there was a legitimate and popular use of it as medicine and use similar to that of coffee, beer, and wine in Europe. He asserted that the consumption per head in India was inconsiderable, and his people did not understand why they should be asked to make the demanded sacrifice; that state regulation has cost the Government of India about £40,000,000 in the last 10 years, the loss to producers being about £120,000,000; that the total consumption of opium in India was 2 grams per head per annum, including the amount used for veterinary purposes. He stated that India applauded the policy of national and international regulation, but that it was necessary that the Indian people be assured that the regulations were just and essential.

Sir Arthur Steel-Maitland, New Zealand, said that the cooperation of all countries was essential in the campaign against opium, morphia, and cocaine; that if quantities necessary for legitimate purposes were not ascertained and if production were not limited it would be impossible for the advisory committee on the traffic in opium to make successful headway.

Lieutenant Colonel Ward, British Empire, said it was necessary to clear British administration in the colony nearest China from certain intimations which had been uttered; that these authorities were trying with great energy to suppress the opium traffic; that the observations of the Maharajah of Nawanagor were practical and worthy of attention; that opium gave rise to abuses as did alcohol in Europe. He stated that he was not opposed to the resolutions of the fifth committee if they were intended to suppress the abuse, but that the league must not lose sight of the great problems confronting it.

The resolutions of the fifth committee on the opium traffic were adopted.

GREEK AND ARMENIAN REFUGEES AT CONSTANTINOPLE

Mr. Aguero y Bethancourt, Cuba, presented the following resolution from the fifth committee on the proposal of Doctor Nansen in reference to Greek and Armenian refugees at Constantinople:

The assembly, having heard Doctor Nansen's statement regarding the critical situation of more than 200,000 refugees from Asia Minor and his offer of the services of his Russian refugee organization for administration of any funds contributed for the benefit of the refugees;

And considering that this is a work which demands immediate action by the league—

Recommends that the high commissioner of the league be authorized to utilize the services of the Russian refugee organization for assisting in the relief of refugees from the Near East and for the handling of the money collected for this purpose, it being understood that the league undertakes no responsibility for these refugees, that the work for Russian refugees shall continue without hindrance, and that this additional activity be considered of a temporary nature;

And recognizing the urgency of providing an adequate administrative organization for these refugees;

Invites the council to consider whether it can not place at the disposal of Doctor Nansen from the item of "Unforeseen expenditures" a sum sufficient to enable the necessary administrative measures to be taken for a period which will allow for adequate arrangements to be made from other sources.

Mr. Aguero y Bethancourt, Cuba, explained that Doctor Nansen had appeared before the committee, offered the services of his organization at Constantinople, and that the Greek delegate had also made an appeal to the committee.

Doctor Nansen said that if the council granted the necessary administrative funds it would afterwards be necessary to raise a considerable amount; that for this purpose he appealed to all nations, on behalf of 200,000 victims in need of assistance, that it was necessary that the governments and the League of Nations unite their efforts.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

MANDATES

Doctor Nansen, Norway, reported the recommendations of the sixth committee on mandates, saying that the league might be assured that the new machinery for dealing with the mandates was already working, and apparently working smoothly. To the mandatory powers and the mandates commission he extended thanks for the way in which they had fulfilled their obligations. He pointed out that the sixth committee in their report on mandates had noted with satisfaction the intention of the mandates commission to investigate further the question of indentured labor in the Pacific islands, to examine further the laws of land tenure in mandated territories, and the status of liquor legislation and the importation of alcoholic liquors in Africa. He stated that the committee had made reference to the social, economic, and political effects of the Ruande frontier, and commended to the assembly's attention the committee's reference to the mandate for the Naura Islands.

He said that the committee recommended the adoption of the motion of September 8 by Mr. Bellegarde, Haiti, in regard to the Bondelzwart rebellion.

He stated that the committee had agreed on the following conclusions as to petitions from mandated territories:

The committee, having considered the matter of the right of petition alluded to in the report of the permanent mandates commission, expresses the hope that this right may be defined in such a manner that—

1. All petitions emanating from inhabitants of mandated areas should be sent to the permanent mandates commission through the intermediary of the local administration and of the mandatory power;

2. All petitions concerning the welfare of the inhabitants of mandated areas emanating from other sources should not be considered by the permanent mandates commission before the mandatory power had had full opportunity of expressing its views.

Madame Anna Bugge-Wicksell, Sweden, extended thanks to the sixth committee for the appreciation it had expressed for the mandates commission of which she was a member. She said that the commission regarded it as a duty to safeguard the interests of men and women incapable of defending themselves and with little knowledge of modern ways and methods; that it had to examine the decrees and ordinances of various administrations and to ascertain that they were well and justly applied; that the committee knew the extreme delicacy of its task; and that the mandatory powers, when noting the observations of the commission, should consider the difficulties of the commission in carrying out duties entirely without precedent.

Sir Francis Bell, New Zealand, said in presenting a written statement to the assembly, that the Government of New Zealand felt it had a dual obligation and duty, first, as a member of the league, second, as a mandatory power. The written statement was to the effect that New Zealand was under an honorable obligation to legislate and administer according to the terms and intent of the league covenant; that she was bound to report annually to the council; that she was willing and anxious to receive suggestions and advice from either the permanent mandates commission or the council of the league, but could not admit that the permanent mandates commission had power to interpret for her the meaning of the covenant or to dictate to her the procedure she should adopt in her endeavors to perform her duties to the league.

He then said that the report of the mandates commission should be a report to the council, not the public; that New Zealand did not desire opinions upon her laws or her administration except from the council or the assembly. He said that when the assembly referred a report from the mandates commission to one of its committees the delegates of the mandatory power had a right to require that the committee should inquire into, and report to the assembly upon, any objection offered by the mandatory to the language or the findings of the report; that the mandatory should have the right to appeal from adverse comment and to merit a decision from the assembly; that the mandatory could not be asked to alter its administration or repeal or amend its legislation until its fellow members of the league had decided that in their opinion the comment or criticism made concerning its administration or legislation was justified.

Continued discussion of mandates was adjourned to the next meeting of the assembly.

COMMITTEE ON AGENDA

The president announced that the committee on agenda had decided to refer to the first committee the Spanish delegation's proposals of September 18 in regard to articles 4 and 7 of Rules of Procedure; to refer to the sixth committee Lord Cecil's proposal of September 18 regarding a national home for Armenians; to refer to the sixth committee the Canadian delegation's proposal of September 18 relating to the status of Eastern Galicia.

These references were approved by the assembly.

REPATRIATION OF PRISONERS OF WAR

The assembly decided to place on the agenda and to discuss on Wednesday, September 20, Doctor Nansen's report on the conclusion of the work of repatriating prisoners of war.

INQUIRY INTO ATROCITIES IN NEAR EAST—PROPOSAL OF PERSIAN DELEGATION

The president announced receipt of a communication from the Persian delegation of the assembly to the effect that the delegation of the national assembly of Turkey in Rome had asked Persia, as the only state of the Mohammedan world represented in the assembly, to urge that the League of Nations organize an impartial inquiry on the atrocities committed during the present war, and that the Persian delegation begged to submit the following resolution:

The assembly, moved by the pitiful events in the Near East and the accusations which each belligerent had made against the other concerning the treatment of the civil population, invites the council to send at once a neutral commission of inquiry to throw light on these occurrences and to avoid reprisals against the ethnical or religious minorities of Thrace and of Asia Minor.

Twelfth meeting, Wednesday, September 20, 10.30 a. m.

BUILDING SITE FOR INTERNATIONAL LABOR OFFICE

The president announced receipt of letter from the Swiss delegation offering, first, an estate adjacent to the Hotel National of 4,493 square meters; second, an estate on the shores of the lake in the Rue de Lausanne of 38,843 square meters, as a site for the international labor office.

The assembly decided that it would note the generous offer of the Swiss delegation and referred it to the fourth committee.

HOSTILITIES IN NEAR EAST AND DOCTOR NANSEN'S PROPOSAL

The president stated that the committee on agenda had decided that Doctor Nansen's proposal of September 18 that the council be invited to examine the possibility of taking steps with a view to securing immediate cessation of hostilities in the Near East should be placed on the agenda of the assembly and referred to the sixth committee. Action of committee on agenda approved.

RENEWAL OF DISCUSSION OF REPORT OF SIXTH COMMITTEE ON MANDATES

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer, India, supported the conclusions of the report of the sixth committee on mandates, thanking the permanent mandates commission for their solicitude for native inhabitants of mandated territories. He spoke of the dangers inherent in the system of indentured labor, saying that the Indian Government's experience had shown the dangers of the immigration of an exclusively male laboring population and that it had always tried to secure due proportion between the sexes. He contended that the question of land tenure was also important; that there was a tendency to assume that native rights which could not be proved under the principles of modern law might be ignored. He said that he was glad that the permanent mandates commission had decided to study the question, that he considered dangerous the French doctrine embodied in the phrase, "Private domain of the state." He stated that he wished there had been a more pronounced indorsement of the references of the permanent mandates commission to the partition of Ruanda; that he would like to have asked the council to express the hope that this boundary would be rectified. He referred to the speech of Sir Francis Bell on the day before and said that he saw no tendency on the part of the permanent mandates commission to invade the prerogatives of the council or to depart from its proper sphere. He stated that it was unfortunate that the South African Government had not afforded the permanent mandates commission the same assistance as had the Governments of Australia, New Zealand, and Japan; that he inferred from recent utterances of General Smuts that the responsible statesmen of South Africa might possibly have some misconception of their obligations; that General Smuts had said that the territories under C mandates were virtually annexed to the territory of the mandatory. He stated further that the mandatory powers had a very serious responsibility; that a great experiment was being made for the first time in history; that hitherto native populations had suffered from contact with white civilizations, contact leading in southwest Africa to the virtual destruction of a native race; that it was the league's duty to see that in future the welfare of the native races should be promoted.

Mr. Bellegarde, Haiti, praised the loyalty shown by the Government and the delegation of South Africa in the affair of the Bondelzwart rebellion, stressing the importance of the right of petition which he called the strongest guaranty the League of Nations could offer the peoples living under mandate. He referred to the fact that the sixth committee had expressed the hope that all petitions would be addressed to the mandatory power, and said that it was necessary to find a more direct method of dealing with petitions, that governments, despite good intentions, might face debate situations. He said further that the question would be brought before the council, that the best way of avoiding injustice under the league would be to allow full liberty for complaints to the permanent mandates commission; that this would not prevent complainants from first addressing themselves to the mandatory power.

Sir James Allen, New Zealand, replying to the Indian delegate, said that the New Zealand Government was extremely solicitous for the welfare of the natives; that the labor problem was difficult; that the New Zealand Government, in order to maintain the island of Samoa in cultivation, had been compelled to arrange for labor from China; that it had wished the Chinese laborers to bring their wives, but had been assured that it could not be guaranteed that women desiring to come were married to the laborers; that his Government was anxious to avoid any mixture of the races; that labor contracts ran only three years and there was no time for laborers to form associations with Samoan women; that the importation of such labor was absolutely necessary because the natives themselves would not work. He would ask the council, he continued, to consider the wisdom of public meetings of the permanent mandates commission before the commission sent its report to the council, and he again stressed the danger of allowing petitions to come direct to the commission without having been seen by the mandatory powers, saying that unfortunately the natives were frequently under the influence of agitators.

Sir Edgar Walton, South Africa, said it was unfortunate that the mandatory system should be debated at that meeting of the assembly; that the mandatory powers had undertaken a very difficult task at much trouble and expense; that they should have sympathy rather than criticism; that he was surprised at the solicitude of the Indian delegate for the population of South West Africa; that he would point out that there were no Indians in South West Africa. He said that the South African Government confronted a very complicated situation on account of the extremely mixed character of the population of the territory over which it had a mandate, regretting that his government had not been represented before the permanent mandates commission. He said that the administrator of South West Africa had been conducting military operations during six months of the year, however, and that no one else had sufficient knowledge or authority to give the permanent mandates commission any useful information. As to the reference to the statement of General Smuts that the C mandates meant virtual annexation, he said this was true as far as their administration was concerned, inasmuch as the natives had been put under the same laws and had the same rights as the rest of the South African population.

Lord Cecil, delegate for South Africa, joined in the praise accorded the permanent mandates commission, saying in reply to Sir James Allen on publicity that on the whole its advantages outweighed its disadvantages. As to petitions, he agreed that the greatest care must be taken not to hamper the mandatory powers; contending, however, that there was no better safeguard against oppression or misgovernment than publicity, and suggesting that petitions might be sent simultaneously to the permanent mandates commission and the mandatory powers with the understanding that the former would not consider them until it had received the observations of the latter. As to the reference of the Indian delegate to General Smuts, he said that General Smuts was the author of the covenant and of the mandatory system; that it was a fantastic paradox to suggest that he could possibly misconceive that system or desire to do anything antagonistic to its success; that the absence of a South African representative from the recent session of the permanent mandates commission was due to administrative difficulties and not to any wish to avoid criticism or investigation; that the statement of General Smuts needed no defense when understood. He said further that criticism should not be resented, that criticism and debate were necessary to make the mandatory system a reality, that they were the best sanction for good administration, that the present debate showed that the system was not a mere deception, and also showed that a real step forward for humanity had been taken.

Hon. G. E. Rich, Australia, said that the phosphate monopoly in the island of Nauru had been acquired from the Pacific Phosphate Co. through voluntary sale; that the administration had continued to employ Chinese laborers, but in decreasing numbers, and that it was hoped they could be dispensed with entirely in the near future.

Sir Joseph Cook, Australia, said that the permanent mandates commission had made preliminary criticisms of the administration of the mandatories which were considered rather severe, criticisms due to the fact that the commission did not know all the circumstances; that when they were placed before the commission it had accepted them without hesitation; that the mandatory powers welcomed the fullest investigation, since criticism came mostly from those who did not understand the difficulties surrounding the system. He said that no criticism had been made of the administration of New Guinea; that the excellent system of medical hygiene introduced there had been warmly commended by the commission; that the introduction of Chinese labor into Nauru occurred because the natives could not be induced to labor in the mines; that under the new régime full compensation was given the natives for their land and the natives were excellently treated; that it was not desired to take the right of petition from the natives but it was essential their real opinion should be ascertained, not the opinion of agitators with ulterior purposes. He added that every effort was being made by Australia to administer these islands in the true spirit of trusteeship, with the interests of the natives always and primarily in view.

The president stated that the sixth committee's report invited the assembly to note certain recommendations and observations regarding the administration of the mandates generally, and the Pacific islands and the African territories particularly.

He invited the assembly to note the declaration of Hon. G. E. Rich, Australia.

The assembly made these notations.

The assembly then adopted the resolution offered by Mr. Bellegarde on September 8 in reference to the Bondelzwart rebellion.

It also adopted the conclusions of the sixth committee regarding petitions by peoples of mandated areas, which were as follows:

1. All petitions emanating from inhabitants of mandated areas should be sent to the permanent mandates commission through the intermediary of the local administration and of the mandatory power;
2. All petitions concerning the welfare of the inhabitants of mandated areas emanating from other sources should not be considered by the permanent mandates commission before the mandatory power has had full opportunity of expressing its views.

The president announced that the committee on agenda reported that the Persian delegation's proposal that the assembly invite the council to send a commission of inquiry to the Near East be placed on the agenda and referred to the sixth committee.

This report was adopted.

The president then read a letter from the Greek delegation in reference to this proposal, expressing certain reservations. The letter was referred to the sixth committee.

Thirteenth meeting, Thursday, September 21, 1922, 10 a. m.

SLAVERY IN AFRICA

Jonkheer London, Netherlands, Doctor Nansen, Norway, chairman and reporter, sixth committee, took seats on platform.

Doctor Nansen presented a resolution that the question of the recrudescence of slavery in Africa be included in the agenda of the fourth assembly, and that the council be requested to present to that assembly a report on the information received on this subject.

Resolution adopted.

PROTECTION OF MINORITIES

Mr. Motta, Switzerland, reporting for the sixth committee, presented its report on protection of minorities.

In explanation of the report he said that the proposal of Prof. Gilbert Murray, South Africa, parts of which had been incorporated in the resolutions of the committee, was based on five principles: (1) Informal intervention of council; (2) resort in certain cases to Permanent Court of International Justice; (3) despatch in other cases of permanent or temporary representatives of the league; (4) duty of minorities to act as loyal citizens of the states to which they belonged; (5) observation by all states toward their minorities of a standard of justice at least equal to that of the minorities' treaties. He said that the committee could not agree to the despatch of permanent or temporary representatives of the league or to proposal of Latvia or Finland for an international codification of the rights of minorities. It did recommend, he said, on the other hand, that the secretariat assist the council in its work of protection and furnish it with the means of ascertaining impartially how the minorities fulfilled their obligations. He added that the resolution proposed by the committee indicated a distinct advance; that, although the covenant contained no explicit article on the subject of the League of Nations, as a guardian of the peace, intervened in the question of minorities and that this was becoming one of its essential tasks; that when a dispute could not otherwise be regulated, the Permanent Court of International Justice would find a just solution; that these proposals signalized the advent of a new era.

The Maharaja Jaur Sahib, of Nawanagar, India, referred to Professor Murray's recent address affirming the necessity of spreading general contentment with the new distribution of Europe, and said that there were minorities questions outside of Europe, namely, insistent and irritating minority questions in Africa, especially the case of the Indian population under the South African Government. He appealed to the South African delegates to influence their government toward a satisfactory settlement of this question, saying that it caused discontent not only in South Africa but all over India, and expressed the hope that next year he could thank the Great Britain and South African representatives for having brought satisfaction to the just aspirations of the Indians of South Africa and Kenya Colony.

Professor Murray said in reply that it was true that minorities questions existed outside Europe; that the standard of justice in the east and the west was different, but that the time was not opportune to go into a particular case. He said that the position of the South African Government was very difficult; that it was dealing with several races in different stages of civilization and with different traditions. He said further that the case of the Indians in South Africa was covered in principle by the fourth paragraph (quoted later) of the committee resolution, in which countries not bound by the minorities treaties were asked to observe the same standards in dealing with minorities as the states signing such treaties; that Great Britain was actuated by such a spirit and had accepted the principle. He stated that the committee resolution represented a friendly attitude by the league toward all concerned; that the minorities discussion marked progress in international relations. Mr. Bellegorde, of Haiti, in the case of mandates, and Mr. Aeyer, of India, in the case of minorities, having criticized the work of a great empire without resentment from its representatives, who had shown no desire to avoid the issue, an unparalleled situation. He pointed out that the states signing the minorities treaties had naturally felt the unfairness of incurring obligations not imposed on other members of the league; that all members had accordingly been asked to adopt the spirit of these obligations, and that minorities were urged to be loyal to the states of which they were a part. The committee's resolution did not contemplate further encroachments, he continued, on the sovereignty of governments, but better relations between majorities and minorities all over the world, and a unity of outlook and patriotism in all countries with minorities problems.

Mr. Midhat Prasheri, Albania, said that it was due to the League of Nations that the rights of minorities had acquired a capital importance in international public law; that the treaties of peace and the declarations of the new states had created a positive right which should be given strength and precision; that different kinds of procedure would be necessary; that when the council failed to conciliate informally it would be able to pronounce formal decision, from which an appeal could be made, but that certain periods should be fixed by the council within which appeal might be made to the Permanent Court of International Justice. He stated that the minorities section of the secretariat should be so organized as to give the council all necessary information; that a staff should be created, with the consent of states concerned, which could ascertain on the spot the real situation. He contended that the right of minorities to such procedure be formally recognized, and that if they did not secure justice from legal authorities it would be the duty of the commission of inquiry and the council to do what was necessary. As to sanctions, he held that considerable latitude should be left the council, which should be permitted to apply measures appropriate under the circumstances. He stated that the object of his observations was to consolidate peace in the Balkans; that on account of the homogeneousness of race and language the force of national sentiment and the liberty which existed for different religions Albania had no minority problem.

Count Banffy, Hungary, said that Hungary's approval of the committee's action was all the more pronounced because important Hungarian minorities existed in adjacent states; that Hungary had already suggested at the Genoa conference that the league be invited to send commissions of control into countries signing minorities treaties; that this problem had become a European problem and was of the highest importance to world peace; that Hungary had determined to work in a spirit of conciliation with the other members of the league.

Mr. Hanotaux, France, stated that the league found itself between two parties in minorities questions; that it was constrained sometimes to favor the governments and at other times to favor minorities, in order to counsel prudence and moderation in each; that minorities had always existed, but theretofore had presented questions of internal policy, as Europe had for centuries tended toward the evolvement of states as strong units that to-day the endeavor was to bring diverse elements together on a different principle, which Professor Murray's proposal would facilitate. However, he continued, the committee felt that the dispatch of permanent or temporary representatives was objectionable, and that on this point as much as possible should be left to the experience and authority of the council. He added that a system had thus been founded which had already produced good results, and would work better in the future.

The assembly adopted the committee resolution on the minorities question which was in five paragraphs and composed as follows:

1. While in cases of grave infraction of the minorities treaties it is necessary that the council should retain its full power of direct action the assembly recognizes that in ordinary circumstances the league can best promote good relations between the various signatory governments and persons belonging to racial, religious, or linguistic minorities placed under their sovereignty by benevolent and informal communications with those governments. For this purpose the assembly suggests that the council might require to have a larger secretarial staff at its disposal.

2. In case of difference of opinion as to questions of law or fact arising out of the provisions of the minorities treaties, between the government concerned and one of the states members of the council of the League of Nations, the assembly recommends that the members of the council appeal without unnecessary delay to the Permanent Court of International Justice for a decision in accordance with the minorities treaties, it being understood that the other methods of conciliation provided for by the covenant may always be employed.

3. While the assembly recognizes the primary right of the minorities to be protected by the league from oppression it also emphasizes the duty incumbent upon persons belonging to racial, religious, or linguistic minorities to cooperate as loyal fellow citizens with the nations to which they now belong.

4. The assembly expressed the hope that the states which are not bound by any legal obligations to the league, with respect to minorities, will nevertheless observe in the treatment of their own racial, religious, or linguistic minorities at least as high a standard of justice and toleration as is required by any of the treaties and by the regular action of the council.

5. The secretariat which has the duty of collecting information concerning the manner in which the minorities treaties are carried out should not only assist the council in the study of complaints concerning infractions of these treaties but should also assist the council in ascertaining in what manner the persons belonging to racial, linguistic, or religious minorities fulfill their duties toward their states. The information thus collected might be placed at the disposal of the states, members of the League of Nations, if they so desire.

ESPERANTO AS AN AUXILIARY INTERNATIONAL LANGUAGE; REPORT OF FIFTH COMMITTEE

Mr. Fielding, Canada, and Mr. Reynald, France, reporters, for fifth committee, took seats on platform.

Mr. Reynold read the fifth committee's report on Esperanto as an auxiliary international language, the report concluding with the following resolution, which the committee submitted for action:

1. That the report of the secretariat on Esperanto as an auxiliary international language be adopted subject to the following amendments:

(a) That the corrections communicated by the British delegation be made and that Chapter V of the report be omitted.

(b) That an annex be added to the report, consisting of the whole of the brief and impartial report made by the Paris Chamber of Commerce on February 9, 1921, of which certain passages only have been quoted.

(c) That the resolutions adopted by the committee be annexed to the report.

2. That questions relating to the teaching of Esperanto be referred to the committee on intellectual cooperation in order that the committee may give its opinion on the various aspects of the problem of an auxiliary international language.

Mr. Fielding, Canada, observed that the second part of the resolution had been objected to and a request made for a separate vote on the two parts.

Lord Robert Cecil, delegate for South Africa, expressed his approval of the report, especially the reference to the committee on intellectual cooperation, saying that it was this committee's duty to bring the intellectual activities of every nation into interrelation.

The first part of the resolution (1 (a), (b), (c)) was unanimously carried, the second by a vote of 26 to 2.

LITHUANIA'S COMPLAINT REGARDING TREATMENT OF NON-POLISH ELEMENTS IN VILNA

Jonkheer Loudon, Netherlands, Mr. Motta, reporter, sixth committee, appeared on the platform and presented that committee's report on Lithuania's complaint regarding non-Polish elements in Vilna, with the following resolution:

The assembly of the League of Nations, in virtue of its resolution of September 15, 1922;

Having heard the complaints of the Lithuanian Government relating to the treatment of non-Polish populations in the Vilna district;

And having also heard the replies of the Polish delegate to these accusations;

In view of the fact that the questions thus raised are among those with which the council, after having drawn up its final recommendation for the settlement of the Polish-Lithuanian dispute, reserved to itself, by its resolution of January 13, 1922, the right to deal, if necessary, by requesting the two governments to allow it to send representatives to the spot for the purpose of making a report.

In view of the fact that the council has already made use of the powers which it thus reserved to itself and that its intervention in this matter is in conformity with its general activities in regard to the protection of minorities:

Refers to the council for its special consideration the question which has been submitted to it by the Lithuanian Government.

Mr. Motta, Switzerland, said that the league had not to deal with the political status of Vilna, since its recommendations had been without result, but confined itself to the formal complaint of Lithuania that the administration of Vilna was not finally established, and the complaint could be dealt with by the assembly; that the complaint did not involve the question of minorities which under the treaties belonged to the council, which had reserved to itself the right to follow questions concerning the territory of Vilna from the standpoint of the protection of minorities. He declared that it had not been possible for the committee to form an opinion of the accusations formulated by the Lithuanian delegate and contested by the Polish delegate; that the Lithuanian delegate had asked in the committee that the assembly send a commission of inquiry to study the question on the spot, but the committee decided not to act because it might restrict the freedom of the council; that in the committee's view the assembly should not encroach in any way on the council which by resolution during the current year had already appealed to the generosity of the two parties and which would follow up the matter with all necessary attention.

Mr. Sidzikauskas, Lithuania, said that the decisions of the assembly and its committees had not completely met the hopes of Lithuania, which for eight years had been in a condition not unlike a state of war; that its progress in reconstruction had been impeded; that he regretted the committee had not proposed for the agenda the question of the legal status of Vilna and of the violation and nonexecution of the treaty of Suwalki by Poland, which treaty offered a serious basis for the settlement of the dispute over Vilna. He asserted that Lithuania had proposed without success to submit the question to the Permanent Court of International Justice; that the population of the disputed area, a majority being against the Polish rule, was drifting into an intolerable state; that he hoped the council would not hesitate to send there a commission of inquiry or a resident commissioner of the league.

Doctor Nansen favored a commission of inquiry by the assembly.

Mr. Askenazy, Poland, opposed the suggestion, pointing out that the majority of the sixth committee had decided it to be an encroachment on the jurisdiction of the council, an indication of lack of confidence in that body, and had decided to propose reference to the council, a decision which the speaker asked the assembly to indorse.

Lord Robert Cecil, South Africa, said that the committee had recommended that the matter be left to the council, but had indicated that it might be useful to send a commission of inquiry.

Mr. Askenazy, Poland, asked adjournment of the discussion until the next meeting.

Mr. Motta, Switzerland, insisted on the committee's proposal as it stood, pointing out that, as stated in the report, the council would be following the views of the assembly if it sent a commission, but its freedom of action remained undisturbed, and added that the resolution should be adopted with this understanding.

The resolution was agreed to.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF NONPERMANENT MEMBERS OF COUNCIL

The following communication from the council was read by the president:

The council has decided to submit the following proposal to the assembly:

Article 4 of the covenant provides that the council shall consist of representatives of the principal allied and associated powers together with the representatives of four other members of the league selected by the assembly.

The council may, however, with the approval of the majority of the assembly, increase the number of nonpermanent members.

Acting under these provisions the council thinks it is desirable that the number of members of the league to be selected by the assembly for representation on the council should now be increased from four to six.

The first paragraph of article 4 is based on a certain principle concerning the number of the permanent and nonpermanent members of the council. The proposed augmentation of the number of the nonpermanent members produces a considerable modification of this principle. Nevertheless, a subsequent augmentation of the number of permanent members would reestablish the principle of which article 4 is the application without it being possible to consider that the change proposed to-day prejudiced such reestablishment.

The council asks the assembly to approve this decision, in accordance with the provisions of the covenant.

The president then placed before the assembly the following resolution:

The assembly approves the decision of the council that the number of members of the league to be selected by the assembly for representation on the council shall be increased from four to six.

This decision shall come into force immediately after approval by a majority of the assembly.

On proposal of committee on agenda the assembly placed the question on the agenda and referred it to the first committee.

Fourteenth meeting, Friday, September 22, 1922, 10 a. m.

PROCEDURE OF CONCILIATION—REPORT OF FIRST COMMITTEE

Mr. Scialoja, Italy, Mr. Adatci, Japan, chairman and reporter of first committee, took seats on platform.

Mr. Adatci stated that at the first assembly Norway and Sweden had submitted a draft concilation agreement which had been carefully considered; that it was again taken up at the second assembly, which had directed the council to appoint a special committee to study a procedure of conciliation; that this committee had met in May, 1922, and that the council in July had adopted its report, which had been presented to the first committee of the third assembly.

He said that the proposal by Norway and Sweden contemplated a general procedure of conciliation obligatory on all league members; that the first committee had taken up the question of bringing such procedure within the framework of the covenant; that the committee had differed as to whether the procedure should be compulsory or optional, and had decided that it was better for the moment not to make it compulsory; that the committee had further concluded that the council was the organ of conciliation under the league, on whose jurisdiction there should be no encroachment.

He said further that the committee recommended, therefore, that the assembly adopt a resolution on the subject, not a convention open to signature by all members; that the draft now presented by the committee to the assembly represented the committee's unanimous action; that it traced the general lines of the system proposed, and that the committee hoped it would open the way for an agreement which could be signed by all members.

Mr. Unden, Sweden, favored the committee scheme, although it did not go as far as the Swedish-Norway proposal, and expressed the hope that further steps would follow.

The resolution recommended by the committee was adopted by the assembly. It was as follows:

With a view to promoting the development of the procedure of conciliation in the case of international disputes in accordance with the spirit of the covenant the assembly recommends the members of the league, subject to the rights and obligations mentioned in article 15 of the covenant, to conclude agreements with the object of laying their disputes before conciliation commissions formed by themselves.

The organization of these commissions, their competence, and the procedure to be forwarded before them shall be freely determined by the contracting parties. The parties are recommended in this connection to look for guidance to the provisions contained in the Hague convention of October 18, 1907, for the pacific settlement of international disputes, and in particular to the provisions concerning the hearing of witnesses, procedure by employment of experts, rogatory commissions, inspection of places, and replacement of members of the commission. The rules laid down in the following articles are recommended to them for adoption. At the request of the members concerned the secretary general may offer them the assistance of the secretariat for the conclusion of conciliation conventions.

Apart from the other means placed at its disposal by the covenant to assure the maintenance of peace the council may, if necessary, have recourse to the service of the conciliation commission formed by the parties; it may write them to bring their dispute before the commission or it may refer to the commission any dispute which may have been submitted to it by one of the parties in virtue of article 15 of the covenant. A conciliation convention made between two states of which one only is a member of the League of Nations, or of which neither is a member of the league, will be applicable subject to the procedure established by article 17 of the covenant.

The assembly expresses the hope that the competence of the conciliation commissions will extend to the greatest possible number of disputes, and that the practical application of particular conventions between states, as recommended in the present resolution, will in the near future make possible the establishment of a general convention, open to the adhesion of all states.

RULES

ARTICLE 1. The conciliation commission shall be constituted as follows:

Each party shall appoint two members, one from among its own nationals, the other from among the nationals of a third state. The two parties shall jointly appoint the chairman of the commission from among the nationals of a third state.

The parties may appoint the members of the commission beforehand and for a period which they themselves shall determine. They may also confine themselves to appointing only the chairman beforehand, in which case the other members shall be appointed after consultation with the chairman at the moment when a dispute arises, their mandate being limited to the settlement of such dispute.

ART. 2. Disputes which fall within the competence of the conciliation commission shall be referred to it for consideration by means of a notification made by one of the contracting parties to the chairman of the commission and to the other party. The notification shall be communicated to the secretary general of the league.

If all the members of the commission have been appointed beforehand, the chairman shall convene the commission as soon as possible. If they have not been so appointed, the chairman shall write the parties to appoint the other members within a period laid down by the convention.

ART. 3. The conciliation commission shall meet at the seat of the league, unless the parties have fixed a different place of meeting in the convention made by them or for the purpose of a particular case. The commission, if it considers it necessary, may meet at a different place. The commission may in all circumstances ask the secretary general to render it assistance in its work.

ART. 4. Subject to the right of the parties and of the commission itself to extend this period, the conciliation commission shall complete its work within a period of six months from the day on which it first met.

ART. 5. Both parties shall be heard by the commission. The parties shall furnish the commission with all the information which may be useful for the inquiry and the drawing up of the report, and shall in every respect assist it in the accomplishment of its task.

The commission shall itself regulate all details of procedure not provided for in the convention and establish rules of procedure for the obtaining of evidence.

ART. 6. The commission shall take its decision by a majority vote of its members; the presence of all the members is required for a valid decision. Each member shall have one vote.

ART. 7. The commission shall make a report on each dispute referred to it. In proper cases the report shall include a proposal for the settlement of the dispute. The reasoned opinion of the members who are in the minority shall be recorded in the report.

The chairman of the commission shall immediately bring the report to the knowledge of the parties and of the secretary general of the league.

ART. 8. The report of the conciliation commission may be published by one of the parties before the settlement of the dispute only if the other party gives consent.

ART. 9. Each party shall pay the allowances of the members of the commission which it has appointed and shall pay half of the allowances of the chairman.

Each party shall bear the costs of procedure which it has incurred and half of those which the commission may declare to be joint costs.

REPATRIATION OF PRISONERS OF WAR—REPORT OF FIFTH COMMITTEE

Mr. Fielding, Canada, and Mr. de Brouckere, Belgium, chairman and reporter, fifth committee, advanced to the platform, and Mr. de Brouckere read the report of the fifth committee on repatriation of prisoners of war, recommending adoption of Doctor Nansen's report.

The president remarked that the assembly would doubtless approve the report and its conclusion, which was as follows:

The fifth committee, in recommending to the assembly the adoption of Doctor Nansen's report, desires to state that in the accomplishment of his mission Doctor Nansen has indeed deserved well of humanity.

The remark was received with applause and the report adopted.

POSITION OF GEORGIA—REPORT OF SIXTH COMMITTEE

Mr. Loudon, Netherlands, Mr. Lapointe, Canada, chairman and reporter, sixth committee, were given seats on the platform.

Mr. Lapointe, presenting the sixth committee's report on Georgia, quoted the resolution presented by Mr. Brouckere, Belgium, on September 18, 1922, which was as follows:

The assembly of the League of Nations, moved by the present unhappy position of Georgia as a country invaded and occupied contrary to the wishes of its inhabitants, invites the council to follow attentively the course of events in this part of the world so that it may be able to seize any opportunity which may occur to help in the restoration of this country to its normal condition.

Mr. Brouckere said that all members of the sixth committee had indicated deepest sympathy with the proposal, but certain ones, especially Lord Cecil and Mr. Fisher, had urged amendments. It was feared, he added, that the original wording might seem provocative to the Soviet Government and might render Georgia's position still more difficult, and it was felt that political or military action was suggested by the original terms, action which it would not be possible for the league to take. He said further that after discussion the committee decided to present the resolution in the following terms:

The assembly of the League of Nations, having considered the position of Georgia, invites the council to follow attentively the course of events in this part of the world, so that it may be able to seize any opportunity which may occur to help in the restoration of this country to normal conditions by any peaceful means in accordance with rules of international law.

Mr. Brouckere stated that the resolution as presented to the assembly contained both promise and counsel; that the Georgian people were invited to note that the league had instituted a method of settling international disputes otherwise than by resort to war; that meanwhile they should avoid desperate measures and should realize that premature and violent conduct might cause still greater disaster.

The assembly adopted the resolution presented by the sixth committee.

ARMENIA—SIXTH COMMITTEE

Presenting the sixth committee's report on Lord Cecil's resolution on Armenia of September 19, 1922, Mr. Motta, Switzerland, quoted the resolution, which was as follows:

The assembly notes with gratitude the action taken by the council with respect to Armenia and declares that it is of the opinion that in any peace with Turkey it should be an essential condition that a national home should be provided for the Armenians and requests the council to take all steps which it may think useful to secure this result.

The speaker said that the sixth committee agreed with the substance of the resolution, but desired to modify its terms by omitting the provision that a national home for Armenians should be an essential condition in any peace with Turkey; that the league should avoid the appearance of a belligerent, or of political action; that it should take the humanitarian viewpoint, hoping that Armenia came within article 22 of the covenant, which mentioned certain communities formerly belonging to the Turkish Empire which had reached a state of development where their existence as independent nations might be recognized.

He said further that out of a total population of about two and a half millions only 300,000 Armenians in Turkey and 500,000 Armenian refugees remained; that it had been doubted whether it was wise to renew a recommendation which on a former occasion had proved futile; that he believed, however, that it was the league's duty to proclaim again its solicitude for the Armenians.

Lord Cecil, representing South Africa, spoke of the action on Armenia by the first and second assemblies, pointing out that in 1920 a revolution in Armenia had prevented intervention by the assembly; that warfare continued through 1920 and 1921; that in 1921 the assembly was obliged to confine itself to the request that in any treaty of peace for the settlement of the Near East a national home should be given the Armenians; that the war continued through 1921 and 1922, only a small remnant of Armenians now remaining in Armenia. He contended that the league was bound to intervene, and not entirely on humanitarian grounds; that the league existed primarily to secure world peace, either by direct efforts to end disputes between nations or indirectly by promoting international cooperation; that the league policy toward Armenia belonged to the same order of ideas as to its policy for protection of minorities. He stated that the present situation was dangerous, necessarily involving constant pressure of western public opinion for intervention in the Near East; that outside intervention in any country was to be undertaken only as a last resort; that the only alternative of the national home policy was the ruthless policy of extermination adopted by Talaat Pasha.

The resolution as amended and presented by the sixth committee was adopted.

STATUS OF EASTERN GALICIA—REPORT OF SIXTH COMMITTEE

As reported for sixth committee on the subject of Galicia, Mr. Lapointe, Canada, said that the committee held that the problem of eastern Galicia had not changed since the second assembly; that the two parties had recognized the importance of the earliest possible solution, though differing as to means; that the committee presented the following resolution:

The assembly of the League of Nations renews its wish, expressed in the resolution adopted by the second assembly on September 27, 1921, that the council of the league draw the attention of the principal allied and associated powers to the desirability of determining at an early date the status of eastern Galicia.

Resolution adopted.

WITHDRAWAL OF PERSIAN PROPOSAL FOR PROTECTION OF CIVILIAN POPULATIONS OF NEAR EAST

The president announced receipt of a letter from the Persian delegation, stating that the international committee of the Red Cross was taking active steps to relieve the civilian populations of the Near East on the lines of the delegation's proposal to the assembly on September 19; that accordingly the proposal was withdrawn, and the thanks of the delegation proffered to the international committee of the Red Cross and its president, Mr. Adar, for their solicitude for the Moslem and Christian populations of the Near East.

LORD BALFOUR'S PROPOSAL FOR AMENDMENT OF ARTICLE 14, RULES OF PROCEDURE

The president announced receipt of a proposal by Lord Balfour for amendment of article 14, rules of procedure, reading as follows:

The general feeling in favor of strict economy in connection with the work of the league renders the amendment of rule 14, paragraph 2, of the rules of procedure, desirable. The following modification is proposed:

Present text:

2. The assembly shall not decide items on the agenda in full meeting until the report of a committee upon them has been presented and circulated, unless the assembly itself, by a two-thirds majority, determines otherwise.

Resolutions involving expenditure shall not, however, be voted by the assembly before the financial committee shall have expressed its opinion on the advisability of the proposed expenditures with regard to general budgetary resources.

Proposed text:

2. The assembly shall not decide items on the agenda in full meeting until the report of a committee upon them has been presented and circulated, unless the assembly itself, by a two-thirds majority, determines otherwise.

Reports by a committee involving the expenditure of money must indicate whether the expenditure will constitute part of the general expenses of the league or whether it will be recovered from the members of the league particularly concerned.

Reports by a committee other than the financial committee recommending action which will involve the expenditure of money, of which the amount is not specified, shall before submission to the assembly be referred to the financial committee, in order that there may be prepared and submitted to the assembly with the report in question as close an estimate as time and circumstances allow of the amount of expenditure involved.

Furthermore, no resolution involving expenditures shall be voted by the assembly before the financial committee shall have expressed its opinion on the advisability of the proposed expenditure from the point of view of general budgetary resources.

The assembly referred the proposal to the sixth committee.

Fifteenth meeting, Saturday, September 23, 1922, 10 a. m.

AMENDMENT OF ARTICLE 10 OF COVENANT: REPORT OF FIRST COMMITTEE

Mr. Sciajola, Italy, chairman first committee, Mr. Struycken, reporter, came to platform. Presenting the committee's report, Mr. Struycken said that some league members thought article 10 the most valuable article in the covenant, that others deemed it a source of grave risks and responsibilities hurtful to the league; that opinions varied as to the legal meaning of this article and its relation to other articles of the covenant.

The Canadian delegation, he continued, had first asked for the elimination of the article, but had since proposed to amend it so as to remove all doubt as to its meaning, while the committee had decided to postpone the subject for further consideration and offered the following resolution:

The assembly of the League of Nations decides that the Canadian proposal with regard to article 10 of the covenant shall be adjourned until the fourth assembly in order that the subject may be considered in all its bearings. The assembly leaves it to the council to decide on the steps to be taken to ponder in a detailed study of the Canadian proposal before the meeting of the fourth assembly.

Mr. Barthelemy, France, said that France favored the article, but the French delegation had agreed that it be referred to the fourth assembly for examination; that from the French viewpoint this article was an essential declaration of a new international principle; that articles 16 and 17 of the covenant contained the practical details of the application of this principle; that article 10 did not compel league members to come with all their forces to the assistance of a member unjustly attacked; that they might remain outside the struggle provided they had met their obligations under articles 16 and 17. He remarked further that the absence of specific military obligations under article 10 was recognized in Lord Cecil's proposal for a mutual treaty of guaranty; that though not contained in the letter the principle of the guaranty was in harmony with the spirit of article 10; that this article had been wrongly interpreted as a conservation of boundaries as they stood; that it merely said that frontiers must not hereafter be altered by force but only as a result of peaceful deliberations under league auspices. He gave it as his personal view that if article 10 had to be modified no steps should be taken in this direction except in agreement with the United States as a member of the league; that the elimination of the article would bring in no new state and would alarm some of the new states which had become league members; that it would be for the council, when faced with an actual controversy, to interpret article 10, subject to the control of the assembly.

Mr. Fielding, Canada, remarked that no proposal for the repeal of article 10 was before the assembly; that such a proposal had been made by a Canadian delegate to the first assembly, but the present Canadian Government now admitted that this could not reasonably be done; that the Canadian delegation, however, deemed article 10 in its present form ambiguous; that the committee of jurists appointed to study article 18 and article 10 had as well taken the same view and had expressed the hope that an interpretative resolution of the assembly might abolish all doubt as to its exact meaning; that it was necessary to ascertain whether article 10 gave the council the right to issue proclamations of war; that the Canadian delegation did not think the council had such right and deemed it necessary that all doubt on this point be removed.

Resolution adopted.

AMENDMENT OF ARTICLE 18 OF COVENANT, FIRST COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Mr. Zahle, reporting for first committee, came to the platform and stated that he agreed with Mr. Fernandes, reporter of first committee to the second assembly, on article 18; that Mr. Fernandes had said that article 18 contained one of the essential principles of the league, which should be neither suppressed nor limited.

The president then submitted the resolution of the first committee on the amendment of article 18, as follows:

Considering that, according to the information furnished by the secretariat, the practice of presenting treaties and international engagements for registration and for publication is becoming more and more familiar to the governments of members of the league and desiring to profit by experience gained over a longer period before reopening the discussion on a possible amendment of article 18 of the covenant:

The assembly decides to postpone such a discussion to a future session of the assembly.

Resolution agreed to.

INDEMNITIES FOR CERTAIN JUDGES AND ASSESSORS OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE

Mr. de Palacios, Spain, reporting for first committee, submitted its report on indemnities for certain judges and assessors of the Permanent Court of International Justice and offered for the committee the following resolution:

The assembly of the League of Nations having considered proposals made to it by the council in accordance with article 32 of the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, accepts the proposals of the council subject to certain changes as to the amounts payable and decides as follows:

1. A judge sitting in the Permanent Court of International Justice, who has been selected in accordance with article 31 of the statute of the court and who is not a deputy judge, shall be granted from the funds of the court a daily duty allowance and a daily subsistence allowance and repayment of his traveling expenses, according to the rates and conditions applicable to a deputy judge taking part in a session of the court.

2. Technical assessors summoned to assist the court in accordance with the provisions of article 26 of the statutes of the court shall be granted from the funds of the court a daily subsistence allowance of 50 florins during the period for which their functions oblige them to reside at the place at which the session is held, unless they habitually reside there, or, if they reside at such place, a daily subsistence allowance of 25 florins; and further, the necessary traveling expenses of these assessors shall be refunded them out of the funds of the court.

3. Technical assessors sitting in cases connected with transit and communications and, in particular, cases coming under part 12 (Ports, waterways, and railways) of the treaty of Versailles and the corresponding parts of the other treaties of peace referred to in article 27 of the statute of the court shall be treated in the same manner as the assessors referred to in paragraph 2 above, if they sit by virtue of a decision of the court.

If the technical assessors sit at the request of the parties, then allowances and traveling expenses shall be borne by the parties in accordance with rules to be made by the court.

Resolution adopted.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO ARTICLE 1, RULES OF PROCEDURE OF ASSEMBLY

The president stated that Mr. Hanotaux, France, and Mr. Sceapola, Italy, proposed to amend article 1, assembly rules of procedure, so that the assembly's annual session might begin on the third Monday in September instead of the first, as was at present required, and suggested reference to first committee.

The president's suggestion agreed to.

Sixteenth meeting, Monday, September 25, 1922, 10 a. m.

INCREASED NUMBER OF NONPERMANENT MEMBERS OF COUNCIL

Mr. Lapointe, Canada, presented the first committee's report proposing immediate increase of number of members of league chosen by the assembly for representation on the council from four to six.

Mr. Struycken, Netherlands, said that the increase would profoundly modify the composition of the council, giving the majority to the nonpermanent members; that the council should be based on the principle of selection, not the democratic principle; that there was danger of hampering its action; that the desire to enlarge the council was due to temporary motives and present circumstances. He said it was true that the league should take account of changes that occurred and groups formed in the development of political relations, but should not be allowed to fall under particular influences; that its principal object was the progressive subordination of national ambitions to the universal and lasting ideas that lay at its base; that it would form an undesirable precedent to make this change in the council without following the procedure laid down for the revision of the covenant.

Mr. Barthelemy, France, remarked that the council and the first committee had felt the force of this reasoning, and had stipulated in naming the reasons for the change that the organic principle of the covenant as to the numerical relation between permanent and nonpermanent members was only temporarily abandoned.

Mr. Burgos, Panama, conceded that the great powers, with the larger responsibilities, should have superior rights, but contended that the fact that the five great powers could permanently dominate the league by means of the council weakened the confidence which all the members should have in the league, asking why the assembly which could nominate the four small powers on the council should not be entrusted with the same right as to the great powers, and stating that he submitted this idea to the committee on amendments to the covenant.

The committee proposal was accepted.

ARMENIAN AND GREEK REFUGEES

Lord Balfour, British Empire, stated that the British Government had been advised of the danger of some great calamity to the large number of refugees, Armenians and Greeks, at that time without shelter and food in Smyrna; that he had discussed the matter with Doctor Nansen, and that two things were necessary, transportation of refugees to a place of safety and food supplies; that the British Government would give £50,000 if the other governments would produce a like amount. He said that Doctor Nansen's organization could handle the situation; that ships were being chartered, and Doctor Nansen had taken steps for food supplies; that he urged the delegates from Persia, whose attitude was strictly neutral in reference to the unhappy events in the Near East, to inform, if possible, the other Moslem powers of the general feeling of the assembly in this matter.

Mr. Ader, Switzerland, as president of the international committee of the Red Cross, supported Lord Balfour, saying that the international committee had already sent representatives to Constantinople, Smyrna, and Brusa to report on the situation and to bring to the refugees the assistance which the British Red Cross and the Union Internationale de Secours had put at the committee's disposal; that a representative had also gone to Athens to help the British Government in assisting unfortunate victims at present dispersed throughout Greece and the islands.

Mr. Hanotaux, France, said that his government had already aided in relieving refugees through the French fleet and the French authorities; that the league council had already interested Doctor Nansen's office at Constantinople; and that he seconded Lord Balfour's appeal.

Doctor Nansen, Norway, observed that it was first necessary to take the refugees from Smyrna to some Greek island; that he had asked the Bulgarian Government for a shipload of flour and believed Mr. Stambouliski (Bulgarian premier) had promised his assistance; that he was asking his representative, the assistant high commissioner of the league at Constantinople, to go at once to Smyrna to see what could be done to save the lives of the refugees; that he joined Lord Balfour in asking the Persian delegation to approach the Turks, if possible, on behalf of the league's position in this matter; that he appealed for cooperation to league members and the general public.

Mr. Radeff, Bulgaria, announced that Bulgaria was already supporting nearly 200,000 refugees in her territory; would do her utmost to assist Doctor Nansen, steps already having been taken to that end.

Prince Arfa-Ed-Dowleh, Persia, informed the assembly that Persia is the only Moslem state represented in the assembly; was especially grateful for the confidence and esteem expressed by Lord Balfour; that Persia had friendly relations with both belligerents and was prepared to utilize such position to act as intermediary in facilitating a great humanitarian project.

Miss Vacaresco, Rumania, on behalf of all women throughout the world supported Lord Balfour's appeal.

Sir James Allen, New Zealand, offered this resolution:

The assembly, having heard the statement of Lord Balfour and recognizing the extreme urgency of bringing effective aid to the refugees in the Near East, for which purpose financial assistance from the various governments would be of the greatest value, decides that its members will at once place the situation before their respective governments, recommending an immediate and adequate financial contribution to Doctor Nansen's organization.

The proposer added that New Zealand would contribute £1,000 to the relief work.

Resolution adopted, the president, on behalf of the assembly, expressing gratitude for the British Government's generous offer, and his satisfaction that the delegates would at once communicate with their governments.

TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN—FIFTH COMMITTEE'S REPORT

I ask that the proceedings under that title be printed without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection——

Mr. MOSES. Just a moment, Mr. President. Does it have to do also with the Nansen experiment in Greece?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; it does not. It is another title altogether, and I am trying to finish it.

Mr. MOSES. Just why did the Senator want to do that at 10 o'clock p. m., may I ask?

Mr. SHEPPARD. There has been a unanimous-consent agreement to recess.

Mr. MOSES. I understand that, but to-morrow will be another day, and the Senator may go on then.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to finish to-night, if I can.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I do not think he can wholly illuminate me on some of the things that are here spoken of as to which I should like further information.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will do the best I can. Mr. President, I renew my request that the proceedings under the title "Traffic in Women and Children" may be printed without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN—FIFTH COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Fielding, Canada, chairman and Mrs. Coombe-Tennant, reporter, fifth committee, appeared on platform, the latter presenting the committee's report on the traffic in women and children, and offering for the committee these resolutions:

"The assembly decides:

"1. That the report of the advisory committee on traffic in women and children be adopted.

"2. That in view of the fact that the system of State regulation which exists in certain countries is thought in many quarters to encourage the traffic in women, the advisory committee should be asked by the council to consider whether, pending the abolition of the system, it could be agreed that no foreign woman should be employed or carry on her profession as a prostitute in any licensed houses and that the recommendations of the advisory committee on the subject should be included in its next report to the council."

Mrs. Coombe-Tennant pointed out how intimately the league's entire work affected women, how much of it related to matters where women had practical experience and special knowledge, and appealed to the nations without women among their delegates to consider the matter of including them in order to make the assembly more truly representative of the people as a whole and to create among their own women a deeper interest in the league.

It had been often urged in the assembly, she said, that the force of the league rested on public opinion, and she then referred to the great share of women in forming public opinion in all countries, including those in which they had not taken a large share in public work. She said that it was the mother who molded the minds of her children, the citizens of to-morrow; that in every country the minds of women were a great power, though sometimes inarticulate; that she appealed to the women of all nations, especially of the states members of the league, to be active in the cause of peace and the league, and therefore, to study the questions with which the league dealt and on which world peace depended. She stated that now was the time for women in all countries to come forward and make sacrifices, if necessary, for peace, which, however severe, could not approach in severity the sacrifices of war; that the horrors of war might pass from the minds of men, but would never pass from the minds of mothers who gave more, far more, than life; that there was a passionate demand in the hearts of women that a way of settling international disputes, other than war, be found; that an instrument was needed for the expression and execution of that demand, and that the League of Nations was that instrument.

She added that if the league was to reach its full authority and force, it must become, in some true sense, a league of mothers, because it was through the women of the world that the great driving force could be given the league, a force which would sweep it on to achieve its purpose—a most difficult task, one that had baffled every age.

Viscount Chelmsford, India, correcting a statement in the report, said that the Indian Legislature had ratified the convention on the traffic in women and children, and that his government was taking steps to give it effect.

Mr. Sokal, Poland, said that prohibition of employment of foreign women in licensed houses could be brought about only by an international convention, by the pending resolution the assembly was asked to request the council to ask the advisory committee on traffic in women and children to study this question, the results to be reported to the fourth assembly—that the Polish delegation deemed the proposed measure an effective one.

Mrs. Dale, Australia, supported the measure relating to foreign women, saying that Mr. Sokal was its author, and called attention to the fact that the resolution presented the measure preceding the abolition of the system of licensed houses. She added that she could not have supported any resolution based on the assumption that the system of regulation was necessary or desirable.

The Count de Gimeno, Spain, observed that public opinion in Spain was divided on the subject of licensed houses; that he would, therefore, abstain from voting, although as a medical man he favored the measure.

Resolution and report approved, Spanish delegation not voting.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I now come to the—

Seventeenth meeting, Tuesday, September 26, 1922, 10 a. m.

REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS

Mr. de la Torriente y Peraza, Cuba, chairman, and Lord Robert Cecil, South Africa, reporter, third committee, took seats on the platform.

Presenting the report of the third committee on reduction of armaments, Lord Cecil said that the league by article 8 of the covenant was assigned the duty of formulating practical schemes for armament reduction to be submitted to the governments for their final decision; that the temporary mixed commission had already assembled important statistics and secured from the governments statements of their national requirements, which in some instances not only gave detailed particulars of their armaments but also stated the broad reasons for their necessity; that these statements showed that many hundred millions of pounds and many millions of men were still required to give the nations a sense of security, entailing an enormous economic strain on the finances of the world.

He stated further that the governments had been asked to distinguish between armaments required to resist aggression and for maintenance of internal order; that the latter purpose called for a very small fraction of the total forces, thus proving that a vast price was being paid for international suspicion; that a scheme of reduction would require the establishment of a unit of military strength to serve as a standard measurement for land armaments, the number of men being no longer a satisfactory criterion; that a unit might be found by combining the factor of men with the factor of budgetary experience; that the third committee asked the assembly to authorize the temporary mixed commission to pursue its inquiries and appealed to the governments to aid the commission in its work.

He observed that naval armament presented a simpler problem than land or air armaments; that the strength of national navies depended on the number of capital ships, and that this could not be concealed; that the league's work had been simplified by the Washington conference, when the most important step ever made toward disarmament had been taken; that the third committee proposed that the council call an international conference of all States, whether league members or not, to consider the extension of the principles of the Washington treaty to the nonsignatory states; that the basis of this treaty was the status quo and a 10-year holiday from building; that it was clear, however, that there could not be too great an application of these principles; that there were states with armaments so small as not to be regarded as sufficient security, others without naval armaments at all; that all these questions should be left to the conference.

He contended that reduction of land armament was complicated by the possibility of sudden incursions by land; that it was not enough to provide, as in article 16, for the punishment of the aggressor, for the reason that permanent harm might be inflicted during aggression; that it was necessary to have some alternative security; and that the committee had handled this idea in its resolutions relating to a treaty of mutual guaranty.

He advanced the idea that the treaty of mutual guaranty was intended to promote disarmament and must not become a defensive alliance of the old kind; that disarmament would be defeated if the old practice of rival groups of nations allied among themselves but united against other nations should be reestablished; that the committee had provided two safeguards against this danger—first, the provision opening the new guaranty to all nations; second, the provision by which the guaranty and armament reduction would go together; that in certain cases there might be agreement to partial disarmament without a guaranty, as in the case of the Scandinavian countries or the South American countries under an agreement to be reached at the congress soon to meet at Santiago; but that no general reduction of armaments would be possible without a guaranty, while, on the other hand, nations could not be fairly expected to undertake the guaranty unless general disarmament should accompany it.

He asserted that the guaranty was designed to take out the roots of international suspicion; that it was part of the moral disarmament which must precede material disarmament; that one obstacle to moral disarmament was the unrest in Europe due to economic disorganization; that international debts and operations thus affected indirectly the question of disarmament, and the third committee had stressed the need of a settlement of these things.

He reported further that the third committee had considered a draft scheme for control of private manufacturers of arms and recommended that it be studied by the temporary mixed commission; that a melancholy story attached to the arms traffic; that if three years before a proper control of the traffic had been established, much of the recent fighting might have never taken place; that according to a report in the press the Moscow authorities were bringing considerable quantities of arms from western countries which were thus arming a government which constantly declared itself the enemy of all the existing governments of the world; that a convention for control of the arms traffic had been accepted by the powers in Paris in 1919 and the assembly at every session had strongly urged the governments to ratify it; that practically all the important nations had agreed to ratify, provided all the others ratified; that the only important exception was the United States of America, the United States Government having declared in the preceding July that it could not ratify; that in view of this declaration it was for the moment impossible to control the arms traffic; that it was hoped the Government of the United States would say why it objected to the convention and advise the league on what conditions it would cooperate.

He directed the attention of the assembly to the fact that in aviation and air attack immense progress had been made; that effective control was difficult on account of the small size of the units and the ease with which commercial airships and aeroplanes could be used for military purposes, but little alteration being necessary; that headway might be made by controlling air budgets and number of persons trained to man the air fleets of the world, and that it also might be possible to make air forces the league's special weapon in performing its duties under the covenant.

He called attention to statements by experts that the effectiveness of bombs, dropped by aeroplanes, had been increased tenfold; also to the possibilities of poison gas and germ warfare, and said that while the treaty of Washington prohibited these methods, its provisions gave but little protection against these terrible possibilities. He predicted that in a future war the world's greatest cities could be made uninhabitable, the only effective reprisal being similar action against the cities of the aggressive nation. He told the assembly that the third committee had offered but one suggestion in regard to the inevitable increase in the horrors of war; that it had asked that a small committee be appointed to gather the known facts so that the peoples of the world might know what to expect.

He told the assembly in conclusion that the third committee proposed that the temporary mixed commission should be reappointed to continue its work; that it was hoped the committee would receive the assistance and support of all the league members; that the nations of the world must perish or disarm.

Mr. Sciajola, Italy, asserted that disarmament for the first time had been dealt with in all its complexity, this being largely the result of European public opinion, which had been deeply outraged by the Great War; that Lord Cecil's proposal was vague and general because certain conditions were necessary as a preliminary to disarmament; that no armament reduction was possible without a corresponding moral guaranty, a principle which was embodied in the treaty of mutual guaranty which could not immediately become a general treaty, but should be open to all States from the outset; that a close connection existed between disarmament and the economic situation, which was producing extensive unrest; that Italy was prepared to accept the proposal of Mr. de Jouvenel; that Italy had always contemplated a solution of the questions of reparation and interallied indebtedness viewed as a whole; that the league could help in such matters, however, only when the interested governments requested it to act; that the moral value of the proposals now submitted to the assembly was increased by the fact of their development within the limits of a universal organization; that they marked a step toward moral disarmament.

Mr. de Jouvenel, France, complimented the Italian delegation on its part in the discussion of disarmament, asserting that the assembly's adoption of the scheme before it would be one of the greatest victories yet achieved for idealism. He claimed that he could not admit that human nature was the only element in the universe which man could not control; that in order to establish peace in the world it was first essential to believe in it; that the idea must be converted into reality; that for centuries individuals and nations had trusted force as the only means of security; that justice had been created gradually; a police system had been set up, and a broader conception of security attained. He alluded to the Permanent Court of International Justice, and held that the treaty of mutual guaranty was the beginning of a system of sanctions pending the creation of an international force to preserve international right.

He told the assembly that three views of the treaty of guaranty had been presented: (1) That of Lord Cecil, who wished to begin with a general treaty binding all countries, leading them to disarm in the same proportion, and giving all an effective guaranty; (2) that of the Scandinavian countries which favored general disarmament with the treaty of guaranty less extensive in scope, based on the theory that countries might undertake to keep the peace without undertaking to enforce respect for the peace from other nations; (3) that of Latin origin, which held that the general treaty should be preceded by particular treaties, lest a single nation's refusal might imperil the cause of disarmament, the particular treaties not resembling pre-war alliances but to be accessible to all nations. He claimed that it was essential to a complete victory for civilization that all minds should abandon the idea that might makes right, that all traces of invasion be obliterated and that it be made impossible; that for this purpose France, true to her traditions, had made her suggestions.

He concluded in the following words:

What, then, is the idea which must be rooted out of men's minds? It is the idea by virtue of which political, financial, and economic methods culminate in invasion. We have not only to secure ourselves against the invasion of to-morrow; we have to efface the marks of the invasion of yesterday. Reparations must follow the footsteps left by invasion.

If we wish to avoid the war of to-morrow we must blot out the last traces of the war of yesterday. That is why the French representative made that first proposal to rid Europe of the increase of armaments which is the legacy of the great war; to begin by reducing the total military, naval, and air expenditure of every nation to the 1913 figure, calculated by the methods of the temporary mixed commission; and he suggested in the second place the method which consists in joining together the problem of reparations and the problem of inter-allied debts in order to arrive as soon as possible at a solution of the whole economic and financial question which weighs down Europe and, after giving the nations relief from the burden of armaments, to free their minds from anxiety with regard to their economic and financial future. The committee (third) adopted both these proposals and submits them to the assembly.

In this way we hope to have served well the cause of peace to which no country is more attached than my own. The more strongly my country has built up its national unity, the higher it has raised it, the wider the prospects of humanity it has perceived, and the more it has understood that its real destiny, inherent in its nature and history, is to carry from continent to continent, from sea to sea, the benefits of civilizations ignorant of one another and thus to increase the thought of each people by the thought of all the others in the hope of compounding one day out of the spirit of every age, and the light of every clime the atmosphere which the modern man requires to draw the breath of life.

Last year at the assembly my friend and colleague, Mr. Noblemaire, who is kept from us by illness, told you how fierce was France's hatred of war. His words found an echo in your hearts. I ask you, gentlemen, to keep them in your memory and remember that, even if all the other nations forget the war, there is one that could not forget it, for she is the guardian of your graves, Great Britain, of your dominions; of yours, Italy; of yours, Belgium; and of yours, Portugal, and of the graves of all the volunteers who came from most of the countries represented in this assembly.

During the war we acted as the advance guard of civilization but we know that our victory was only possible because we were on the side of right, because one by one the civilized nations took their places at our side, and at last one day we heard the cry, sublime in its heroism and it gratitude: "Lafayette, we are here."

Conscious of having constituted the first international force to enlist in the service of peace, mounting guard around the treaties, we await relief and declare that the cause of peace will be definitely won in our eyes on the day when mankind by bringing us the treaty of mutual guaranty will say to us in turn: "France, we are here."

Assembly adjourned until afternoon with armament discussion pending.

CONTINUED DISCUSSION OF THIRD COMMITTEE'S REPORT ON ARMAMENT REDUCTION

Baron Hayashi, Japan, announced that the Government and public opinion of Japan sincerely desired armament reduction which had now emerged from the domain of theory and was on the way to practical realization; that the Japanese Government had promulgated its scheme for land-armament reduction, and was about to place many officers on the retired list; that Japan had been proud to participate in the Washington conference on naval armament; that he hoped the assembly would support the third committee's recommendations which had the warm approval of the Japanese delegation.

Mr. H. A. L. Fisher, British Empire, agreed with Lord Cecil's speech, saying that reports of the temporary mixed commission and the third committee contained suggestions eminently practical, that difficulties were not concealed, and would be carefully studied during the coming year so that a definite scheme might be presented to the fourth assembly. He averred that the English race had formed a great civilian nation, content with a small force to protect its empire; that the British Empire had entered the war of 1914 because it was shocked by the violation of Belgian neutrality and was convinced that France had no aggressive designs, and would so act again if France were again similarly menaced; that after the war the British Empire began the immediate reduction of the great army it had created; that on August 1, 1914, the British Army, excluding troops from India and the Dominions, numbered 244,795; on August 1, 1918, it numbered 4,500,871; on July 1, 1922, it numbered 232,568; that the expenditure on the army from 1913 to 1914 was £34,000,000; from 1918 to 1919, £835,000,000; from 1922 to 1923, £79,000,000; that in connection with the last figure it should be recalled that the private soldier's pay had been trebled; that Great Britain had 60 battleships in 1914, 18 in 1922.

He said that the British attitude toward the treaty of mutual guarantee would depend largely on the number of states adopting it and on the temper and tone of continental public opinion; that he agreed especially with the part of the report dealing with reparations and interallied debts; that France was undoubtedly entitled to reparation; that the problem of reparation and war debts must be treated as a whole, and that he believed with Mr. Sciajola that the league could not intervene unless requested by the allied and associated powers; that if they failed to settle the matter the league should be asked to take it up; that in any event German cooperation and good will were essential; that he appealed to German business men for aid in solving a problem affecting all Europe and retarding disarmament.

He declared that with a little good will among nations the practical proposals of the report could be carried through; that the proposals regarding manufacture of and traffic in arms were practicable but could not be accomplished without the cooperation of the United States; that the treaty of mutual guarantee was based on a logical and comprehensible plan, and that its establishment would create the needed atmosphere of peace.

Mr. Hymans, Belgium, declared that Lord Cecil, to whom he paid tribute, was both an idealist and a practical statesman; that he approved the report and resolutions, which recognized that the league could do no more than draw up plans for submission to the governments and which combined armament reduction with the principle of guaranties; that Belgium, one of the most exposed countries of Europe, was a peaceful country, but desired security; that the proposed plan was no vain formula, but a system of guaranties that would gradually bring disarmament; that experience would show whether a general treaty or regional agreements should be made; that the scheme made allowances for special cases and defined the obligations of signatories; that 1-sided disarmament was dangerous, and that states with natural means of protection should keep a sufficient force to meet international obligations.

He declared further that the necessity for moral disarmament was universally realized; that this was difficult because war had left its mark on men's minds as well as on the face of the world, and the thing that changed least was the nature of man; that some memorial should be retained, especially that of the war's result, and that time would deal with the rest; that certain political problems, including reparations, should be settled, and that the league should follow them in order to help if asked; that the league, backed by public opinion and without prejudicing the spirit of patriotism, had indicated the path to be taken.

Mr. Loudon (Netherlands) told the assembly, after praising Lord Cecil, that he hoped the third committee's resolutions would be adopted; that armament reduction must be general to be effective; that until general reduction could be obtained it was necessary to work toward moral disarmament by restoring confidence of the nations; that particular treaties would help in this regard, but public opinion in many countries did not favor combination of armament reduction with treaties of guaranty; that these two questions had been treated separately by the first two assemblies and the Washington conference; that the discussions of articles 10 and 16 of the covenant had shown that many countries were apprehensive regarding treaties of mutual guaranty; that no means calculated to secure disarmament, however, should be opposed; that the settlement of certain economic and financial questions was essential to the restoration of confidence between nations; that he had confidence in the temporary mixed commission.

The Count de Gimeno [Spain] dwelt on the horrors of the war, saying, however, that it had given birth to the League of Nations, which would live if it met circumstances in accordance with that moral force which was its only weapon; that everybody wanted peace and understood that disarmament must be had so far as permitted by national safety; that peace would never come, however, until peoples ceased to hate each other; that the league could rely on the loyal help of Spain, a peaceful country.

The Emir Zoka-Ed-Dowleh [Persia] indorsed the committee resolutions, and expressed the hope that next year the representatives of the great powers could be thanked for having kept the promises just made, stating that Persia had always maintained strict neutrality, and thought armament reduction the best way to prevent war; that she had confidence in the league, and kept only a limited army, just sufficient to keep order and repel possible attacks; that she was ready, however, to reduce her military forces to the scale arranged by the league.

He agreed that the treaty of guaranty would remove the objections of nations hesitating to disarm; that the league must be universal; that it was now the time for a practical solution of the problem of a more widely extended scope for the league; that the league should recommend that the states carry on active propaganda for peace in their schools and should itself carry on propaganda; that the temporary mixed commission had so recommended, but the assembly had voted no money therefor; that the league might summon a conference at Geneva, including not only league members but the United States, Russia, Germany, and Turkey.

Mr. Munch, Denmark, voiced the desire that the temporary mixed commission would consider the resolution on the suppression of universal and compulsory military service passed by the Twentieth Interparliamentary Union Conference recently held at Vienna. He held that the reduction of armaments contemplated by the covenant was not possible unless the system should be supplanted by another form of recruiting and by a military organization corresponding more nearly to the part to be played in the future by the army as a body of international police; that an army of mercenaries, however, could be as dangerous as armies organized through conscription.

The assembly adjourned with the discussion on armament still pending.

Nineteenth meeting, September 27, 1922, 10.30 a. m.

CONTINUED DISCUSSION OF ARMAMENT REDUCTION

Mr. Branting, Sweden, declared that his country doubted whether it was well to make a general armament reduction contingent on a general treaty of guaranty; that it was apparent from the discussion of article 10 that there were serious obstacles to a general guaranty—that it was important, however, to consider all ways of reducing armament and the reported indicated useful measure for peace not dependent on a treaty of mutual guaranty; that the report also stresses the connection between reparations and intergovernmental indebtedness; that the chief obstacle to disarmament was the general sense of insecurity, but this would be modified in time.

Mr. Askenazy, Poland, spoke of Poland's exceptional position between two powerful neighbors not members of the league, and of her work, despite this and despite terrible memories, in behalf of peace.

Sir Joseph Cook, Australia, admitted some disappointment with the committee report. He deferred to the arguments that moral disarmament must precede material, that mutual confidence among nations must precede moral disarmament, and restoration of economic soundness must precede mutual confidence, and claimed that all this meant that the era of disarmament was still a long way off. He added that this made it all the more necessary, however, that the league should work on disarmament with the greatest zeal and determination. He cited the references of the French and Italian delegations to economic question, and contended that disarmament was itself an economic question. He argued that the Allies in disarming Germany had released her from a heavy economic burden, enabling her to use all her men for economic service and giving her a tremendous economic advantage over countries still burdened with armaments. He referred to the suggestion that the large state should guarantee the small states, and said that the large states themselves needed relief from armaments; that Great Britain had already taken steps toward relief while Australia had reduced its defense system by over 25 per cent. He said that four years after the war the nations of the world were still spending over a fifth of all their revenues on armaments, that reduction by a half would mean much to the economic and commercial life of Europe, that continuance of existing armaments meant slow and certain destruction.

Mr. Langi, Norway, said he hoped the temporary mixed commission would continue its work with the same energy as in the past, and would in due time submit its conclusions to the governments so that next year the assembly would have a definite proposal before it. He contended that armaments should be reduced so that States would not be tempted to break the fundamental undertakings and engagements of the covenant, saying he was happy to note that the idea, at first opposed, of using budgetary expenditure as a basis for armament reduction was now universally accepted. He added that the Norwegian delegation approved the committee resolutions, although he thought it dangerous to combine armament decrease with the treaty of mutual guaranty, that he noted with satisfaction the endeavor to consider economic and financial problems in connection with disarmament, that league, to vindicate its name, must try to unify the forces of good will above the conflicting forces of nationalism and make every effort to become universal.

Mr. Urrutia, Colombia, called attention to the position of the third assembly in point of time between the Washington Conference and the Pan American Congress soon to meet at Santiago, saying that the league undoubtedly welcomed the results of the former and hoped the latter would aid humanity and set up a new moral bond between the peoples of the world.

Mr. de Palacios, Spain, called attention to that part of the committee report referring to the Santiago Pan American Congress where, he said, Chile would submit the question of disarmament, and offered the following resolution in the name of the Spanish delegation:

The assembly recommends to the council that should the case arise the expert services of the League of Nations be authorized to lend their cooperation to the Pan American Conference at Santiago.

The President stated that with the assembly's assent this resolution would be embodied and offered at the proper point in the committee resolutions. Assent given and the resolution afterward adopted as a part of the committee resolutions on disarmament.

Mr. Rivos-Vicuna, Chile, expressed his thanks to the temporary mixed commission and the third committee for the reference to Chile in the committee resolutions, averring that Chile was following the peaceful traditions; that it had always invoked arbitration except in case of unjust aggression and had signed with Argentina the first real disarmament treaty; that in soliciting agreement with the American continent its intention was to join in working out a solution of the disarmament problem, the problem which the league was now studying; that Chile's recommendation for disarmament study at the Santiago Pan American Congress came from a desire for intimate cooperation between the peoples of the old continent and young America. He asserted that Chile wished to see collaboration established between the technical organizations of Washington and Geneva and the Santiago Congress; that the proposal just made by the Spanish delegate had that purpose; that the Chilean Government gratefully deemed it an expression of cooperation and sympathy; that when the representatives of America agreed, and reciprocally the peoples of other continents, the indispensable general agreement could be put into effect by the fourth assembly.

Mr. Zahle, Denmark, announced that the Danish delegation supported the principal recommendations of the committee, but doubted the wisdom of connecting armament reduction with the treaty of mutual guaranty; that he recommended continued study by the temporary mixed commission of armament decrease independently of guaranties.

Lord Cecil, South Africa, reporting for the committee, announced acceptance of the resolution presented by Mr. de Palacios, stating that it would be voted on with the committee resolutions; that harmony had been the outstanding feature of the disarmament discussion, the text of the report and resolutions having been approved by all speakers. He affirmed that two basic ideas had been advanced, one that international suspicion was the great bar to disarmament; the other that some guaranty was essential to armament reduction, a general guaranty, conditioned on reduction, open to all, directed against none. He recalled that Mr. de Jouvenel had condemned the idea of force associated with the names of Bismarck, Nietzsche, Treitschke, and others, and said that this idea had adherents in all countries but they were everywhere a small minority; that the world desired peace and deliverance from the bondage of fear.

The President, closing the discussion, said it marked a date which would be remembered in the annals of the league; that war had shown all nations to be intimately linked together and unable to avoid the consequences of a conflict, regardless of where it occurred; that the Washington conference showed the importance of particular agreements among certain states; that this conference had great significance, and that the great naval powers in consenting to sacrifices in the cause of reduction were entitled to high praise; that Chile had submitted disarmament as a question for the agenda of the Fifth Pan American Conference, shortly to assemble at Santiago, and noted with satisfaction that the assembly had recognized the special character of certain problems peculiar to the American Continent.

Mr. de Oliveira, Brazil, announced that the Brazilian delegation had been obliged to refrain from voting when the naval disarmament resolution was adopted by the third committee; that his Government now accepted in principle the idea of an international conference to consider naval disarmament; that Brazil would take part in such conference with the understanding that it would adhere to the letter and spirit of article 8 of the covenant; that the conference would have complete liberty of action, would consider the question not only as a whole but in its special relations, so that its conclusions might be agreeable to all countries which had not signed the Washington agreement.

The third committee's report and resolutions were then adopted.

The resolutions thus adopted were as follows:

I. (a) The assembly considers it is desirable that the temporary mixed commission should be asked to continue for another year the work which it has begun, and that its report be submitted at an early date previous to that of the next assembly. The assembly further requests the council to invite the members of the league to lend their assistance to the commission in its difficult task, and to give their assistance and advice with regard to proposals for reduction of land armaments and a treaty of mutual guaranty.

(b) The assembly desires to express its sense of the great value of the collaboration that has existed between the temporary mixed commission and the permanent advisory commission, and trusts that it will continue and, if possible, increase. The assembly is of opinion that the great technical competence of the permanent advisory commission can not but be of essential service in the study from the technical military point of view of the questions with which the temporary mixed commission deals.

II. The assembly recommends that, as a preliminary step, the European states existing before the war in 1914, under their present description, whose juridical status has not been altered by the war, and which are not at the moment engaged in military operations which justify their armaments, be invited to reduce the total of their military, naval, and air expenditure to the figures for 1913, calculated on the basis of pre-war prices according to the method employed by the temporary mixed commission.

III. The assembly expresses its satisfaction at the remarkable work accomplished in collecting and drawing up statistical data in an entirely new and peculiarly difficult field.

Taking into account the work accomplished, and reserving the question of the scope it might be necessary to give to a statistical inquiry at a later date, the assembly desires to determine for the coming year the program which appears to it at the same time both immediately useful and practicable. It, therefore, proposes that this program should be limited to the two following points:

(1) Peace-time armaments.

(2) Expenditure on armaments.

The assembly considers it desirable that the council should request the permanent advisory commission to collaborate with the temporary mixed commission in that part of the work which deals with technical military, naval, and air questions.

IV. The assembly, having considered the report of the temporary mixed commission, is of opinion that the only step which could usefully be taken in connection with the surplus stocks of arms and ammunition is the control of the international traffic in arms.

V. The assembly, having noted the proposal of the temporary mixed commission for an international agreement for the control of the manufacture of arms by private companies, urges on the council to consider the advisability of summoning at an appropriate moment a conference of the members of the league to embody this agreement in the form of a convention. The assembly is further of the opinion that states not members of the league should be invited to participate in this conference and to cooperate in the policy on which it may agree.

VI. The assembly:

(a) Considers it highly desirable that the Government of the United States should express the objections which it has to formulate to the provisions of the Convention of St. Germain, as well as any proposals which it may care to make as to the way in which these objections can be overcome;

(b) Is of the opinion that the temporary mixed commission should be instructed to prepare a scheme for the control of the international traffic in arms to be considered by the conference which is to deal with the private manufacture of arms.

(c) Requests the council to take such steps as it thinks advisable to carry out the purposes above indicated.

VII. (a) The assembly, having considered the report of the temporary mixed commission on the subject of the development of chemical warfare, approves its action in establishing a special subcommittee to report on the probable effects of chemical discoveries in future wars and requests the council and the temporary mixed commission to take every possible measure to secure the fullest publicity for the report of this subcommittee.

(b) The assembly requests the council to recommend the members of the league and other nations to adhere to the treaty of Washington (February 6, 1922) concerning the use of asphyxiating gas and submarines in war and other similar matters.

VIII. The assembly, having considered the answers from the governments of 26 members of the league to the inquiry issued to them by the council as to the requirements of their national security, desires to state that it attaches the utmost importance to those replies as affording a basis for the further deliberations of the temporary mixed commission and recommends to the council that it should once again urge the members of the league which have not yet sent in their replies to do so without delay.

IX. The assembly approves the recommendation of the temporary mixed commission that the council should consider whether the time has not come to discuss the application of the paragraph of article 8 of the covenant relating to the exchange of military information between states members of the league.

X. The assembly expresses its satisfaction at the work accomplished at Washington in connection with the reduction of naval armaments.

XI. (a) The assembly welcomes with interest the Chilean Government's initiative in submitting the question of disarmament to the Pan American conference which is to meet at Santiago in March, 1923.

The assembly expresses the hope that the conference may arrive at practical solutions capable of being fitted into the more general scheme of disarmament which is being considered by the League of Nations.

(b) The assembly recommends to the council that the expert services of the League of Nations should eventually be authorized to cooperate in the work of the Pan American conference of Santiago.

XII. The assembly recommends:

(a) That an international conference should be summoned by the council as soon as possible to which all states, whether members of the league or not, should be invited, with a view to considering the extension to all nonsignatory states of the principles of the Washington treaty for the limitation of naval armaments, it being understood that any special cases, including those of the new states, shall be given due consideration at the conference.

(b) That the report of the temporary mixed commission, together with the report and the draft convention prepared by the permanent advisory commission, as well as the text of the Washington treaty, should be forwarded immediately to the various governments for consideration.

XIII. The assembly having examined the report of the temporary mixed commission on the general principles of land and air disarmament, instructs the commission to continue its investigations on the basis of these principles with a view of preparing for the consideration of the next assembly a definite scheme for the general reduction of land and air armaments.

XIV. (a) The assembly having considered the report of the temporary mixed commission on the question of a general treaty of mutual guaranty, being of opinion that this report can in no way affect the complete validity of all the treaties of peace or other agreements which are known to exist between states, and considering that the report contains valuable suggestions as to the methods by which a treaty of mutual guaranty could be made effective is of the opinion that:

1. No scheme for the reduction of armaments within the meaning of article 8 of the covenant can be fully successful unless it is general.

2. In the present state of the world many governments would be unable to accept the responsibility for a serious reduction of armaments unless they received in exchange a satisfactory guaranty of the safety of their country.

3. Such a guaranty can be found in a defensive agreement which should be open to all countries, binding them to provide immediate and effective assistance in accordance with a prearranged plan in the event of one of them being attacked, provided that the obligation to render assistance to a country attacked shall be limited in principle to those countries situated in the same part of the globe. In cases, however, where, for historical, geographical, or other reasons, a country is in special danger of attack, detailed arrangements should be made for its defense, in accordance with the above-mentioned plan.

4. As a general reduction of armaments is the object of the three preceding statements, and the treaty of mutual guaranty the means of achieving that object, previous consent to this reduction is therefore the first condition for the treaty.

This reduction could be carried out either by the means of a general treaty, which is the most desirable plan, or by means of partial treaties designed to be extended and open to all countries.

In the former case the treaty will carry with it a general reduction of armaments. In the latter case the reduction should be proportionate to the guaranties afforded by the treaty.

The council of the league, after having taken the advice of the temporary mixed commission, which will examine how each of these two systems could be carried out, should further formulate and submit to the governments, for their consideration and sovereign decision, the plan of the machinery, both political and military, necessary to bring them clearly into effect.

(b) The assembly requests the council to submit to the various governments the above proposals for their observation and requests the temporary mixed commission to continue its investigations and, in order to give precision to the above statements, to prepare a draft treaty embodying the principles contained therein.

XV. The assembly of the League of Nations,

Whilst declaring that the reduction of armaments contemplated by article 8 of the covenant can not achieve its full effect for world peace unless it be general,

Desires to emphasize the importance of regional agreements for the purpose of reducing armaments—agreements which, if necessary, might even go beyond the measures decided upon in respect of general reduction;

And requests the council to ask the temporary mixed commission to take into consideration during its subsequent work the possibility of recommending the inclusion of similar agreements to states which might be concerned.

XVI. The assembly,

Considering that moral disarmament is an essential preliminary condition of material disarmament, and that this moral disarmament can only be achieved in an atmosphere of mutual confidence and security,

Declares:

That such confidence can not be attained so long as the world continues to suffer from disorganization of the exchanges, economic chaos, and unemployment, and that the only method of remedying these evils is to put an end to the uncertainty which prevails regarding the means for the restoration of the devastated regions and the settlement of the interallied debts;

Expresses the hope that, in so far as these questions can be regulated by the unaided efforts of the European nations, the governments signatories of the international treaties and agreements which deal with these questions, and within the framework of which they must be envisaged, will achieve as soon as possible a general settlement of the problem of reparations and interallied debts.

It further recommends:

That the council shall devote constant attention to every effort made in this direction by the governments concerned, it being understood that it can only usefully assist in the solution of these problems if requested to do so by the governments in question.

GREEK AND ARMENIAN REFUGEES

Prince Arfa-ed-Dowleh, Persia, read a telegram relating to Greek and Armenian refugees in Asia Minor from the Turkish representative at Rome, stating that he had referred the Persian delegation's request for conference with the league's representatives to Mustapha Kemal Pasha and would transmit reply when received.

The president announced promise of Greek delegation to contribute a million drachmas for the refugees.

He also announced a communication from Swedish delegation to the effect that the Swedish Government was prepared to subscribe a million pounds for this purpose.

NEAR EAST—REPORT BY SIXTH COMMITTEE

Jonkheer Loudon, Netherlands chairman, and Viscount Islin, reporter, sixth committee, took the platform, the latter presenting the committee's report on the Near East and submitting for the committee this resolution:

The assembly, animated by a sincere desire to see peace reestablished in the Near East and to support any action which may be taken to achieve that object, learns with satisfaction that it is proposed to hold a special conference to consider the present situation with a view to finding a solution.

The assembly trusts that the council, without interfering in any way with the proposed negotiations, will adopt such measures as it may deem timely and warranted by the stage reached in the negotiations in order to give effect to the unanimous wish of the assembly for an early restoration of peace.

Doctor Nansen, Norway, expressed appreciation of the resolution, stating that it indicated that the league had powers in reserve which could be used when all other means had failed.

The assembly adopted the resolution.

RUSSIAN REFUGEES—REPORT BY FIFTH COMMITTEE

Mr. Fielding, Canada, chairman, and Mr. Ader, Switzerland, reporter, fifth committee, took places on platform, the latter presenting the committee's report on Russian refugees and paying tribute to Doctor Nansen. The report covered the work of charitable organizations and Red Cross societies, the governmental conferences on identity certificates, passports, and legal status of Russian refugees, and made special mention of the work of the Czechoslovak Government, which was maintaining 5,000 Russian and Ukranian students.

Mr. Ader then alluded to the question of repatriation, saying that the committee had not discussed it, but several members of the committee had made reservations as to desirability of repatriation. He said that he was expressing, therefore, only his personal opinion; that it was shown in the report of the high commissioner on repatriation that certain Russian refugee organizations and the Soviet Government had asked the American relief association to conclude an arrangement facilitating repatriation; that the high commissioner in his report said he hoped to conclude such arrangement on the basis of the amnesty which had been offered by the Soviet Government; that the arrangement should provide every possible guaranty for the safety of the refugees; that no refugee should be compelled to return against his will; and that those repatriated should be assured full liberty and security both of person and occupation. The speaker stated that he knew nothing of the terms of the published amnesty; that numerous Russian associations supporting the old régime had sent a strong protest to the League of Nations and the International Committee of the Red Cross, claiming to speak for 1,500,000 of their fellow countrymen, asking that nothing be done to secure the return of those opposed to the existing political system in Russia. Mr. Ader added that the league should act with the utmost caution and that any agreement with the Soviet Government should be submitted to the league for approval; that he felt it his duty, representing the International Committee of the Red Cross, to bring to the attention of the league and the high commissioner the necessary conditions of an arrangement with the Soviet Government.

Doctor Nansen, Norway, replied that a new question not on the agenda had been raised and asked postponement of further discussion until the next meeting.

The assembly ordered the suggested postponement.

Twentieth meeting, Thursday, September 28, 1922, 10 a. m.

CONTINUE DISCUSSION OF QUESTION OF RUSSIAN REFUGEES

Doctor Nansen, Norway, expressed a desire to reply to certain statements of Mr. Ader regarding Russian refugees. He asserted that he, like Mr. Ader, had received protests from Russian organizations against repatriation; that similar protests from Russian groups had come the year before, when relief of starvation in Russia was proposed; that such protests, rising from political considerations, should not be allowed to impede relief work; that the return of refugees against their will had never been suggested; that some Russian refugee organizations had announced in favor of repatriation; that to this end and on suggestions by the Hoover organization for relief work and the American Red Cross the repatriation of about 20,000 refugees within the next few months to parts of Russia with favorable local conditions, namely, the Don, Kuban, and Terek regions, had been proposed. He advised the assembly that these refugees were not to go back without guaranties; that (1) every refugee would sign a declaration that he returned voluntarily, (2) the Soviet Government would make a new guaranty in addition to the general amnesty already offered, (3) a representative of the relief organization in Russia would supervise the arrival of the refugees and see that they were well treated, (4) a small delegation would return from Russia and report to their compatriots as to their reception and the conditions prevailing in Russia. He informed the assembly that it was necessary to remove as many refugees as possible from Constantinople and the Balkans; that twice in the last 12 months famine had threatened them, and their position was growing more difficult; that if no effort at rapatriation was made, they would return on their own initiative; that refugees had already returned from Constantinople, Greece, and Bulgaria without the consent of the Russian Government, without papers or guaranty; that it was his feeling that it was as wrong to refuse repatriation to a refugee desiring it as to force it on one not desiring it.

Mr. Ader, Switzerland, offered his thanks to Doctor Nansen for the explanation, stating that he took note of the fact that no one would be compelled to return against his will, insisting, however, on the league being shown agreements between the high commissioner and the Soviet Government before they became operative, so that the league might be assured that the guaranties were genuine and effective, and adding that he was moved by no political purpose, that he felt the representations by certain Russian groups should not be ignored.

The assembly adopted the resolutions of the fifth committee on Russian refugees, the resolutions reading as follows:

I. The assembly, having heard the report of the high commissioner of the League of Nations for Russian refugees on the work which he has accomplished during the past year, approves this report, and wishes to express its entire satisfaction with the way in which the high commissioner has discharged the duties intrusted to him and to record its high appreciation of the service he has rendered to the refugees and to the league. As the work is not yet finished, the assembly invites the high commissioner to continue to apply the same methods of work as hitherto.

It further decides:

II. To invite the council to request the governments of the members of the league to continue to lend to the high commissioner the support and assistance which they have hitherto given him, especially as regards the development of the means of general and professional education and the securing of employment for the refugees;

III. To invite the council to draw the attention of the governments of the members of the league to the importance of the system of identity certificates adopted at the conference on the subject, held at Geneva in July, 1922, and to request those governments which have not yet given a favorable reply to consider whether they can not without delay bring this system into force;

IV. To request the council to provide by international cooperation for the maintenance of the Russian refugees who are incapable of providing for their own livelihood in the states where they are congregated.

ASIA MINOR REFUGEES

Doctor Nansen, Norway, stated that the Government of Norway was prepared to give £1,000 toward relief of refugees in Asia Minor.

WORK OF ORGANIZATION FOR COMMUNICATIONS AND TRANSIT—SECOND COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Mr. Chodzko, Poland, chairman; Mr. Adatci, Japan, reporter, second committee, came forward to the platform, the latter reading the resolutions contained in the report of the committee on the work of the organization for communications and transit. The resolutions were as follows:

I. The assembly, after taking cognizance of the first and second reports of the advisory and technical committee for communications and transit on the work of the organization for communications and transit between the second and third assemblies, notes with satisfaction:

(a) The progress achieved in giving practical effect to the recommendations adopted by the conference on passports, customs, formalities, and through tickets, held at Paris in October, 1920, and also to the conventions and recommendations adopted at the Barcelona conference;

(b) The efforts made by the organization for communications and transit to facilitate the ratifications of the Barcelona conventions or the adhesions to those conventions;

(c) The investigations undertaken for the purpose of drawing up the convention on the international régime of railways as well as a general convention on the international régime of ports and for the purpose of applying in the domain of transport the principle of equitable treatment for commerce;

(d) The measures taken with a view to carrying out the resolutions of the Genoa conference, transmitted to the organization for communications and transit by the council of the league with the object of developing the restoration of the actual means of transport in Europe; and

Invites the organization for communications and transit, which will hold a second general conference at Geneva during the year 1923, in accordance with the recommendation of the general conference at Barcelona, approved by the council of the league at its meeting of June 18, 1921, to continue, on the lines at present adopted, to carry out the duties with which it has been intrusted. The assembly believes that the investigations now undertaken will be prosecuted with sufficient energy to insure that all those which appear likely to give rise to an international agreement may form the subject of definite proposals, to be submitted without delay to the second general conference.

II. The assembly recommends the organization for communication and transit of the league to transmit to the various governments concerned at least three months before the meeting of the conference, which shall be held during 1923, the draft conventions or recommendations which it has drawn up.

III. The assembly takes note with satisfaction of the imminent meeting in Paris of the conference of railway administrations, convened by the French railway administrations in conformity with the decisions of the Geneva conference, and draws the attention of the council to the fact that it is desirable that measures should be taken for the representation of the communications and transit organization of the league at the conference in question, which organization has been entrusted in virtue of the decisions referred to above (which have been accepted by the council and the assembly), with the task of examining the progress achieved in carrying them out.

Mr. Adatci observed that the organization for communications and transit had authority to communicate directly to the governments its opinions and recommendations, having its own responsibility and a special autonomy, that the League of Nations might congratulate itself on what had been done in the field now under consideration, that the convention on freedom of transit and the general convention on the régime for navigable waterways of international concern had been ratified and would be put into force, that the Geneva conference had approved the work of the advisory and technical committee for communications and transit, that a second international conference on communications and transit would meet at Geneva, and that the French Government was organizing a conference of railway administrations, and that at the conference the league would be represented.

Resolutions adopted.

OBSCENE PUBLICATIONS—FIFTH COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Mr. Fielding, Canada, chairman; Prof. Gilbert Murray, South Africa, reporter, fifth committee, took seats on platform, the latter presenting the report of the committee on obscene publications, and offering these resolutions:

The assembly decides:

1. To ask the council of the league, in accordance with article 24 of the covenant, to authorize the secretariat to assist members of the league and any other states which are parties to the international movement for the suppression of obscene publications, in all measures which may be necessary for this purpose.

2. To ask the council of the league to draw the attention of all states to the international agreement of 1910. Those states which have signed or acceded to it should be asked to give full effect to its provisions, and those states which are not yet parties to it should be urged to accede to it at an early date.

3. To invite the council to communicate the draft convention of 1910 with a questionnaire to every state with the request that it should forward its comments thereon to the secretariat of the League of Nations. The secretariat will coordinate the replies received and submit them as a whole to the French Government, requesting it, on behalf of the council, in view of the initiative taken by that Government in 1910, to convene a new conference under the auspices of the league, to be held at Geneva about the time of the fourth assembly, and to be composed of plenipotentiaries empowered to draw up the text of a new convention and to sign such a convention.

The reporter for the committee, Professor Murray, called the assembly's attention to the fact that a draft convention prepared by the French Government in 1910 had received the signatures of various powers, and said that the nations were now asked to give adhesion to this convention, France being invited to continue the work under the auspices of the League of Nations.

Mr. Reynald, France, expressed pleasure in what he termed the excellent results of the international conference of 1910 which the French Government had convened, but said that the convention resulting from that conference required to be completed, and that for its completion the British Government had submitted the subject to the league. He claimed that it would be necessary to summon an international conference, because penal laws should be brought into conformity; that it was the duty of the league to affirm the universal character of moral laws; that each country, however, must be left to adjust these universal laws to its respective national system of morality; that the committee proposed to leave to the governments the initiative as to international conferences; that France would make every effort to carry out the task intrusted to her.

Mademoiselle Vacaresco, Rumania, announced that the committee on intellectual cooperation had referred the consideration of the problem to a committee charged with the duty of combating the scourge of society, thereby emphasizing the distinction between worthy literature and obscenities; that the convention of 1910, called on the generous initiative of France, had demonstrated that the strength of this scourge was to be found in its international character; that the states should apply remedies and the league render the convention of 1910 effective in harmony with article 24 of the covenant.

Mr. Bellegarde, Haiti, contended that it was difficult to find where morality began and terminated; that some nations had often become unduly sensitive; that while trade in infamous publications should be punished, care should be had not to restrict the freedom of art.

Resolutions carried.

WORK OF ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL COMMITTEES, REPORT BY SECOND COMMITTEE

Mr. Chodzko, Poland, chairman; Mr. M. Holsti, Finland, and Mr. Van Eysinga, Netherlands, reporters, second committee, came forward with the report and resolutions of that committee on the work of the economic and financial committees.

Mr. Holsti presented the first part of the report, relating to the work of the financial committee. He praised the financial committee's work during the previous year and called attention to the passage in its report stating that no solution could be found for existing economic disorganization until a practical solution had been found for the problem of intergovernmental indebtedness. He remarked that the third committee of the assembly had reached the same conclusion in connection with the problem of armament reduction.

Mr. Van Eysinga, Netherlands, presented the second part of the second committee report, which related to the work of the economic committee, this work during the preceding year having consisted largely, he said, in considering the problem of the equitable treatment of commerce under article 23 of the covenant, including notably unfair discrimination against the goods and vessels of foreign countries, unfair competition, and customs formalities. He urged that the assembly strongly insist that the economic committee continue its study of the equitable treatment of commerce to the end that this principle might have the widest and speediest application.

Lord Cecil, South Africa, stressed the importance of the work of the economic and financial committees; that the assembly could not do more than review and encourage this work, but it was not to be imagined that the league's activities in this respect were limited to the brief examination by a committee of the assembly; that the league might well be proud of the work of the economic and financial committees; that if the league's recommendations through these committees had been accepted by European governments, much of the present economic disorganization would have been avoided.

Mr. Van Eysinga agreed that the second committee's report did not adequately cover the work of the economic and financial committees, but said that the problems investigated by them were mentioned in the resolutions about to be submitted, and that the information in the second committee's report could be supplemented from additional sources.

The resolutions of the second committee on the work of the economic and financial committees were as follows:

I. The assembly has noted with satisfaction the services which the financial committee has rendered to the council in its several tasks, notably in regard to the finances of Danzig, the technical aid to be given to Albania, and the restoration of the financial condition of Austria. It highly appreciates the activities of the committee and it hopes that the committee will consider practical proposals on all specific subjects which, in present conditions, might be ripe for solution by collaboration between states, and that the committee will pursue its inquiries on practical lines so as to arrive at positive results. It hopes that the study of the various questions connected with the stabilization of currencies, and in particular that of the foreign trade balance and balance of payment of various states, which is an essential element of the problem, will be actively pressed forward so as to lead to the publication of reports which will throw light on this question which is one of urgent importance.

II. The assembly has again had its attention drawn to the persistent gravity of the financial dislocation and its increasingly serious effects upon the commercial and industrial structure of the whole world. It reiterates its belief that an essential part of the remedy for these evils is the application of the rules of finance laid down in the resolutions adopted at the Brussels financial conference and recently indorsed at the Geneva conference. It invites the financial committee to renew the inquiries which it undertook last year on the progress made in the application of these resolutions by various governments. It also invites the committee to investigate, with a view to effective results, and in collaboration, formal or informal, with the governments concerned, all practical proposals which may be made for the completest possible application of the principle of sound finance which these resolutions embody.

III. The assembly, appreciating the advantages which may accrue for the finances of various countries from the disinterested assistance of an international body of impartial experts invites the financial committee to hold itself at the disposal of the governments of the states members of the league and to render them the assistance in its power for such questions and in such forms as may be found most appropriate.

IV. (a) The assembly notes with satisfaction the thorough inquiry which the economic committee has made into the questions concerning the equitable treatment of commerce and the progress achieved in regard to certain aspects of the problem.

(b) It looks forward to a modification of the existing international conventions on unfair competition in consequence of the committee's proposals and approves the procedure adopted by the council with a view to securing this end.

(c) It approves the proposal to convene a conference of experts on customs formalities. It trusts that all possible measures will be taken not only to promote the success of the conference but also to follow up its conclusions in such a way as to secure practical action by the governments with the least possible delay.

(d) The assembly notes the further work undertaken in connection with the problem of the equitable treatment of commerce. It counts upon valuable recommendations being submitted at an early date in regard to the treatment of foreign persons and firms.

(e) It hopes, however, that the investigation thus successfully begun will be extended and continued without interruption in order that the principle of equitable treatment of commerce may be given the earliest and most general application possible.

V. The assembly has noted the progress made and the results achieved by the economic committee in the other tasks which it has undertaken, partly as a consequence of the resolutions of the Geneva conference (dumping, statistical methods, etc.), and partly as regards other matters (bills of exchange). It is anxious that the attention of the states members of the league should be drawn in a special manner to the recommendations in regard to commercial arbitration and the stabilization of customs tariffs.

VI. The assembly, having taken note of the decisions of the general labor conference of 1921 calling for an inquiry into the national and international aspects of the unemployment crisis and the means of combating it and requesting the international labor office to call into cooperation the economic and financial section of the League of Nations for the solution of the financial and economic questions raised by the inquiry:

Requests the economic and financial organization to arrange the scope and method of such collaboration at an early date and to bring to the inquiry conducted by the international labor office any information which it has in its possession.

VII. The assembly invites the states members of the League of Nations to assist in the work of the economic and financial committees by furnishing as fully and as speedily as possible the information for which the committees may ask, notably especially in connection with its various publications and its investigations in regard to the equitable treatment of commerce.

VIII. The assembly notes that the council proposes to maintain for the present the economic and financial organization under its existing provisional form in order to pursue the work which it has already undertaken subject to such changes in the composition of the two committees as the council may decide.

Resolutions carried.

DEPORTATION OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN IN NEAR EAST

Mr. Fielding, Canada, chairman and reporter, fifth committee, took the platform and presented the committee's report on the deportation of women and children in the Near East.

Mr. Frangulis, Greece, said that the first assembly had decided to appoint a commission of inquiry on this subject, and the second assembly to appoint a commissioner of the league at Constantinople to handle the matter; that Doctor Kennedy had made an impressive statement before the fifth committee as to the work of the commission of inquiry during the past year; that victims of deportations and massacres had not decreased with time; that added thousands of women and children were needful of assistance. He stated that Miss Jeppe, another member of the commission of inquiry, had estimated that at least 30,000 Armenian women and children were in the hands of Mussulmans in districts surrounding Aleppo, and that 5,000 to 6,000 were captives in the Aleppo district; that according to figures from American sources 30,000 deportees had passed through Sivas, 5,000 afterwards dying on the way, 5,000 escaping, and 20,000 reaching Kharput; that of this last number 18,000 were Ottoman Greeks, while 2,000 were Armenians.

He informed the assembly further that the second assembly had decided that the League of Nations, France, Great Britain, and Italy should request their high commissioners to form a committee to assist the commissioner of the League of Nations by all possible means; that a mixed administration was formed to deal with the restitution of women and children; that it was also decided by the second assembly to encourage charitable work in the areas under consideration, such as was being carried on by Catholic and other institutions which the speaker said had long been the outposts of civilization in the East, spreading blessings of faith and charity, and such as was also being carried on by the organizations founded by the United States, particularly the American Near East Relief, by the Belgian committee, and many other worthy institutions. He advised the assembly that Doctor Kennedy in his report to the fifth committee had spoken of the work of Miss Caris Mills, recently appointed lady director of the "Neutral House," saying that Miss Mills had formerly been in the service of the American Near East Relief and had helped to repatriate more than 12,000 Armenian orphans.

The speaker asserted that his advices were to the effect that conditions had grown worse in the past two years, Greek and Armenian deportees being in a situation worse than slavery.

He quoted from the report of the Near East Relief organization and the conclusions of Dr. Mark H. Ward, a member of that organization, and concluded as follows:

The unquestionably true account which you have just heard will show you that neither the purity of the young girl, nor the honor of the woman, nor the innocence of the child, are respected; all are outraged, freely, deliberately and with impunity. All the creative forces, all the active power of life, all which goes to make up the joy of living and the desire to have lived are destroyed; the very sources of happiness and existence are dried up. And this silent tragedy is being enacted on the borders of two civilizations. From time to time and with a regularity which is often surprising. Europe witnesses this holocaust of pain and suffering which is like some sinister rite. Alas! the blood which is flowing out there is too far away from us and the flames of this conflagration too distant for us to see.

In Europe to-day can our League of Nations, the last hope of oppressed peoples, the final court of appeal of organized public opinion throughout the civilized world remain dumb? It can not do otherwise than deprecate the crime and ask that the authors of these foul deeds shall be sought out. In the face of the dislocation of family life, in face of the deportation of more than 60,000 women and children and of 600,000 refugees should not the unanimous reprobation of civilized humanity here represented rise up like a cry from the people to demand that light shall be thrown upon these events, to insist that responsibility shall be established and justice meted out?

This conception of the duty of the nations personified by our league which, in the preamble of the document that brought us into being, sets out that our aim shall be the maintenance of justice—this conception is the triumph of the outraged conscience of mankind. Our league has already given effective proof of the fact that it is capable of reaching out a helping hand to sufferers, but over the portals of the league are inscribed not only the words, "charity, humanity, and help," but also the words, "responsibility, punishment, and justice."

As early as January 13, 1922, the council of the League of Nations voted the following resolution:

"The council of the League of Nations, having heard with great concern the various reports of excesses alleged to have been committed both by Turkish and non-Turkish inhabitants in Turkish and Greek territories, instructs the commissioner of the league at Constantinople to investigate any report of atrocities committed in these territories in the future and to report to the council thereon."

You will perceive then, gentlemen, that neither the steps proposed nor the problem itself are new, but they are corollaries of the object and mission of your committee of inquiry which was set up as a result of the deportation of women and children in Turkey and in the neighboring countries. The government, in whose territory the inquiry should be carried out, has already notified the league of a similar request. No more remains to be done than to respond to a unanimous desire and proceed to carry on this inquiry wherever such crimes are being committed.

This, gentlemen, is the wish I desire to express. Its object is to establish the facts, to seek out the responsible authors of these crimes and to reveal the truth which in this case means justice.

Lord Cecil inquired if the Greek delegate, Mr. Franjales, had made any definite proposal.

The president replied that no formal proposal had been submitted to him; that if no one wished to speak he would close the discussion. Discussion closed. Resolutions of fifth committee adopted, as follows:

1. The assembly approves the conclusions of the report presented by Doctor Kennedy, chairman of the commission of inquiry on deported women and children, and is of the opinion that the League of Nations should continue its work in this direction.

2. The assembly requests the council to urge the governments responsible for any territories either under the mandate or under allied control where members of the commission for the reclamation of women and children are working to instruct their officials in those territories to give strong support and assistance to the commission and its members.

3. A further sum of £1,500 shall be allocated to the funds of the commission in order that the valuable work at present being undertaken by the commission in Aleppo may be continued.

HEALTH ORGANIZATION; FOURTH COMMITTEE'S DECISION

Mr. Rivas-Vicuna, Chile, reporter for fourth committee, announced its decision to fix the credit for the epidemic commission of the League of Nations at 50,000 francs, and stated that this figure should be inserted in the third resolution on the health organization passed by the assembly on September 15, 1922.

Twenty-first meeting, Thursday, September 28, 1922, 4.30 p. m.

ARMENIAN AND GREEK REFUGEES

Mr. Fielding, Canada, announced the readiness of his Government to contribute £5,000 for relief of Armenian, Greek, and other refugees from Smyrna and vicinity.

The president announced the gift of £1,000 by the Danish Government for the same purpose.

INTELLECTUAL COOPERATION; REPORT BY SECOND COMMITTEE

Mr. Chodzko, Poland, chairman; Mr. de Jouvenel, France, reporter, second committee, appeared on the platform, the latter submitting the committee's report on intellectual cooperation.

Mr. de Jouvenel told of the difficulties which had confronted the committee on intellectual cooperation, pointing out that a gulf had been opened by the war between the cultural systems of the various nations which more civilized tendencies were endeavoring to bridge; that this disaster had been added to the unfortunate development of a war of the classes; that the League of Nations, having instituted the international labor office and representing human thought as a whole, could not fail to grasp the importance of the organization of intellectual work; that the Federation of French Intellectual Workers, comprising 200,000 members, had been the first to turn to the league; that the federation had been created to defend the individual rights of members, and had later tried to show that manual workers and capitalists depended equally on the power of the spirit.

The speaker pointed out further that the committee on intellectual cooperation had begun by making an inventory of the intellectual patrimony of mankind; that it had accordingly created subcommittees to study unification of regulations for archæological questions, internationalization of methods of bibliography, the question of an international index and catalogue, and so forth, and had later made a list of international institutions occupied in intellectual work.

He advised the assembly that it was invited to approve these plans, consisting (1) of protecting the intellectual patrimony of mankind, (2) of the development of the patrimony, (3) of improving the material situation of intellectual workers and the methods of collaboration in intellectual work; that the committee on intellectual cooperation also proposed to study the question of intellectual property and the steps needed to enable intellectual workers to maintain their position between manual workers and capitalists with a view to a more scientific organization of labor.

Prof. Gilbert Murray, South Africa, observed that two disasters had assailed the intellectual life of Europe—the economic disaster, which was starving it; and the Great War, which had interrupted it—that the object of the committee on intellectual cooperation was to fight these evils, and its work was vital to the existence of the league. He explained that the fourth committee had reduced the expense allowance of the committee from 180,000 francs to 50,000; that this was rather severe, but that in one respect the fourth committee was probably justified; that the work of the intellectual committee could not at the moment make any decided progress; that the currents of intellectual life in Europe did not run together; that closer cooperation between universities had been suggested, but a conference would not be useful which excluded German universities; that reluctance to cooperate on both sides had to be admitted.

He asserted that the present disunion could not exist indefinitely; that league feeling as a whole was against it; that this was shown by the admission of Hungary to the league and the suggestions for the admission of Germany and Turkey; that moral disarmament, of which much had been said, was but another name for intellectual cooperation and for that inward peace which it was the league's duty to foster.

The resolutions of the second committee on intellectual cooperation were then adopted, as follows:

1. The assembly takes note of the report of the committee on intellectual cooperation and highly appreciates the work accomplished by the latter committee at its first session, and also the systematic and judicious method in accordance with which the committee has drawn up the program of its future work. The assembly congratulates the chairman of the committee on intellectual cooperation, M. H. Bergson, together with his colleagues, upon their useful and remarkable work, and expresses the hope that the committee will pursue its work with the help of the most competent men of all countries to the extent allowed by the credits proposed by the fourth committee of the assembly.

2. The assembly notes with satisfaction the resolutions in which the council has authorized the committee on intellectual cooperation to undertake an inquiry into the position with regard to intellectual work and to appoint three subcommittees to investigate questions of bibliography, questions of interuniversity cooperation, and questions of intellectual proprietary rights.

3. The assembly decides to send an appeal to all countries which have not yet accepted the conventions relating to the international exchange of publications signed at Brussels on March 15, 1886, asking them to give their adhesion thereto.

4. The assembly has noted with much interest the detailed investigations carried out by the committee on intellectual cooperation regarding the conditions of intellectual life in countries where its continuance is especially endangered. The assembly invites the council to follow up this important question within the limits proposed by the committee.

5. The assembly invites the council to stimulate an intellectual cooperation based upon international solidarity in order to procure scientific books and documents for the universities and schools of those countries which as a result of war have been deprived of them and which have not sufficient resources to acquire them.

TELEGRAM FROM PRESIDENT OF PORTUGAL

The president read a telegram from the President of the Portuguese Republic thanking the assembly for its message of congratulation on the fourth centenary of the circumnavigation of the globe.

CONTRIBUTION FROM SALVADOR TO LEAGUE EXPENSE

Mr. Struycken, Netherlands, reporter for first committee, read the committee report on the question of Salvador's contribution to league expense and submitted the following resolution:

The assembly decides that the report which the first committee has received from its subcommittee on the claim of Salvador be transmitted without discussion to the council of the league, together with copies of the procès-verbal of the committee and of the discussions which have taken place within it in order that the council may take such action in the matter as it considers appropriate.

The report of the subcommittee contained the following conclusions which the reporter also submitted:

The subcommittee is of opinion:

1. That the expenses of the labor organization as determined by article 399, paragraph 2, of the treaty of Versailles should be included among the expenses of the league and be borne by all its members, including Salvador, in the proportions established by article 6 of the covenant.

2. That the expenses of the league which fall to be borne by all its members are not limited to such expenses as are connected in a strict sense with the working of the secretariat but include all expenses legally incurred by the organs of the league and inscribed in its annual budget as voted by the assembly and that Salvador can not consequently refuse to pay its appropriate share of such expenses.

Resolution and conclusions adopted.

AMENDMENT TO ARTICLE 1, ASSEMBLY RULES OF PROCEDURE

Mr. Struycken, Netherlands, reporting for first committee, presented the following report:

The proposal to amend article 1 of the rules of procedure made by Mr. Hanotaux, French delegate, and Mr. Scialoja, Italian delegate, has been examined by the first committee.

The majority of the committee considers that it would be best not to alter the provisions of the rules of procedure on this point. The considerable number of delegates who are engaged in parliamentary and university work would in particular find it difficult, if not impossible, to attend the meetings of the assembly if they were held later. Under these conditions the clear advantages of the proposal, which consist of giving more time for the commissions meeting in August and at the beginning of September, do not seem sufficient to justify the adoption of the proposal.

Committee's conclusions adopted by assembly.

AMENDMENT TO ARTICLE 14, ASSEMBLY RULES OF PROCEDURE

Mr. Trygger, Sweden, reporting for first committee submits a resolution as follows:

The assembly adopts the following amendment to rule 14 of its rules of procedure:

Rule 14, paragraph 2, shall read as follows:

"2. The assembly shall not decide items on the agenda in full meeting until the report of a committee upon them has been presented and circulated unless the assembly itself, by a two-thirds majority, determines otherwise."

Reports by a committee involving the expenditure of money must indicate whether the expenditure will constitute part of the general expenses of the league or whether it will be recovered from the members of the league particularly concerned.

Reports by a committee other than the finance committee recommending action which will involve the expenditure of money shall be accompanied by as close an estimate as time and circumstances allow of the amount of the expenditure involved. This estimate shall, before the matter is brought before the assembly, be submitted to the fourth committee in order that it may be checked by that committee.

No resolution involving expenditure shall in any case be voted by the assembly before the finance committee shall have expressed its opinion on the advisability of the proposed expenditure from the point of view of general budgetary resources.

The assembly at the same time decides that paragraph 2 of article 19 of the regulations for the financial administration of the League of Nations shall read as follows:

"In accordance with paragraph 2 of rule 14 of the rules of procedure of the assembly, and subject to any amendment thereof, the following rules shall apply:

"(a) Reports by a committee involving the expenditure of money must indicate whether the expenditure will constitute part of the general expenses of the league or whether it will be recovered from the members of the league particularly concerned.

"(b) Reports by a committee other than the finance committee recommending action which will involve the expenditure of money shall be accompanied by as close an estimate as time and circumstances allow of the amount of the expenditure involved. This estimate shall, before the matter is brought before the assembly, be submitted to the fourth committee in order that it may be checked by that committee.

"(c) No resolution involving expenditure shall in any case be voted by the assembly before the finance committee shall have expressed its opinion on the advisability of the proposed expenditure from the point of view of general budgetary resources."

Resolution approved.

CONTRIBUTIONS UNPAID

Mr. Zahle, Denmark, chairman; Mr. Trygger, Sweden, reporter, fourth committee, took places on platform, the latter reading the committee's report on unpaid contributions, and submitted the following conclusion:

The assembly approves the principles and proposals which are laid down in the report of the fourth committee (A. 145, 1922) concerning the contributions still remaining to be paid for the fiscal period up to January 1, 1922.

Conclusion agreed to.

Mr. Barthelemy, France, reporter for first committee, presented its report and the following resolutions and recommendation:

I. The assembly adopts, for the election of the nonpermanent members of the council, the following rules of procedure:

The members whose representatives are to sit on the council as nonpermanent members of that body shall be selected by the assembly by secret ballot.

Where several seats are to be filled the election shall be made by voting a list of names. Any ballot paper containing more names than there are seats to be filled shall be null and void.

No member shall be elected at the first or at the second ballot unless it has obtained at least the absolute majority of the votes. If, after two ballots, there still remain seats to be filled, a third ballot shall be held upon a list consisting of the candidates which obtained most votes at the second ballot up to a number double that of the seats still to be filled, and those members shall be elected which obtain the greatest number of votes.

If two or more members obtain the same number of votes and there is not a seat available for each, a special ballot shall be held between them; if they again obtain an equal number of votes, the president shall decide between them by drawing lots.

II. Pending the ratification by the states of the amendment to article 4 of the covenant voted by the assembly in 1921, and without prejudice to the right of the assembly to "select in its discretion," in accordance with the provisions of the covenant, the nonpermanent members of the council the committee recommends that the assembly declare:

The nonpermanent members of the council are elected for a period of three years commencing on the first day of January following the date of their election.

Retiring members are not eligible for reelection until the expiration of a period of three years.

One-third of the nonpermanent part of the council shall be renewed each year.

If one or two of the members now on the council are reelected, their mandates shall terminate at the end of the first year.

If more than two members now on the council are reelected, lots shall be drawn to determine which one or which two of them shall not retire until the end of the second year.

If necessary, lots will be drawn to determine the order of retirement as between newly elected members so as to bring up to two the number of members retiring.

The drawing of lots to determine the members which are to retire shall be effected by the council and shall take place at least two months before the session of the assembly which is to make the election.

If for any reason a seat on the council filled by any state should become vacant during the first period of three years, the state shall be considered as having retired, with the result that if such vacancy occurs during the first year lots shall only be drawn for one seat, and if the vacancy occurs during the second year lots shall only be drawn for one seat.

If such vacancy occurs after the expiration of the first period of three years, the assembly shall fill it at the session following its occurrence, but the member so elected shall only complete the current mandate.

Recommendation: It is desirable that the assembly in electing the six nonpermanent members of the council should make its choice with due consideration for the main geographical divisions of the world, the great ethnical groups, the different religious traditions, the various types of civilization, and the chief sources of wealth.

Mr. Barthelemy called attention to the fact that the second assembly had proposed an amendment to the covenant enabling the assembly to draft a system of rules, that this amendment had not been ratified, and that it was doubtful whether the assembly adopt a system at present; that the committee submitting this amendment to the second assembly had made a reservation safeguarding the liberty of the assembly. To meet the situation, he said, the first committee now functioning had presented: (1) A resolution containing rules of procedure for the ballot within the assembly; (2) a resolution containing a pronouncement of principle and substance; and (3) a recommendation. He added that the committee took no definite position as to the legal force of its declaration and reserved the liberty of the next assembly.

Prince Arfa-Ed-Dowleh, Persia, asked that in electing nonpermanent members the assembly should consider the geographical situation, ethnical, religious, and commercial conditions of the various systems of civilization, and that a seat should be allotted to Asia with its 850,000,000 people.

Lord Balfour, British Empire, proposed a redraft of the preamble of the second resolution, as follows:

Pending the ratification by the states of the amendment of article 4 of the covenant voted by the assembly in 1921, and without prejudice to the right of the assembly "to select in its discretion," in accordance with the provisions of the covenant the nonpermanent members of the council, the assembly recommends the fourth assembly to adopt the following regulations, etc.

Lord Balfour explained that this redraft would mean the elision of the eighth paragraph of the second resolution; that in this way unanimity would be obtained in the assembly; that it was desirable, however, to recommend to states members ratification of amendments to the covenant proposed by the second assembly so that the fourth assembly might not find itself in position similar to that now facing the third.

Mr. Bourgeois, France, supported the proposal of Balfour.

The president announced a motion by Lord Balfour in the following terms:

The assembly declares that it is of the highest importance that the amendments to the covenant already passed should be ratified by the governments of the members of the league, and requests the council to take all proper measures to secure this result.

Mr. Scialoja, Italy, approved the Balfour motion and suggested that if the assembly desired to recommend ratification it should consider the text of a recommendation drafted by the first committee in this language:

The assembly calls the attention of the delegations to the fact that it is of the utmost importance for the authority and the proper working of the League of Nations that the states should ratify at a very early date the amendments of the covenant voted by the first and second assemblies, with the exception of amendments 2 and 3 to article 6.

He added that the first committee recommended immediate ratification of the first amendment to article 6, so that the assembly could fix rules for election of members of council.

Mr. Tang-Tsai Fow, China, thanked the Persian delegate for the testimony he had borne to the solidarity of Asia, and referred to the action of China in submitting to the first committee draft regulations for election of nonpermanent members of council on the principle of geographical distribution, five seats to go to European and American members, the sixth to a non-European and non-American state. He contended that this would have assured the universal character of the council, awakening interest of countries remote from the sphere of the activities of the league, and facilitating rotation by giving every member a chance to sit on the council. He pointed out that the first assembly had made formal recommendations to this effect. He added that the first committee, however, had deemed it in line with duty to adopt a compromise between two points of view and that the Chinese delegation, in a spirit of conciliation, reserving future liberty, would support the committee action.

Lord Balfour announced his acceptance of Mr. Scialoja's suggestion.

Mr. Motta, Switzerland, announced his approval of the Balfour proposals with the understanding that they did not affect the substance of the resolutions.

Resolutions as amended and recommendation carried.

Lord Balfour's motion regarding ratification, as amended, was then adopted.

REGULATIONS FOR FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION OF LEAGUE—FOURTH COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Zahle, Denmark, president, Mr. Melot, Belgium, reporter, fourth committee, took seats on platform, Mr. Melot presenting report and conclusions, the latter being as follows:

Whereas the recommendation of the assembly adopted on September 17, 1920, with regard to the administration of the finances of the League of Nations, as modified by the recommendations of October 4, 1921, requested the council to prepare for the annual session of the assembly in 1922, a final resolution concerning the administration of the finances of the League of Nations;

And whereas the council requested the commission of control to prepare a draft of such a resolution, and the commission has submitted such a draft which has been considered by the assembly.

The assembly of the League of Nations adopts the regulations for the administration of the finances of the League of Nations.

Conclusions adopted by assembly.

BUDGET AND ACCOUNTS; REPORT BY FOURTH COMMITTEE

Mr. Zahle, Denmark, chairman; Mr. Adatci, Japan, reporter, fourth committee, came to seats on platform, the reporter presenting the following resolution:

The assembly of the League of Nations finally passes the expenditure and income accounts for the third fiscal period ending December 31, 1921.

The reporter, Mr. Adatci, stated that the budget estimates for the period 1923 showed an inevitable increase over prior ones, and urged the reduction of expenditures to the minimum. The forthcoming budget, he said, called for 25,623,000 francs, making the unit contribution 27,851 francs. He told the assembly that the fourth assembly had cut down all expenditures not absolutely indispensable.

Mr. Rivas-Vicuna, Chile, regretted the existing system which controlled finances in accordance with the requirements of the administration and calculated receipts only afterwards in accordance with its needs; that expenditure should be stabilized, the contribution of each state determined and the budget regulated in consonance with resources available. He urged that the league make sure that the states embodied their contributions in their budgets; that an increase, however, in the league budget, without modifying the number of units, would weigh heavily on states in financial difficulties; that the value of each unit be fixed for three or five years; that the council submit such a plan to the next assembly.

Sir James Allen, New Zealand, urged acceptance of scale proposed, and that delegates urge their governments to pay annual contributions as soon as possible. He asserted that the financial position of the league was disquieting, that contributions in arrears amounted to more than 14,000,000 francs, causing a deficit; that the league would be compelled to raise a loan from the banks if amounts due were not paid; that delegates should urge their governments to pay their contributions for 1923 as soon as possible, as well as all or part of arrears.

Mr. Urrutia, Colombia, stated that it was difficult to induce parliaments to vote larger sums each year for the league; that he hoped the league budget would not increase during the next few years; and that no new technical bodies would be formed until the league was on a permanent footing.

Mr. Amador, Panama, asserted that the increasing league budget and the deficit were disquieting to the parliament of his country; that the true friends of the league would continue to support in every way and that every effort must be made to guard against an excessive increase of expense.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. Adatci then presented a second resolution from the fourth committee, as follows:

The assembly adopts the first report of the commission of control and the supplementary report in so far as its recommendations have not already been acted upon or are not at variance with other specific decisions of the third assembly or of its fourth committee.

Resolution agreed to.

Mr. Adatci, for the fourth committee, next submitted two additional resolutions in the following terms:

(a) The assembly recommends that, in view of the necessity of realizing economies in the financial administration of the league, the council should always hold its sessions at Geneva except in the case of absolutely exceptional circumstances necessitating a session at some other place.

(b) The assembly of the League of Nations, in accordance with article 4 of the recommendations adopted by the first assembly on the administration of the finances of the League of Nations dated September 17, 1920, approves for the fiscal period 1923 the general budget of the league and the budget of the international labor organization and the supplementary credits, amounting in all to 25,623,508 francs, and decides that these budgets shall be published in the official journal.

Mr. Reynald, France, observed that all members of the assembly favored economy, but that the intellectual organization had been too parsimonious; that the allowed credit of 50,000 francs should be doubled; that the international labor office was worthy of praise, but gave insufficient attention to the organization of intellectual work; that the material welfare of intellectual workers should be looked after and their organization placed on an international basis.

The Maharajah of Nawanagar, India, supported Mr. Reynald, contending that nothing was more important than restoration of rights due to intellectual activities; that the league should press to a successful ending the work it had been first to begin.

Sir Edgar Walton, South Africa, opposed the suggested increase on the ground of economy, pointing out that 75,000 francs had been provided for intellectual cooperation, with a supplementary credit of 50,000 francs.

Mr. Zumeta, Venezuela, argued that a vote for the increase would do honor to the league.

Sir Joseph Cook, Australia, deemed the provision already made to be sufficient and opposed the addition from the standpoint of economy.

Mr. Fielding, Canada, took the economical view and opposed the suggested increase, claiming also that there had not been sufficient time properly to study the matter.

Mr. Bellegarde, Haiti, favored the increase, holding that it was too small to render the financial situation more complicated.

Mr. Adatci, reporter, said he was in personal sympathy with the proposal, but asked that it be withdrawn for the coming year in the interest of harmony.

Mr. Reynald insisted on his suggestion, which he presented in these terms:

The assembly—

In view of the fact that the work undertaken by the committee on intellectual cooperation, in accordance with the decision of the second assembly, can not be satisfactorily carried out without adequate financial provisions in the budget—

Decides to raise the credits shown for this purpose under the heading of International Bureau and Miscellaneous Questions to the sum of 175,000 francs.

Proposal adopted.

Committee resolutions as amended by Mr. Reynold's proposal were then carried.

BUILDING SITES OFFERED BY SWISS CONFEDERATION AND BY CANTON AND CITY OF GENEVA

Mr. Adatci, for fourth committee, submitted the following resolution:

The assembly of the League of Nations, having noted the letter from the Swiss delegation, dated September 14, 1922, addressed to the secretariat of the League of Nations on behalf of the federal council and on behalf of the council of state of the Republic and Canton of Geneva and of the administrative council of the city of Geneva, which provides that, subject to the ratification by the constitutional powers, both Federal and Genevese, and in order to assist the league to acquire in due time premises suitable for the holding of the assembly and for use as offices by the International Labor Office, by obtaining possession of land in Geneva suitably placed for their requirements, the following sites are offered as a gift:

(1) On the part of the Swiss Confederation, the premises situated at 154, Rue de Lausanne, on the shores of the lake, and having an area of 35,845 square meters;

(2) On the part of the Republic and Canton of Geneva and the city of Geneva, the land adjacent to the secretariat on the side nearest to the city and having an area of 4,493 square meters; expresses its warm appreciation of the generosity and the good will shown toward the League of Nations which inspired these offers and gives full powers to the council:

(1) To accept these offers as soon as they have both been definitely made; and

(2) To authorize the secretary general to act on behalf of the League of Nations to carry out the transfer of the property rights.

Resolution adopted and the president authorized to address a letter of thanks to the Swiss authorities.

LIMITATION OF COUNCIL EXPENDITURES

Mr. Adatci, from fourth committee, submitted this resolution:

The assembly, considering that the present financial position of all countries renders the strictest economy necessary on the part of the League of Nations, especially in so far as new work involving the league in new expenditure is concerned, even if this work was contemplated by conventions or resolutions antedating the present session of the assembly:

Requests the council of the league and the governing body of the international labor office to see that work of this nature should be undertaken between the third and fourth assemblies only in cases of extreme urgency.

The assembly also requests the council of the league and the governing body of the international labor office to submit to the fourth assembly a statement of new work, involving new expenditure on the part of the league, undertaken in accordance with the conditions mentioned in the first paragraph.

Resolution agreed to.

RECOVERABLE EXPENDITURE

Mr. Adatci, Japan, submitted another resolution from the fourth committee reading as follows:

With regard to the decision of the council dated July 21, 1922, the fourth committee desires to express its full approval of the principle that expenditure incurred for special investigations in the particular interests of one or more members of the league shall be met by that or those members of the league.

Resolution carried.

DEFERRED PAY AND PENSIONS; PENSION TO DOCTOR PARDO'S CHILD

Mr. Adatci, Japan, brought forward two additional resolutions from the fourth committee which were as follows:

(a) The assembly:

Whereas, the fourth committee only received the report of the salaries adjustment committee on the subject of a deferred pay and pensions scheme for the secretariat and international labor office at its last meeting, two days before the close of the assembly;

Whereas, it was impossible in these circumstances to consider this question with the necessary care:

Decides to transmit the report that was submitted to it to the commission of control and requests the council to submit to the members a final report four months before the opening of the fourth session of the assembly.

(b) The assembly feels much sympathy for the case of Doctor Pardo, an official of the international labor office, who died while on a mission to Russia, leaving a young child in difficult circumstances. The assembly duly signifies its approval of the decision of the governing body of the international labor office, recommending that a sum equivalent to one-fourth of Doctor Pardo's salary should be devoted to the maintenance and education of his son.

The assembly decides to include for this purpose a sum of 7,500 francs in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Cavadzoni, Italy, observed that the scheme devised by the salaries adjustment committee was not acceptable to the fourth committee; that though the scheme was proposed late in the session, it might have been possible to have provided a certain payment by employees matched by an equal sum from the league, but the committee did not think this would be possible; that Great Britain, nevertheless, had raised the question at the first assembly and obtained an approval of the principle; that the second assembly had instructed a committee to devise a plan; that if no account were taken of what the first two assemblies had done a disquieting effect would be produced among the employees; that the third assembly ought to provide a pension scheme for the staff.

Mr. Zotlale, Denmark, agreed to the importance of a plan, saying that it meant, however, an expenditure of 750,000 francs a year and a very complicated system; that it had come before the fourth committee too late in the present session; that the assembly should send the report of the salaries adjustment committee to the commission of control and should invite the council to submit to league members a final report four months before the opening of the next assembly.

Resolutions adopted.

VALIDITY OF VOTE OF INCREASED CREDIT FOR INTELLECTUAL COOPERATION

Mr. Trygger, Sweden, said he questioned the validity of the vote of an increased credit for intellectual cooperation; that in his opinion the committee resolution should have been adopted unanimously under the terms of the covenant; that without the desire to raise objections he proposed the submission of the question to the council for examination.

The president supported this proposal, holding that it would be helpful to have the council's opinion on procedure to be followed in connection with budgetary questions.

Proposal approved by assembly.

Report of fourth committee adopted as a whole.

AMENDMENT TO ARTICLES 4 AND 7, RULES OF PROCEDURE

Mr. de Palacios, Spain, reporting for first committee, presented the resolution following:

(1) The following text shall be substituted for the original text of article 4, paragraph 1, and paragraph 2 (a) and (b):

1. The agenda shall be drawn up by the secretary general with the approval of the president of the council. The complete agenda shall be circulated to members as nearly as possible four months before the date fixed for the opening of the session.

2. The agenda of a general session shall include:

(a) A report on the work of the council since the last session, on the work of the secretariat, and on the measures taken to execute the decisions of the assembly.

Subparagraphs (c), (d), (e), (f) shall be, respectively, lettered (b), (c), (d).

(2) The following text shall be substituted for the original text of article 7:

1. The officers of the assembly shall consist of a president and of six vice presidents, together with the chairmen of the main committees of the assembly, who shall be ex-officio vice presidents of the assembly. These officers shall form the general committee.

2. The president shall be elected at the beginning of each session.

3. Until the election of the president, the president of the council shall act as president of the assembly.

4. The election of the vice presidents shall take place at one of the early meetings of the session.

Resolution adopted.

Twenty-fourth meeting Saturday, September 30, 1922, 10 a. m.

RATIFICATION BY POLAND OF CERTAIN AMENDMENTS TO COVENANT

The president announced that the Polish Government had ratified the amendments to the covenant of the league voted by the second assembly, except the amendment to article 6.

ASIA MINOR REFUGEES

The president notified the assembly that the following countries had contributed the following amounts for Asia Minor refugees: Great Britain, £50,000; Canada, £5,000; Norway, £1,000; Sweden, £1,000; New Zealand, £1,000; Denmark, £1,000; Greece, 1,000,000 drachmas—about £5,000; Spain, £2,000.

The president stated that Luxemburg had promised a donation.

PAN AMERICAN CONGRESS

Mr. Van Eysinga, Netherlands, submitted the following resolution, as reporter for second committee:

The assembly expresses a desire that at the next Pan American Congress the members of the League of Nations represented at the congress should call the attention of the latter to the work of the technical organizations of the League of Nations;

Expresses a desire that these members should consider the means by which any future action contemplated by the Pan American Congress in connection with any question which is being dealt with by the technical organizations of the League of Nations may, as far as possible, be carried on in cooperation with these organizations; and Recommends that, if necessary, the council should authorize the technical organizations to cooperate in any action of general interest which the Pan American Congress may decide to take.

Mr. Reynald, France, expressed the entire concurrence of the French delegation in this proposal.

Resolution adopted.

ALLOCATION OF EXPENSES OF LEAGUE

Mr. de Palacios, Spain, reporting for first committee, submitted a resolution as follows:

The assembly, considering that it is desirable to modify as soon as possible the system of allocation of the expenses of the League of Nations among its members and to replace the scale of the Universal Postal Union now in force by a more just and equitable scale;

And considering that the scale annexed to the present resolution has been recognized by general consent as establishing a more just and equitable system for the allocation of said expenses, and that it is recognized to secure the immediate application of this scale as a provisional measure:

Approves the application of the above-mentioned scale for the allocation of the said expenses for the year 1923.

The assembly requests the council to ask the committee for the allocation of expenses, presided over by Mr. Reveillaud, to continue its researches with a view to preparing a definitive scale which may be submitted to a subsequent assembly. The assembly leaves it to the council to modify the composition of the committee as it thinks desirable.

It begs the council to notify the members of the League of Nations that it is no longer to continue the ratification of the amendments No. 2 and No. 3 of article 6, voted by the assembly of 1921, but on the other hand to urge them to ratify the first amendment as soon as possible.

ANNEX

SCALE FOR ALLOCATION OF EXPENSES FOR 1923 UNDER ABOVE RESOLUTION

Albania, 1 unit; Argentina (subject to observation by Argentine Government), 35 units; Australia, 26; Austria, 1; Belgium, 15; Bolivia, 5; Brazil, 35; British Empire, 95; Bulgaria, 7; Canada, 35; Chile, 15; China, 65; Colombia, 7; Costa Rica, 1; Cuba, 9; Czechoslovakia, 35; Denmark, 12; Estonia, 3; Finland, 10; France, 78; Greece, 10; Guatemala, 1; Haiti, 2; Honduras, 1; Hungary, 4; India, 65, Italy, 61; Japan, 73; Latvia, 3; Liberia, 1; Lithuania, 4; Luxemburg, 1; Netherlands, 20; New Zealand, 10; Nicaragua, 1; Norway, 11; Panama, 1; Paraguay, 1; Persia, 6; Peru, 10; Poland, 25; Portugal, 10; Rumania, 31; Salvador, 1; Serb-Croat-Slovene State, 26; Siam, 10; South Africa, 15; Spain, 40; Sweden, 18; Switzerland, 15; Uruguay, 7; Venezuela, 5.

Mr. Van Eysinga, Netherlands, announced the support of the resolution by the Netherlands delegation because it would assist the league in overcoming its financial difficulties, and urged each delegation to endeavor by all possible means to persuade its government to follow the new scale. He proposed, he continued, to strengthen the resolution by offering as a substitute for the words "Considering that it is desirable," the words "Considering that the financial requirements of the League of Nations render it imperatively necessary," and so forth.

Mr. de Torriente, Cuba, announced that he would not vote, because his government had instructed him not to accept this year an increase in Cuba's contribution, but that he would ask his government to reconsider this action if possible.

Resolution, as modified by Mr. Espingo's amendment, adopted.

ELECTION OF NONPERMANENT MEMBERS OF COUNCIL

Under rules of procedure adopted at a previous meeting the assembly proceeded to elect the nonpermanent members of the council.

The president appointed Prince Arfa-Ed-Dowleh, Persia; Doctor Pusta, Estonia; and Mr. Urrutea, Colombia, to act as tellers.

The vote was taken by roll call and secret ballot, and the secretary general proceeded to count the votes.

The president announced the result as follows:

States voting: Albania, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, British Empire, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Hungary, India, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Liberia, Lithuania, Luxemburg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Persia, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Serb-Croat-Slovene State, Siam, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Uruguay, and Venezuela.

States absent: Argentine Republic, Bolivia, Nicaragua, Peru, and Salvador.

Number of votes cast, 46.

Absolute majority required, 24.

Votes obtained by states were as follows: Brazil, 42; Spain, 40; Uruguay, 40; Belgium, 36; Sweden, 35; China, 27; Serb-Croat-Slovene State, 15; Portugal, 12; Persia, 9; Colombia, 5; Switzerland, 3; India, 2; Norway, 2; Denmark, 1; Czechoslovakia, 1; Haiti, 1; Chile, 1; Siam, 1; Netherlands, 1; Rumania, 1; and Austria, 1.

The president announced that Brazil, Spain, Uruguay, Belgium, Sweden, and China, having obtained an absolute majority of votes required, had been elected nonpermanent members of the council.

Twenty-fifth meeting, Saturday, September 30, 1922, 3 p. m.

FINANCIAL REHABILITATION OF AUSTRIA—STATEMENT BY LORD BALFOUR ON BEHALF OF COUNCIL

The president announced that the council, which had been studying the Austrian question during the last few days, desire to report to the assembly on this subject through its reporter, Lord Balfour, and that, after Lord Balfour's address, the Austrian delegate would be requested to speak.

Lord Balfour said the Austrian problem had not been entirely solved, but much was being accomplished; that the present was not the first effort the league had made at the invitation of the powers to assist Austria; that the essential part of the first scheme was the release of liens held by a large number of nations, and these were so slowly released that when the last was lifted it was too late, the economic condition of Austria having sunk so low that when the league was asked a second time to intervene, the task was inevitably harder and more complicated.

He asserted that if Austria was to secure the needed credit, other nations must guarantee it; that the council and subcommittee of the council on Austria were agreed on that; that four nations had each agreed to take 20 per cent of the total loan required to enable Austria to pay her way during the two years which the council's financial advisers held must elapse before she could balance her budget, the total amount needed being something over 500,000,000 gold crowns; that he had great hope that nations could be found to take the 20 per cent still unsubscribed; that the method in view was the supply of the money by individual lenders, the subscribing nations guaranteeing payment.

He then explained that internal reforms must be brought about if the loans were to be had; that large sums had been contributed to Austria during the last two disastrous years, but they had under the existing system no more than sufficed to enable Austria to get along, somehow or another, from day to day; that these contributions did not contain in themselves a single element of permanence and helped in no way to build a permanent credit basis for Austria.

Mr. Pouilly-Dietrichstein, Austria, expressed the gratitude of Austria to the league, and especially to the members of the council, for having undertaken this task, which he sincerely trusted would be successful. He also thanked the nations which had already agreed to guarantee the greater part of the proposed loan, naming Belgium as one of the additional nations which he had learned would take the remainder of the loan, and thanking her also. He said he had hoped the transaction could have been completed while the assembly was in session, but this was not practicable.

Lord Cecil asked, that if the project failed would there be a full, public statement of all the negotiations. Lord Balfour said he could not believe failure possible, but, if it came, all the documents and facts would be made public; that the present plan consisted in the main of providing the guaranteed loan; of seeing that it was properly expended in Austria and in cooperation with the Austrian Government; of insuring that it should only be expended in Austria if, accompanying the expenditure, those great reforms were carried into effect, which were absolutely necessary to Austria's recovery; that Austrian sovereignty was to be in no way impaired; that when the plan was completed all the documents connected with the negotiations and the entire transaction would be laid before a public meeting of the council; that with the plan in operation there was no reason why Austria should not recover; that the benefits of the plan would reach Europe and the world, and its success would be an answer to the charge that the league could not deal with the economic affairs of the world; that there was not the least desire or intention of keeping back from the league or the public all the details and all the data on which the council's work in the Austrian matter was based.

Mr. Bourgeois, France, said that the council in dealing with the Austrian question had applied the highest and best principles, principles underlying the league, and asked that the meeting end with a demonstration of confidence and faith. He was greeted with loud and prolonged applause.

In closing this, the last meeting of the third assembly, the president, Mr. Edwards, said, among other things, that he thanked Switzerland not only for what she had done for the league but for the living example she offered to the world of a close union which could be attained by a common ideal, even though there was no community of race, of religion, or of language. He thanked both Switzerland and Geneva for hospitalities extended. He said that the league was growing day by day, obtaining increased prestige and influence, and winning the confidence of the peoples; that in the first year of its existence the league was composed only of the countries which had been Allies or neutrals in the Great War; that now there were but two of the former enemies of the Allies that had not asked for admission; that every country that had wished to join was now a member; that the doctrine proclaimed by the Argentine Republic at the first assembly, the doctrine of the universality of the league, was being consecrated by the facts that, on account of the close fraternal relations between his country and Argentina, he witnessed with satisfaction the virtual triumph of the Argentine doctrine that would mark an epoch in the history and development of the league.

He pointed out that the third assembly had developed the master thought of the covenant, which sought the peace of nations by every possible avenue, by offering to states the procedure of conciliation, a new mechanism, suggested by the Scandinavian nations, impregnated with the basic idea that the league is not a superstate but a center where all the good will and the peaceful desires of all nations can converge and meet. He referred to the admission of Hungary to the league as one of the happy events of the third assembly.

He concluded with these words:

Ladies and gentlemen, we have reached the third milestone in the journey of our institution. We have nothing with which to reproach ourselves, much to be proud of, and still more to expect. Let us have faith in the destinies of the league, because all that is great, all that seeks the good of mankind and tends toward perfection is imperishable. The origin of humanity is divine, and its end in the beyond is divine also. Perfection, therefore, must be its goal.

When the whirlwind has passed—the hate-laden cyclone loosed over the world by the breath of the Great War—then will the aims and the mechanism of the covenant be more clearly perceived and the serene and limpid atmosphere in which the league has its being become more apparent. We shall see, too, the souls of all the nations of the earth inspired with the ideal of cooperation, yearning to be immortalized, like the souls of individuals—in faith, hope, and charity.

In another moment we shall have left this hall, and the charge with which you have honored me by electing me as your president will have come to an end. I can not depart without assuring you that to the gratitude which I feel for the great trust you have reposed in me is now added a strong sense of obligation for your indulgence. I beg you to pardon, ladies and gentlemen, the errors I may have committed in consideration of my great willingness to serve you and my not less great desire to continue serving you wherever and whenever occasion may arise. I cease now to be your president, but all my life I wish to be your friend. [Loud and prolonged applause, the whole assembly rising to its feet.]

Ladies and gentlemen, I declare the third assembly of the League of Nations at an end.

During the delivery of Mr. SHEPPARD's speech—

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield for a question.

Mr. LEWIS. It is evident to us all who are attentive in the Senate that the Senator from Texas is contributing literally a volume of history which, in its accuracy and detail, indicating such vast research, will hereafter be referred to as a book of review and reference. But I beg to inform him that when, something like two years ago, I was in Palestine, there was a movement on the part of Britain, as published, to withdraw that provision which gave to each of the Jewish assemblages, wherever they came from, the right to choose their own citizenship.

I may inform my eminent friend, who no doubt knows the fact, that President Wilson was responsible for that very wise provision which enabled the American Jew in that locality to continue his citizenship as an American. But, as I remarked a moment ago, a year and a half, perhaps two years ago, in Palestine a great commotion was created, to the point of actual riots, while I was present, regrettably having to witness such, because England threatened, through her officials then there, to withdraw the Balfour declaration, and to lay down the doctrine that those who were taking advantage of the document which the able Senator has so carefully compiled and presented should be citizens of Great Britain.

I would ask the Senator if he knows whether that has been changed, and whether they still adhere to the privilege which we had established of allowing Americans to remain as Americans, instead of making them citizens of Great Britain while living in Palestine.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think they have been allowed to remain as Americans. I thank the Senator for his most interesting contribution.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed his speech. After speaking for some time—

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHUYLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield for a question.

Mr. MOSES. I ask the Senator whether he has now fully discussed the Macedonian aspect of the problem?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think so.

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator's learned disquisition has so close a relation to a question now before the Senate that I wondered whether, in discussing the Macedonian question, he intended to discuss the details of the Bechtold proposals, the Mergsted program, the protocol of Cettigne, the Saloniki manifesto, and those other matters which intimately concern the activities of the comitadjis in Macedonia at the time of which the Senator is speaking; because of course in a discussion of this subject, if the Senator will permit me further, especially in relation to its intimacy with the question before the Senate, I hope the Senator will not fail to enlighten us with reference to some of these topics which I have suggested, since necessarily, in the course of my activities prior to coming into the Senate, I happened to have known something about some of these things which I have mentioned. But evidently the Senator can fill in the interstices in my information so completely that I hope he will not fail to do so as the discussion goes forward.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Macedonia is related to this question, because the drys have heard the cry from Macedonia.

Mr. MOSES. I never understood that it was from that group of the population that the cry went up to "come over into Macedonia and help us."

Mr. SHEPPARD. The women and children are calling for help.

Mr. MOSES. I thought that cry came up from quite another portion of the globe.

Mr. SHEPPARD. So it does; but it comes from every part of the globe where people want help in conquering evils.

Mr. MOSES. And it is still articulate?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is still articulate. The Senator is familiar with the Macedonian problem by virtue of his having been a distinguished and an able Minister to Greece.

Mr. MOSES. I thank the Senator very much, because when I now have to take up the pen, I would like to have accurate information upon those topics as to which I am now somewhat deficient.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am sure that the able manner in which the Senator conducted his mission to Greece has given him the interest which he has expressed in this phase of the discussion, and I thank him for his suggestion.

Mr. MOSES. If I may be equally complimentary to the Senator from Texas, may I say that the research shown to have been made in the preparation of the address with which he is now regaling the Senate assures me that I will have complete and accurate information from him before the discussion is over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall endeavor to supply that information.

During the delivery of Mr. SHEPPARD's speech—

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield; but I ask unanimous consent that all colloquies occurring in the course of my address be placed at the end of my speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to be offensive or rude to the Senator from Texas. May I point out, however, that we have only 16 legislative days left of this Congress; that there are 12,000,000 people out of employment, 5,000 banks have failed, there is economic chaos from one end of the Nation to the other, and as long as we take up these extraneous matters we can not do a thing for the distress of the country.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The country will also be frightfully injured if the liquor traffic is ever restored.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time—

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. I want to say preliminarily that no one concedes more than does the Senator from Maryland the sincerity and idealistic motives of the Senator from Texas. May I point out to him, however, that this is not a question of whether we shall have liquor or no liquor. This is a question as to whether or not the American people have a right to pass upon the form of government under which they live. They can either adopt it or reject it; but the Senator from Texas, by the very long oration he is delivering—which has now gone on for an hour and a half and promises to go for at least another hour and a half—is denying to the people of America the right to alter or amend the form of government under which they live.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This motion is a step toward the return of the liquor traffic. I am fighting it at every step, and I feel justified in doing so.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed his speech. After having spoken for a few moments—

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he goes on with the next table? Then I will not bother him any more.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I admit that the Senator is sincere and wishes to fight this motion; but may I again point out to him that he is fighting it at the expense of the institution we call the people; that they can not, notwithstanding they may want to do so, amend the Constitution because the Senator from Texas will not allow them the opportunity to pass upon it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I am in favor of the people's rule. Ordinarily, I am in favor of the submission of any question when a substantial number of the people desire the question submitted. National prohibition, however, was adopted by the States in 1920, only 13 years ago. Powerful wet minorities have not permitted it to have a fair trial. That is why I am not in favor of submitting now the question of its repeal. It would be unfair to prohibition and to the people to submit the question at this time.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question before resuming his speech?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. DILL. In the light of the fact that we are in the midst of what is probably the greatest panic in history, with great banks crashing and one State now with all of its banks closed, does not the Senator from Texas think it is the height of foolishness to take up a controversial question such as this, when it is going to take days of debate even to get the motion voted upon?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly; and the Senator from Wisconsin ought to withdraw it. I shall stop speaking if he will withdraw it.

Mr. DILL. I am glad to know that the Senator has that spirit.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed his speech. After speaking for some time—

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. For a question.

Mr. BLAINE. So that I may ask unanimous consent?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No.

Mr. BLAINE. Then may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator may ask me a question.

Mr. BLAINE. How long does the Senator think he may continue with his debate on the pending motion?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That depends on how long the spirit moves me. I can not tell how long I may speak when I am under the inspiration of a sense of duty.

Mr. BLAINE. It may be indefinitely?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It might be indefinitely.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator does not anticipate concluding before 6 o'clock?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not.

Mr. BLAINE. Or before 10 o'clock?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not; if I can hold out.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

During the delivery of Mr. SHEPPARD's speech—

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator from Texas yields for an insertion in the RECORD by unanimous consent, will he lose the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not if it is done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHEPPARD. By unanimous consent, I yield if it does not take me off the floor. I ask to have the matter inserted at the conclusion of my speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be done.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the address delivered last night by the President of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of Tuesday, February 14, 1933]

TEXT OF PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS POINTING ROAD TO WORLD ECONOMIC RECOVERY

It is a pleasure for me to address you upon the day when this club and our countrymen of all faiths throughout the land are paying tribute to the memory of Abraham Lincoln. We to-night also pay tribute to him as founder of the Republican Party and the inspirer of its ideals. He, more than any other man, created the living, virile organization which has given responsible interpretation of those ideals to our people in each succeeding generation. The party has brought these ideals to realization in government and development of a great nation. An organization that can show more than 15,000,000 adherents after 70 years—an irreducible minimum in the reaction from the worst depression the world has ever seen—is, indeed, testimony to the virility of the principles which Lincoln enunciated.

Those principles, the fiber and the determination of the party, assure that it will be recalled to power by the American people. One of the sure guaranties that this will be so was the extraordinary support of the youth of the country in the last campaign. There has never been a time in the history of the party when it received such a large adherence of young men and women, when they exerted themselves with such capable organization, devotion, and effort as they did in that campaign. It is to them that the party must look. It is in their idealism, their energy, and their vitality that the Republican Party can take assured hope for the future.

The people determined the election. Those of us who believe in the most basic principle insisted upon by Abraham Lincoln—the transcendent importance of popular government—have no complaint. We accept and, as Americans, will continue wholeheartedly to do our part in promoting the well-being of the country. Our party can truly feel that we have held the faith; that we shall do so in the future is our solemn responsibility.

It has ever been the party of constructive action. The Republican Party will support the new administration in every measure which will promote public welfare. It must and will be vigilant in opposing those which are harmful.

PARTISANSHIP PUT ASIDE

My purpose is not to speak upon divided issues on this occasion; rather it is to discuss matters concerning which there should be no partisanship.

Further steps toward economic recovery is the urgent problem before the entire world. Ceaseless effort must be directed to restoration of confidence, the vanquishing of fear and apprehension, and thus the release of the recuperative spirit of the world.

It is therefore my purpose to discuss some of the broad measures which confront us in reaching further to the roots of this tragic disturbance, particularly in the field of foreign relations. While we have many concerns in the domestic field, we must realize that so long as we engage in the export and import of goods and in financial activities abroad our price levels and credit system, our employment, and, above all, our fears will be greatly affected by foreign influences.

During the last two years the crash of one foreign nation after another under direct and indirect war inheritances has dominated our whole economic life. The time has now come when nations must accept, in self-interest no less than in altruism, the obligations to cooperate in achieving world stability, so mankind may again resume the march of progress. Daily it becomes more certain that the next great constructive step in remedy of the illimitable human suffering from this depression lies in the international field. It is in that field where the tide of prices can be most surely and quickly turned and the tragic despair of unemployment, agriculture, and business transformed to hope and confidence.

Economic degeneration is always a series of vicious cycles of cause and effect. Whatever the causes may be, we must grasp these cycles at some segment and deal with them. Perhaps it would add clarity to the position I wish to make later if I should shortly follow through the cycle of financial failure which has at least in part taken place in countries abroad.

TRACES CYCLES OF COLLAPSE

Many countries in addition to the other pressures of the depression were overburdened with debt and obligations from the World War or from excessive borrowing from abroad for rehabilitation or expansion. Many created or added to their difficulties through unbalanced budgets due to vast social programs or armament, finally reaching the point where collapse in governmental credit was inevitable. Foreigners in fear withdrew their deposits in such countries. Citizens in fright exported their capital. The result was a large movement of gold from such a country followed by the immediate undermining of confidence in its currency and its credit system. Runs on its banks ensued. Restrictions were imposed upon exchange to stop the flight of capital. Barriers were erected against the imports and commodities in endeavor to reduce the spending of her citizens for foreign goods and in an effort to establish equilibrium in exchange and retention of their gold reserves. Failure in such efforts resulted in abandonment of the gold standard.

Currency depreciation, stagnation of their industries, increase in their unemployment, and further shrinkage in consumption of world goods again and again affected all other nations. Depreciated currencies gave some nations the hope to manufacture goods more cheaply than their neighbors and thus to rehabilitate their financial position by invasion of the markets of other nations. Those nations in turn have sought to protect themselves by erecting barriers until to-day as the result of such financial breakdown we are in the presence of an incipient outbreak of economic war in the world with the weapons of depreciated currencies, artificial barriers to trade by quotas, reciprocal trade agreements, discriminations, nationalistic campaigns to consume home-made goods, and a score of tactics each of which can be justified for the moment, but each of which adds to world confusion and dangers.

Out of the storm center of Europe this devastation has spread until, if we survey the world situation at the present moment, we find some 44 countries which have placed restrictions upon the movement of gold and exchange or are otherwise definitely off of the gold standard. In practically all of them these actions have within the last 12 months been accompanied by new restrictions upon imports in an endeavor to hold or attract gold or to give some stability to currencies.

These depreciations of currency and regulations of exchange and restrictions of imports originated as defense measures by nations to meet their domestic financial difficulties. But a new phase is now developing among these nations—that is, the rapid degeneration into economic war which threatens to engulf the world. The imperative call to the world to-day is to prevent this war.

AMERICA'S PART IN CHECKING CHAOS

Ever since the storm began in Europe the United States has held stanchly to the gold standard. In the present setting of depreciated currencies and in the light of differences in costs of production our tariffs are below those of most countries; we have held free from quotas, preferences, discriminations among nations. We have thereby maintained one Gibraltar of stability in the world and contributed to check the movement to chaos.

We are ourselves now confronted with an unnatural movement of goods from the lowered costs and standards of countries of depreciated currencies, which daily increase our unemployment and our difficulties. We are confronted with discriminatory actions and barriers stifling our agricultural and other markets. We will be ourselves forced to defensive action to protect ourselves unless this mad race is stopped. We must not be the major victim of it all.

In all this competition of degeneration, these beginnings of economic war between scores of nations, we see a gradual shrinkage in demand for international commodities throughout the world and continuing fall of prices in terms of gold. From falling prices and unemployment we have at once the inability of debtors to meet their obligations to their creditors, the dispossession of people from their farms and homes and businesses.

If the world is to secure economic peace, if it is to turn in the tide of degeneration, if it is to restore the functioning of the production and distribution systems of the world, it must start somewhere to break these vicious fiscal and financial circles. I am convinced that the first point of attack is to secure assured greater stability in the currencies of the important commercial nations. Without such stability the continued results of uncertainty, the destruction of confidence by currency fluctuations, exchange controls, and artificial import restrictions can not be overcome but will continue to increase. With effective stability of currencies these dangers can be at once relaxed. I am not unaware that currency instability is both a cause and an effect in the vicious cycle, but we must start somewhere.

GOLD'S RELATION TO SITUATION

This brings me to a phase which has gradually developed during the past months, and that is the reactions and relation of gold itself upon this situation. For, independent of other causes of degeneration, I am convinced that the circumstances which surround this commodity are contributing to drive nations to these interferences with free commerce and to other destructive artificialities.

Outside minor use in the arts there are two dominant uses of gold. First, the important commercial nations have builded their domestic currency and credit systems upon a foundation of convertibility into gold. Secondly, gold is the most acceptable of all commodities in international payments. Even the nations that have abandoned the gold standard must still depend upon gold for this purpose. It is true that nations must in the long run balance their international trade by goods, services, or investments, but in the intermediate ebb and flow balances must still be settled by the use of gold.

In all the welter of discussion over these problems we find some who are maintaining that the world has outgrown the use of gold as a basis of currency and exchange. We can all agree that gold as a commodity of universal exchange has not worked perfectly in the face of this great economic eruption. But we have to remember that it is a commodity the value of which is enshrined in human instincts for over 10,000 years. The time may come when the world can safely abandon its use altogether for these purposes, but it has not yet reached that point.

It may be that by theoretically managed currencies some form of stability may be found a score or two years hence, but we have no time to wait. They are subject to great human fallibilities. Sooner or later political pressure of special groups and interests will direct their use. But in any event it would take many years' demonstration to convince men that a nongold currency would certainly a year hence be worth what he paid for it to-day.

It is noticeable that most of the nations off the gold standard are even to-day seeking to increase their gold reserves. In the view of many economists these measures and the restrictions which have been placed on the movement of gold or exchange by twoscore of nations have created the same practical effect as if there were a scarcity of gold in the world. That while there has in the last few years been a very large increase in the quantity of visible gold in the possession of institutions and governments, the effect of all these regulatory actions by governments attempting to protect their gold reserves from runs and flights of capital and their attempts to increase their supply has been to divide the gold of the world into twoscore of pockets and in many of them to freeze it from full freedom of action. In other words, this view holds that we are to-day not dealing with a shortage of the commodity; we are dealing with its being partly immobilized in its functioning.

"RUNS" ON A WORLD-WIDE SCALE

To add to the confusion another phenomenon of the gold situation has increased disturbances and wrought havoc; that is, the effect of waves of fear and apprehension. We have a parallel in nations to an unreasoning panic run on a bank. The fears and apprehensions directed in turn to the stability of first one nation and then another have caused withdrawal of foreign balances from a particular nation, followed by flights of capital, through purchases of exchange by its own citizens seeking refuge and security for their property.

These movements are followed by large flows of gold to meet exchange demands, thus undermining the domestic currency and credit system of the victim nation and leading to an unnatural piling up of gold in some nation temporarily considered safe. These movements, themselves in large degree unwarranted, have forced some nations off the gold standard that could otherwise have maintained their position. We ourselves a year ago suffered from the effects of such a movement. Thus a mass of the gold dashing hither and yon from one nation to another, seeking maximum safety, has acted like a cannon loose on the deck of the world in a storm.

In the meantime the currencies of the world are fluctuating spasmodically. Countries off of the gold standard are in reality suffering from their managed paper currencies by reason of the fact that men are unable to make contracts for the future with security, and that insecurity itself again dries up enterprise, business, employment, consumption of goods, and further causes reductions of prices. Other nations to hold their own are attempting to compete in destruction.

Broadly, the solution lies in the reestablishment of confidence. That confidence can not be reestablished by the abandonment of gold as a standard in the world. So far as the human race has yet developed and established its methods and systems of stable exchange, that solution can only be found now and found quickly through the reestablishment of gold standards among important nations. The huge gold reserves of the world can be made to function in relation to currencies, standards of value, and exchange. And I say with emphasis that I am not proposing this as a favor to the United States. It is the need of the whole world. The United States is so situated that it can protect itself better than almost any country on earth.

Nor is it necessary from an international point of view that those nations who have been forced off the gold standard shall be again restored to former gold values. It will suffice if it only is fixed. From this source are the principal hopes for restoring world confidence and reversing the growing barriers to the movement of goods, and making possible the security in trade which will again revive a demand for such goods. To do this it is necessary to have strong and courageous action on the part of the leading commercial nations. If some sort of international financial action is necessary to enable central banks to cooperate for the purpose of stabilizing currencies, nations should have no hesitation in joining in such an operation under proper safeguards. If some part of the debt payments to us could be set aside from temporary use for this purpose, we should not hesitate to do so. At the same time the world should endeavor to find a place for silver, at least in enlarged subsidiary coinage.

If the major nations will enter the road leading to the early reestablishment of the gold standard, then and then only can the abnormal barriers to trade, the quotas, preferences, discriminatory agreements, and tariffs which exceed the differences in costs of production between nations be removed, uniform trade privileges among all nations be reestablished, and the threat of economic war averted.

A reasonable period of comparative stability in the world's currencies would repay the cost of such effort a hundred times over in the increase of consumption, the increase of employment, the lessening of the difficulties of debtors throughout the land, with the avoidance of millions of tragedies. The world would quickly see a renewed movement of goods and would have an immediate rise in prices everywhere, thereby bringing immediate relief to the whole economic system.

I do not underestimate the difficulties nor the vast fiscal and financial problems which lie behind the restoration of stability and economic peace. Bold action alone can succeed. The alternative to such constructive action is a condition too grave to be contemplated in passive acceptance.

THREE ROADS AHEAD FOR AMERICA

The American people will soon be at the fork of three roads. The first is the highway of cooperation among nations, thereby to remove the obstructions to world consumption and rising prices. This road leads to real stability, to expanding standard of living, to a resumption of the march of progress by all peoples. It is to-day the immediate road to relief of agriculture and unemployment, not alone for us but the entire world.

The second road is to rely upon our high degree of national self-containment, to increase our tariffs, to create quotas and discriminations, and to engage in definite methods of curtailment of production of agricultural and other products and thus to secure a larger measure of economic isolation from world influences. It would be a long road of readjustments into unknown and uncertain fields. But it may be necessary if the first way out is closed to us. Some measures may be necessary pending cooperative conclusions with other nations.

The third road is that we inflate our currency, consequently abandon the gold standard, and with our depreciated currency attempt to enter a world economic war, with the certainty that leads to complete destruction, both at home and abroad.

The first road can only be undertaken by the cooperation among all important nations. Last April, in conjunction with the leaders of Europe, our Government developed the idea of a world economic conference to deal with these questions. It is unfortunate that the delay of events in Europe and the election in the United States necessarily postponed the convening of that conference. It has been further delayed by the change of our administration.

BASIS FOR COOPERATION

The question naturally arises whether other nations will cooperate to restore world confidence, stability, and economic peace. In this connection, I trust the American people will not be misled or influenced by the ceaseless stream of foreign propaganda that cancellation of war debts would give this international relief and remedy. That is not true. These debts are but a segment of the problem. Their world-trade importance is being exaggerated.

In this respect, I stated some months ago, the American people can well contend that most of the debtor countries have the capacity to raise these annual amounts from their taxpayers, as witness the fact that in most cases the payments to us amount to less than one-third of the military expenditures of each country. But at the same time we can well realize that in some instances the transfer of these sums may gravely disturb their currency or international exchanges. But if we are asked for sacrifices because of such injury we should have assurances of cooperation that will positively result in monetary stability and the restoration of world prosperity. If we are asked for sacrifices because of incapacity to pay, we should have tangible compensation in restoration of our proportion of their agricultural and other imports.

The world should have relief from the sore burden of armaments. If they are unwilling to meet us in these fields, this Nation, whether you or I like it or not, will be driven by our own internal forces more and more to its own self-containment and isolation, as harmful to the world and as little satisfactory to us as this course may be.

But this is the counsel of despair. The full need of prosperity among nations can not be builded upon mutual impoverishment. It is to the interest of the world to join in bold and courageous action which will bring about economic peace—in which the benefits to the rest of the world are as great as to us—and we should cooperate to the full. Any other course in the world to-day endangers civilization itself. Unless the world takes heed it will find that it has lost its standards of living and culture, not for a few years of depression but for generations.

Despite many discouragements, the world has shown an increasing ability in establishment of effective agencies in the solution of many controversies which might have led to war. When we compare the attitude of nations toward each other which existed 20 years ago with that of to-day, we can say that there have been developed both the spirit and the method of cooperation in the prevention of war which gives profound hope of the future.

WORK TOGETHER FOR MUTUAL GOOD

In its broad light the problem before the world to-day is to work together to prevent the dangers of developing economic conflict—to secure economic peace. That is a field in which the world can cooperate even more easily than in the field of prevention of war, because there is involved in it no background of century-old controversies, injustices, or hates. The problems in that economic field contain less of the imponderables and more of the concrete. There is involved in it the most important and appealing self-interest of every nation. Through such cooperation the world can mitigate the forces which are destroying the systems of production and distribution upon the maintenance of which its gigantic population is dependent.

There is a driving force before the eyes of every statesman in the misery and suffering which have infected every nation. Throughout the world the people are distraught with unemployment; the decline of prices which has plunged farmers into despair; the loss of homes, of savings and provisions for old age. Therefore, just as there is an obligation amongst nations to engage in every possible step for the prevention of war itself, there is before us to-day the necessity for world cooperation to prevent economic warfare. And who can say but the greatest act in prevention of war is to allay economic friction.

On our side this problem is not to be solved by partisan action but by national unity. Whatever our differences of view may be on domestic policies, the welfare of the American people rests upon solidarity before the world, not merely in resisting proposals which would weaken the United States and the world, but solidarity in cooperation with other nations in strengthening the whole economic fabric of the world. These problems are not insoluble. There is a latent, earnest, and underlying purpose on the part of all nations to find their solution. Of our own determination there should be no question.

CONFIDENCE MAIN PROBLEM

The problem before the world is to restore confidence and hope by the release of the strong, natural forces of recovery which are inherent in this civilization. Civilization is the history of surmounted difficulties.

We of this world to-day are of the same strain as our fathers who builded this civilization. They passed through most terrible conflicts. They met many great depressions.

They created a state of human well-being in normal times such as the world has never seen. The next forward step is as great as any in history. It is that we perpetuate the welfare of mankind through the immense objectives of world recovery and world peace.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION—REPEAL OF PROHIBITION

The Senate resumed the consideration of Mr. BLAINE'S motion to consider Senate Joint Resolution 211.

Mr. SHEPPARD continued his speech. After some time, when commenting on the liquor traffic, he said:

One of the principal reasons for my belief in the league is the fact that it has an active and effective bureau for the control of the liquor traffic. Some of the most instructive utterances on the effect of alcohol, especially on backward peoples, can be found in the proceedings of the league.

Mr. SHEPPARD continued his speech. After some time—

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I want to offer a unanimous-consent agreement which will not take the Senator from the floor. I ask unanimous consent that when we conclude our work to-day the Senate shall recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be entered.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to my friend from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator from Texas if under the conditions I am about to state he will not yield the floor? I have polled most of the so-called wet Members of the Senate, and, with one exception, those with whom I have talked will vote to support a motion to lay the proposition that is now pending on the table, which will kill it. We are anxious to have it killed. I should like the privilege if the Senator from Texas will yield the floor, in absolute good faith, believing the motion will be killed, to make a short 10-minute statement, at the conclusion of which I will move to lay the pending motion on the table.

I will ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], who is also opposed to this motion, if he would object to having it killed now?

Mr. BROOKHART. What motion?

Mr. TYDINGS. The motion to take up the joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment, and kill it?

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator means to kill it by moving to lay it on the table?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I should like to have it understood that this proceeding is by unanimous consent.

Mr. BROOKHART. Would it take the Senator from Texas from the floor if the motion were lost?

Mr. TYDINGS. No, indeed.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I repeat, that this proceeding is all by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will so hold.

Mr. BLAINE. My parliamentary inquiry is if the motion is made will the Senator from Texas lose the floor?

Mr. BROOKHART. If he does not lose the floor, I have no objection.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would not want the Senator from Texas to lose the floor if my motion failed to be agreed to, but may I say, Mr. President, that I will make the motion in absolute good faith, believing, after conferring with most of the so-called wets with whom I have been able to talk, that the motion will be adopted, and then we may proceed with the business of the session. If the Senator from Texas will yield for 10 minutes, I will be glad to make the motion without taking him from the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLAINE. Can the Senator from Maryland enter into a unanimous-consent agreement with himself and the Senator from Texas that the Senator from Texas will not lose the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not regard that as a parliamentary inquiry; that is a matter of practical parliamentary procedure. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall desist for the present, and, if the motion shall not be adopted, I shall take the floor again.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not sure that the Senator from Texas can yield the floor for the purpose of having a motion made, and can then regain it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If I yield the floor for that purpose, I may be recognized a second time, may I not, in my own right?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair recognizes the Senator; yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Chair, I am sure, will recognize me before there shall be a final vote.

Mr. BROOKHART. As I understand, if the Senator yields for the purpose of submitting a unanimous-consent request that will not take him off the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I want to make a motion to lay on the table.

Mr. BROOKHART. Well, that can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Just a minute. The Senator from Texas still has the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Where?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLAINE. What is and who is before the Senate? Who has the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas has the floor. The Senator from Texas insists that he may yield the floor to the Senator from Maryland for the purpose of making a motion, and the Senator from Texas insists that he may thereupon regain the floor. The Chair rules that he may regain the floor if he gets recognition from the Chair; otherwise not.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Just a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, my confidence in the sense of fairness of the Chair is such that I shall take my chances on getting recognition again, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas, being adventurous, yields the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest the absence of a quorum, if the Senator will permit me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield for that purpose?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Austin | Couzens | La Follette | Sheppard |
| Bailey | Dale | Lewis | Shipstead |
| Bankhead | Davis | McGill | Shortridge |
| Barbour | Dickinson | McKellar | Smith |
| Barkley | Dill | McNary | Smoot |
| Bingham | Fess | Moses | Steiwer |
| Black | Frazier | Neely | Swanson |
| Blaine | George | Norbeck | Thomas, Okla. |
| Bratton | Glass | Norris | Townsend |
| Brookhart | Gore | Nye | Trammell |
| Bulow | Hale | Oddie | Tydings |
| Byrnes | Harrison | Pittman | Vandenberg |
| Capper | Hatfield | Reed | Wagner |
| Clark | Hayden | Reynolds | Walcott |
| Connally | Hebert | Robinson, Ark. | Walsh, Mass. |
| Coolidge | Kean | Robinson, Ind. | Watson |
| Copeland | Kendrick | Russell | White |
| Costigan | King | Schuyler | |

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE].

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I desire to make a very short statement, at the conclusion of which I shall make a motion to lay upon the table the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE].

No business has been transacted in the Senate to-day. We have fourteen and a half days of this session left, with seven appropriation bills yet to be acted upon, with unemployment relief yet to come before us, and many other major measures; and obviously there is not sufficient time to act upon them all.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] has been speaking for several hours. When he concludes, I understand that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] has a 5-hour speech, and that other Senators are prepared to filibuster against this joint resolution.

It is absolutely asinine, in my opinion, with only fourteen and a half days remaining, with important legislation to be considered, to sit here while one or two Senators talk about the League of Nations and other things that have nothing to do with this depression; and, mark you, that upon a day on which 540 banks closed in a single State; that at a time when 12,000,000 people are out of employment, when 5,000 banks have failed, when a million farms have been thrown under the auctioneer's hammer. At such a time we can not even get this proposition to a point where we can vote upon it, because of obstructive tactics.

I will ask my friend the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] whether he is not ready to vote now, without further debate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I most certainly am ready to vote immediately, and in the affirmative. Meanwhile, I want to concur in the Senator's notion that it is utter folly to proceed upon a futile and inconclusive debate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Are there any other Senators who wish to ask me a question in which they can indicate their readiness to vote now, without further debate?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator know that I am willing to stay here all night to force this joint resolution to a vote?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am ready and anxious to vote now.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield only for a question.

Mr. DAVIS and Mr. KEAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania for a question.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, why can we not vote now?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield only for a question.

Mr. NORRIS. That is a question.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KEAN. I am ready to stay here not only to-night but every night this week to get an opportunity to vote "yea" on the pending motion.

Mr. TYDINGS. I take it for granted that if we were to call the entire roll, there would not be eight Senators in the Chamber who are not ready to vote now. I think it is a shame that the Senate has to be indicted and criticized as a body, and that the responsibility can not be fixed upon the six or eight men who are ready to filibuster on this proposition at a time like this. I am satisfied that the indictment and the criticism which will flow from this day's proceedings, and which will encompass every one of us, as a matter of fact justly ought to be applied to a very, very few Senators.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. WALCOTT. I am ready and eager to vote, and vote in the affirmative. It seems to me an outrage that this filibuster is allowed to go on. If it does go on, I am in favor of going on night and day until those engaged in the filibuster are tired out.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if I thought there was the slightest chance of this measure being enacted, I would not make the motion which I am about to make; but every Senator in this body knows that it is doubtful if the joint resolution can pass here. He further knows that in the public press the leading member of another body is reported as saying that the joint resolution can not pass the House; that it will not even be submitted to the House in its present form. Why we want to consider something that there is not the slightest chance of passing, with only 14½ days left, is absolutely beyond me.

I wish it were possible that a roll call could be had to find those who want to filibuster on this matter, who want to deny to the American people a vote, not on whether they will be wet or dry but on the form of government and constitution under which they shall live. That is all that is involved here—the right of the people to pass upon their form of government—and yet, with all our boasted democracy, we are afraid to let the people pass upon their form of government. They can reject the amendment if the joint resolution is passed, or they can adopt it.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. COUZENS. Will not the Senator move to suspend the rules, so that we can limit debate?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should be glad to do that; but as I have looked into the matter, with the parliamentary situation as it is at present, as long as this motion is pending there is no way in which we can have a proposition considered to suspend the rules. I thought of that, and submitted it to the Parliamentarian, and he tells me that that would not now be in order.

Mr. President, on behalf of those who favor submitting this amendment to the people, I want to say that a vote to lay this motion upon the table does not mean that we are opposed to submitting this so-called repeal or modification, in whatever form it may pass, to the legislatures or conventions of the States. It simply means that knowing that it can not be adopted, with only 14½ days left, it should be laid aside in order to do at least whatever little bit we can toward bettering conditions in America.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania for a question.

Mr. REED. Since we have all, or most of us, promised our constituents that we will favor a submission of this question to them, what will they think of our sincerity if, after five hours and a half of filibuster, we cave in without making any effort to break that filibuster?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator's question is a very pertinent one; and I am sure that many of us may be misunderstood. However, I pointed out in my first statement that as soon as the Senator from Texas completes his speech, which I understand is to go on for three or four more hours, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] is to try to get the floor and speak for four or five more hours; and it was only because I realized that perhaps two or three days of valuable time would be consumed, which we could employ to better use in other fields, that I reluctantly have made this motion, realizing that there is no way to break this filibuster except by laying the motion on the table and devoting our attention to other things.

Therefore, Mr. President, I move—not that we who will vote for the motion are opposed to the general philosophy of this joint resolution, but because it is the only way in which we can make the most of the 14½ days which yet remain—I move, sir, that the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] be laid upon the table.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Maryland has debated his motion by consent of the Senate. I ask five minutes in which to address the Senate regarding it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Arkansas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is well known that at this stage of the session it is a physical and moral impossibility to pass measures which are filibustered against by an organization in the Senate.

This motion, however, was made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE]. He recognizes the difficulties that inhere in the situation. I am advised that he is not disposed to hold this motion before the Senate to the exclusion of other business. I think, however, that he has not had a fair opportunity to determine whether there is, or will be, a persistent, organized filibuster against his motion, and I think he is entitled to some additional time for the consideration of his motion.

Mr. President, this is a pitiable spectacle. It repeats what happened here just a few weeks ago, when with substantially little opposition to a bill, when the opposition consisted of just a few Senators, we were kept in session indefinitely in order to dispose of the Glass banking bill.

I wish to know now whether immediately upon the demonstration of a disposition to filibuster the Senate is going to surrender its right and its opportunity to legislate. If so, I point out to Senators that every bill that is coming on following this motion is liable to encounter the same conditions that are presented here.

One Senator has spoken against the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin. I know that the Senator from Wisconsin does not wish to obstruct legislation. I have talked with him about the matter. I feel that the action of the Senator from Texas in yielding the floor to the Senator from Maryland in order to make a motion to table this motion is in a measure an unfair prejudgment of the attitude of the Senate on this question.

For my part, I recognize, as suggested by the Senator from Maryland, that if there is a persistent filibuster conducted by a number of Senators, it would be impossible to have a vote on this motion and a vote on this joint resolution providing for submitting a resolution of repeal; but I do not believe that the matter ought to be concluded until it has been developed that there is a determination to prevent a vote, and I do not think that the display of the attitude of one Senator is sufficient to justify this body in reaching that conclusion.

For that reason I shall vote against the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Regular order!

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. KEAN. I want to ask the Senator if he will not bring in a motion for cloture, so that we can have a vote on the merits of this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am denied the privilege of replying.

Mr. TYDINGS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll upon the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to lay upon the table the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE].

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], who is absent from the city on official business of the Senate. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who has been called from the Chamber on account of a death in his family. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. HOWELL's name was called). My colleague [Mr. HOWELL] is absent from the city on official business of the Senate. If he were present and permitted to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN]. In his absence I withhold my vote, not knowing how he would vote. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. Not knowing how that Senator would vote, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TYDINGS (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand from the announcement of the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] that he believes that the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] if present would vote "nay." In view of that announcement, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. My colleague [Mr. SCHALL] is unavoidably absent from the Senate.

Mr. FRAZIER (after having voted in the affirmative). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], who is absent from the city. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WAGNER (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FESS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] is absent on the business of the Senate. If present he would vote "nay."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is unavoidably detained. If present he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—28

So the Senate refused to lay on the table Mr. BLAINE'S motion to proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 211.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield if it does not take me from the floor.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, in order that Senators may be informed, as to how long he intends to try to hold the Senate in session to-night for the purpose of testing the strength of this filibuster, or getting a vote?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, it is my hope that the Senate will stay in continuous session just so long as it is possible to hold a quorum in order that we may obtain a vote upon the pending motion; as the junior Senator from Utah (Mr. KING) has suggested to me, if it be necessary, that the Senate remain in session during the night.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator if it will not take me off the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I desire to report——

Mr. BLAINE. I object.

Mr. KING and several other Senators demanded the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the regular order is demanded. The Senator from Texas will proceed.

During the delivery of Mr. SHEPPARD's speech—

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield for a question.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to enter a privileged motion.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield with the understanding that it will not take me off the floor.

Mr. BINGHAM. It will not. I have no desire to take the Senator off the floor. I submit the motion which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

We, the undersigned Senators, hereby move to bring to a close the debate on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 211) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

|---|---|
| HIRAM BINGHAM. | JOHN B. KENDRICK. |
| CARTER GLASS. | KEY PITTMAN. |
| F. C. WALCOTT. | WARREN R. AUSTIN. |
| W. WARREN BARBOUR. | WALLACE H. WHITE, Jr. |
| TASKER L. ODDIE. | A. H. VANDENBERG. |
| HAMILTON F. KEAN. | ROBERT F. WAGNER. |
| JAMES F. BYRNES. | JOHN J. BLAINE. |
| BENNETT C. CLARK. | FREDERICK HALE. |

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time—

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield for a question, Mr. President.

Mr. MOSES. I am sorry to have missed any portion of the Senator's discussion; but I ask him if, in the progress of his study of the matter of the minorities, he has at all given attention in what he has said to the Senate this afternoon to the question of the minorities involved in that portion of central Europe which is concerned with Rumania and Hungary, let us say; that is to say, the Banat and Transylvania; and, if the Senator has attempted at all to criticize the action of the council of Versailles in the decisions which they made with reference to the minority peoples?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; I have made no exhaustive study along that line. I should like to have the Senator's opinion regarding it.

Mr. MOSES. I am sorry that the Senator has not spent the wealth of his research and scholarship upon this question, because, if he will know, there is still existing a most acute problem, so far especially as Hungary is concerned, with reference to those territories which were taken into Rumania, let us say, wherein, for example, there were to be found—is the Senator yielding the floor?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator sat down and I wondered if he was yielding the floor—wherein, for example, there were found those acute questions which grew out of the treaty of Versailles with reference to the consideration of the interests and the rights of the minorities—linguistic, racial, and religious.

If the Senator will recall, there were certain provisions in the treaty of Versailles which undertook to set up certain commissions—international in their character, but, after all, American in their results, because the American member happened to be the umpire in each case—to determine the rights of these linguistic, racial, and religious minorities which were set up, and particularly in the section of the globe to which the Senator at this minute has been directing his attention; that is to say, in Central Europe, where in Transylvania, where in the Banat, where in all the interests of Hungary, let us say, without going beyond the confines of any other country, there arose these acute situations.

The Senator, having been here, will remember that I happened to be one of that small group who resisted the ratification of the treaty of Versailles, not with reference at all to the 26 articles which made up the Covenant of the League of Nations, but because of those things in the treaty itself which, as I then foresaw, would produce exactly these international controversies to which the Senator is now paying his attention.

The Senator at that time resisted me in what I had to say, in what I thought, in what I foresaw. Now he joins me apparently in denunciation of the injustices which grew out of the treaty; and I am glad to welcome him now to the small, diminishing, but still resisting group of the irreconcilables. I want to ask him, as he discusses this particular question, Why it is that in the course of what he is having to say regarding these problems of which I have now spoken, which involve the rights and the interests of religions, of races, and of nationalities, he is not willing to point out a remedy?

Inasmuch as the Senator yielded to me only for a question, I now come to the question:

Does the Senator join with me in declaring that the injustices of the treaty of Versailles are of such a character that the Senate of the United States should now denounce them?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Has the Senator concluded?

Mr. MOSES. No; I am waiting for the answer to the question, which may be "yes" or "no."

Mr. SHEPPARD. The treaty of Versailles provided the machinery for the settlement of all these questions——

Mr. MOSES. O Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator asked me a question, and he will not permit me to answer it.

Mr. MOSES. I pause for a reply.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The treaty of Versailles set up machinery for the settlement of all these questions when it created the League of Nations; and I suggest that the Senator join with me in joining the League of Nations, so that we can aid in remedying whatever wrongs exist.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the League of Nations has been adequately described as being an instrumentality for settling small disputes among great nations, and as utterly useless in settling great disputes among any nations. I will join with the Senator if he will join with me in a declaration on the part of the United States Senate that the League of Nations, for example, should now take absolute steps for determining what is going to take place in the Far East; whether we and the League of Nations shall permit the Japanese to go forward in Jehol and Manchukuo, and set up there these wholly irresponsible governments under the ægis of the Japanese flag.

Will the Senator join me in making the protest of the United States effective, in connection with the League of Nations, or any other body, that is to say, to the extent of sending the boys from Texas over there to see to it that the Japanese may not overrun Manchuria?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator has leaped from Rumania to Japan.

Mr. MOSES. And I will cover the whole globe, because that is what the Senator has done.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; I have confined myself to these minorities, for the present.

Mr. MOSES. I beg the Senator's pardon; the Senator began at Saloniki.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is not asking me a question now.

Mr. MOSES. All right; I will when I finish.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Go ahead.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator has leaped from Saloniki into the middle East, and his next step, of course, will be into the Far East, and does he intend to take the United States with him? That is my question.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The League of Nations is amply able to settle all those questions.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to ask the Senator from Texas whether the League of Nations has under consideration now the repeal of the eighteenth amendment? [Laughter.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. The League of Nations?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The League of Nations has a strong organization for the stuty and control of the liquor traffic, and that organization, I am sure, would be against the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has the League of Nations the repeal of the eighteenth amendment under consideration at this time?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It has the eighteenth amendment under consideration at times, because it has the effects of the liquor traffic in all countries under consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. When will the League of Nations vote on the repeal of the eighteenth amendment? Will it vote on it as soon as we vote on it?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; the Senator may answer in a moment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In just a moment. I hope Senators will not all ask me questions at once.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will not; I am going to be fair. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The League of Nations, through one of its organizations, as I have said, has the prohibition question under constant consideration.

Now I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does not my friend the Senator from Texas know that in that pink cup which I lately deposited on his desk there is nothing but water, without even the slightest trace of alcohol in it?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am afraid the Senator put half of one per cent in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, in reference to what the Senator from Kentucky has said, if he had been here, and had followed with as close attention as I have——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is the Senator asking me a question?

Mr. MOSES. I am going to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish the Senator would, because I want to finish this address by 10 o'clock.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if I conclude with a question I am within the rules. If the Senator from Texas wishes to take me off my feet, all right. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. No, Mr. President; I am not trying to take the Senator off his feet.

Mr. MOSES. Is the Senator from Texas going to let me ask a question or is he not?

Mr. SHEPPARD. My friend the Senator from New Hampshire knows that I want to be fair with him. He did not seem to be asking a question, and I simply called that to his attention. Now, let him ask me a question.

Mr. MOSES. All right; I thank the Senator very much. The Senator from Kentucky made a reference with regard to the pendency of the question. If the Senator from Kentucky had been here as continuously as I have, either in the chair or on the floor, and had listened to the argument made by the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Kentucky would have known that I this afternoon opened my discussion by referring to the intimate relationship of the question before the Senate to the argument which the Senator from Texas was presenting; and, having called attention to that, I now join with the Senator from Kentucky in asking the Senator from Texas just where does he connect any portion of what he has said, aside from that which related to Macedonia, to the question immediately before the Senate?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Through the bureau of the league for the control of the traffic in intoxicating liquors.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask another question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. MOSES. Has the United States a representative in that bureau, either as an observer or as a member?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It may have an unofficial observer, because it has been the practice of the Republican administration to haunt the back door of the league and have unofficial observers present on all occasions.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. We were a backdoor member of the League of Nations. I know we became so over the Senator's protest.

Mr. MOSES. Why does the Senator say "was"? Does the Senator regard the Republican administration as already in the past tense?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes, it is already dead.

Mr. MOSES. Without question, that is true, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to say so; the Republican Party is no longer in control of this branch of the Congress or the one at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senator for his illuminating contribution to the debate.

Mr. MOSES. That was shown by the vote we had here the other day on the question of going into executive session.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am always glad to have the Senator interrupt.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay the Senator from Texas, because I know how anxious he is to draw his remarks to an immediate conclusion, in which all of us join, I may say; but what I wanted to know was, when will the League of Nations vote on the Blaine resolution?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I can not give the Senator that information. It will not vote on it but it is interested in prohibition.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Could the Senator tell us when the United States Senate will vote on the Blaine resolution?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think it will vote some time to-morrow.

Mr. BYRNES. That is comforting.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will state to the Senator from South Carolina that I am making a connected legitimate speech on an important subject. I have not asked for a quorum call. I have attempted no undue delay, and I intend to finish shortly. To say that one is engaged in a filibuster when he speaks one day at the beginning of a debate, and does not speak any more, is entirely unjustified, and I do not think the Senator from South Carolina would join any one else in saying I am filibustering.

Mr. BYRNES. I simply asked the Senator if he could give us some indication as to when the United States Senate would vote on the Blaine resolution, and the Senator has said to-morrow. As far as the Senator from Texas is concerned, will he say that he will not seek to prevent a vote on the resolution to-morrow?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am not seeking to prevent a vote.

Mr. BYRNES. And that after this night he will do nothing to prevent a vote?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am not making an effort now to prevent a vote. I am simply making a speech on a very important subject.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I would like to present a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I would like to finish now.

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield for that purpose?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time—

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I call the attention of my able and learned friend to the fact that Lord Robert Cecil was representing England? It was Smuts who represented South Africa.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Lord Cecil represented South Africa by request.

Mr. LEWIS. That is a matter of which I was not cognizant. I was present at some of the conferences, but was not acquainted with that detail.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Did I understand the Senator to say that Mr. Smuts was not representing anybody?

Mr. SHEPPARD. He was representing South Africa, too.

Mr. TYDINGS. Lord Robert Cecil and Mr. Smuts both were representing South Africa?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true, if I am correctly advised.

Mr. TYDINGS. That was rather a complete representation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think so myself.

Mr. SHEPPARD continued his speech. After having spoken some time he said:

Mr. President, I ask that the statement under the title "Armenian and Greek Refugees" may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator to state briefly what is set forth under that heading.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Would the Senator like to hear it read?

Mr. MOSES. I would like to have a summary in the Senator's own words.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall read it for the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. If it means what was done by Doctor Nansen and by the League of Nations, association, or whatever they call it, in Athens, which seized the palace of Prince Nicholas and lived in it without rent and tried to charge up the expense to the United States—if that is what the Senator has in mind, I want it read and I want to discuss it with him.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall read it, but the Senator did not ask me a question.

Mr. MOSES. Very well. Will the Senator read it and say whether it has to do with what I have just mentioned?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall read it.

Mr. MOSES. Just a minute.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I decline to yield further.

Mr. MOSES. May I finish——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I decline to yield further.

Mr. MOSES. May I not finish my question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I decline to yield further.

Mr. MOSES. I submit to the inevitable.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I decline to yield further.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas declines to yield further.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall read it to the Senator.

After the conclusion of Mr. SHEPPARD's speech—

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator was speaking just now, was he not, of that period when the League of Nations arranged for a loan to Austria, at the time when the Abbé Seipel was the Chancellor of Austria? Is not that so?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I take it the Senator is familiar with that matter.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator has just been talking about it at length.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; but I have not gone completely into the history of Austria.

Mr. MOSES. This is not the history of Austria, Mr. President; it is the history of the League of Nations in connection with the Austrian Government, and I am asking the Senator whether he has not been speaking of that period when the League of Nations arranged for a loan to the Austrian Government.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It began its arrangements for the loan then; yes.

Mr. MOSES. It was about 1923, was it not?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; it began to make the arrangements then.

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator know the history of that loan?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I know something about it.

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator be good enough to tell the Senate the history of that loan—how much of it was paid, how often the interest was paid, how often they had to readjust it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I object, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. That would require a speech of almost the same length as the one I have made. I respectfully decline to answer to that extent.

Mr. MOSES. I am entirely willing to listen. Will the Senator permit still further questions? Does the Senator still yield to me for further questions?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I surrender the floor.

Mr. MOSES. I do not want the Senator to surrender the floor. I am seeking information.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate shall vote on the pending motion at 1 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, in view of the agreement to vote at 1 o'clock, it occurs to me that we should modify the agreement previously entered into to meet at 11 o'clock. Some of us want to attend committee meetings in the morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement previously entered into is to recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. BROOKHART. I am wondering if the Senator from Oregon will not agree to modify that agreement?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we have a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at 1 o'clock to-morrow, and in order to accommodate the Senator from Iowa and others, I ask unanimous consent that the order by which we agreed to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning be vacated, and that when the Senate takes a recess to-night it shall be until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5408) relating to the revolving fund established by the joint resolution of December 21, 1928, for the relief of Puerto Rico, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1224) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 183) to amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Porto Rico," approved December 21, 1928, as amended by the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1929, approved March 4, 1929, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1225) thereon.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I now move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 10 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 15, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Have mercy upon us, O God, according to Thy loving kindness. According to the multitude of Thy tender mercies, blot out our transgressions. O speak to us, dear Lord, and a sense of quiet duty, quiet thought, and freshness of energy of life shall steal upon us. Life is so varied; there is such an array of possibilities! O let us work in the spirit of a noble faith and consecration. Then we shall realize Thine approval and our labors shall live in the heart of our Republic. Let Thy rule of justice and righteousness be our master law. By wise and persistent effort may we seek constructive good and understand that true merit lies in hard work and personal sacrifice. Hear our prayer we beseech Thee. In the name of Jesus our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 220. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Van Camp Sea Food Co. (Inc.); and

S. 3438. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of Lindley Nurseries (Inc.).

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13710) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 14199. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6456. An act to amend section 98 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 223) entitled "Joint resolution establishing the United States Georgia Bicentennial Commission, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. FESS, Mr. BINGHAM, and Mr. MCKELLAR to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMERICAN SAMOA

Mr. POU, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (H. Res. 378), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 378

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 417, an act to provide a government for American Samoa. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Insular Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1934

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report and statement upon the bill (H. R. 13710) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, for printing under the rules.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

NIGHT SESSION THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1933

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of a resolution (H. Res. 379) which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Thursday, February 16, 1933, it shall be in order to move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., and that at the evening session, until 10.30 o'clock p. m., it shall be in order to consider bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the call of bills on said calendar to begin where the last call ended.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL, 1934

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14643) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes. Pending that, I would like to reach some agreement as to time with the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOLADAY. I may say to the gentleman from Missouri that I have additional requests for time; and perhaps when gentlemen who did not speak Saturday find there is opportunity they may wish to speak to-day.

Mr. CANNON. Would it be agreeable to let the general debate run along for the present and close debate later on?

Mr. HOLADAY. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that time for general debate be divided equally between the gentleman from Illinois and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14643, with Mr. PRALL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, there remain only 14 working days of this session of this Congress. There is barely time remaining in which to pass the supply bills without attempting to take up other legislation. But there is one bill which should have consideration and should be disposed of before Congress adjourns. It is a bill which has the unqualified indorsement of every thinking business man in the country to-day. That is a strong statement, but I believe it is true. I have yet to hear a single Member of the House express disapproval of it.

Mr. Chairman, these are critical times. Just a little while ago this was the most prosperous country in the world. Our people enjoyed the highest standard of living with which any country or any people have ever been blessed.

To-day 12,000,000 men are unemployed. Our factories are closed. Our fields lie untilled, and millions of people are being fed at public expense.

But, as serious as this situation is, it is not so bad that it could not be worse. And it is infinitely worse when the local bank pulls down its blinds, places a notice on the window, pushes the long line of panic-stricken depositors out into the street, and closes its doors.

In every community the bank is the nerve center of the local business system. Through it flows the life pulse of the community's commercial interests, and no greater catastrophe can befall a community than the failure of its banks.

And yet in the last few years this disaster has overtaken more than 10,000 communities in the United States. For many years the failure of a bank even in the smallest town in the United States was news. It was carried in headlines on the front page of the newspapers. There were many States in which there was not a single bank failure in a year. In some States there was not a bank failure in 20 years.

But to-day it is such a common occurrence that it attracts little attention. The newspapers give a bank failure a line or two in an obscure inside corner. Bank failures have become the order of the day; and the tragic thing about it is that this Government, this administration, and this Congress have had a very large part in closing many of these banks.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Not just now.

Of course, it is absurd to say that any man or group of men would willingly or knowingly take any step that would bring disaster to a bank or to the business interests of any community. No man in his sane mind would think of such a thing. But the fact remains that, whether wittingly or unwittingly, this Congress has broken a thousand banks and is continuing to break them in every State in the Union. Intentionally or unintentionally, the Government in the last 10 or 12 years seems to have taken every possible step to embarrass and handicap the banks of the country.

There has been a great deal of talk about the Government in business, and Members of the House are insisting that the Government be taken out of business, and yet there is no business which has had to meet the competition from the Government that our banks have had to meet. Through the Postal Savings System the Government has gone into the remotest hamlet in the country and has sucked from its banks its surplus funds and siphoned them over into the depositories in the great commercial and financial centers.

The Government is supplying the keenest competition with which our banks have to deal to-day. It is bidding for every dollar in the trade territory of the average bank—and this is especially true in the agricultural sections. Although the deadly effects of the competition is apparent to all observers, the Postal Savings System is being constantly extended, and in the last year new units have been installed in every part of the country. They are advertising for business through every known channel of publicity and are drawing funds from the smaller banks into the central depositories at an alarming rate. To indicate the rapidity with which funds are being transferred from the inland banks to these depositories, on March 1, 1931, the total deposits reported by the Postal Savings System amounted to $175,000,000. On December 1 of that year they had grown to $550,000,000, an increase of over 200 per cent in nine months. By March 1, 1932, they aggregated $692,620,882, and on the first day of the current year, January 1, 1933, they had reached $900,238,726. At this rate of increase, by March 1 of this year they will have passed the $1,000,000,000 mark, an increase of more than 500 per cent in two years.

A billion dollars taken out of the home banks at the most critical time in the financial history of the Nation. A billion dollars which belongs back home where it was earned, where it was accumulated, where it is owned, and where it should be to-day rendering service to the people who produced it. The steady withdrawal of this vast sum at this critical time has contributed directly to the closing of many banks, and it is not stating the case too emphatically to say that it has been one of the determining factors in the misfortune of every bank which has had to close its doors.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes more.

The Government again forces itself into competition with the banks of the country by its campaign to sell Government bonds to the small depositor. And it has the effrontery to insist that the bank act as an agent in these selling campaigns, and to demand that they push these bonds to their customers.

What happens when a Government bond is sold in this crisis? The transaction takes from the community—which needs money as it never needed it before—the price of the bond and leaves the local bank just that much less able to finance the local needs for which the bank is responsible.

In order to be certain not to overlook a single loose penny that a depositor of the little country bank may have, the Government has reduced the denomination of these bonds until they can be bought in denominations as low as $50. Now no one disapproves of the purchase of Government bonds. They are the safest investments in the world and should be available to all who want them. But we do object to the frequent and insistent campaigns of the Government to dissatisfy the small investor with the time deposit certificate of his local bank. In effect it neutralizes the efforts of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to help the banks and nullifies practically every effort of other departments of the Government to protect them from the depression panics which from time to time sweep every banking territory.

Let us consider the situation of the average country bank to-day. Upon the recommendation and insistence of both State and Federal banking officials, the banks began three or four years ago to take their money out of farm loans, out of local business enterprises, and invest it in bonds. Government authorities, both State and Federal, insisted that this be done for the sake of safety, or, as they said, in order to keep the banks liquid. "Keep liquid" was their slogan and, in response to these instructions to keep liquid, the banks began to withdraw their funds and invest them in bonds. What has happened to these bonds? They have depreciated until to-day they are worth from a fraction of their former value to nothing—and a great many of them are worth absolutely nothing. The best of them have fallen to a point where to cash them involves a tremendous loss.

Now the Government comes in and takes money from these banks through the Postal Savings System or through the sale of its bonds to the bank's customers. What follows? The bank must realize on its negotiable securities. It must take these bonds it bought at par and sell them on the open market at any price it can get. Triple A bonds, which they had every reason to believe would always be worth face value, and which they were told by the Government officials who insisted that they buy them, would always bring the amount put into them any day they wanted to cash them, must be sold at any sacrifice.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Pardon me. Not just now.

If they could hold these bonds until they mature, or until the effects of the depression are past, there would be no loss. But the Government will not let them wait. It takes money out of the bank and puts it into the postal savings system. It draws the customers' funds out of the bank to buy Government bonds. It must have its pound of flesh. And the bank must sacrifice its assets to supply the money. It must sell its bonds at a discount and shoulder its loss until the burden becomes unbearable. Then the bank goes down and the community suffers a financial wreck from which it will not recover for a generation to come.

The latest discrimination against the local bank is the publicity given those banks unfortunate enough to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This agency for advancing funds to banks which hold good collateral but lack ready cash would be of invaluable service. It affords a much needed facility and should be available to any bank in temporary need. But the publication of the names of such banks and the significance of such loans are so misunderstood and misinterpreted by the public in their present disturbed state of mind that these newspaper articles have precipitated runs which have resulted most disastrously.

Every month the newspapers carry on the first page under scare headlines the name of every bank that has borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the next morning the line of depositors begins to form at the teller's window of every bank named in the list, and this valuable Government agency which was intended to save our banks has through this one absurd requirement become the very instrument of their destruction.

If you will look over the reports of the liquidating agent on the banks which have closed, you will find listed among the liabilities of every one of them a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. And the crash followed closely on the heels of the announcement of that loan in the newspapers.

All information relative to the loans and other activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should be available to Members of Congress and other interested public officials. But the nation-wide advertisement of every bank which applies for a loan should be promptly and permanently abandoned. You might as well administer a dose of strychnine. The situation in Michigan this morning is a fair sample.

But as serious as are the inroads of these various governmental activities, there is one particular imposition by the Federal Government which is inflicting a greater injury on the banks of the country than all of them combined. It is doing more harm than the Postal Service or the Government bond campaigns or the publication of Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans.

It is breaking banks every day, and it will continue to break them as long as it is permitted to operate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes more.

When President Hoover submitted his Budget estimate at the opening of the last Congress—just a little over a year ago—recommending a program for Federal taxation, he transmitted with his message the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury outlining the proposed tax schedule in specific items. Far down in the labyrinth of this report was a brief line—just a single clause, less than a dozen words—"a stamp tax of 2 cents on each check." I do not know what was in the minds of the committee to which the bill was referred, but I do not believe the average Member of the House gave a thought to that line. Here was a proposal to impose drastic taxes on 1,700,000 people—taxes in some instances running up into the hundreds of thousands on a single corporation or individual. The average Member of the House hardly gave a second thought to a proposal to tax somebody 2 cents. I emphasize that because I do not believe it would ever have been included in the bill, if attention had not been diverted to larger amounts and to debates over the sales tax, the oil tax, the lumber tax, and every other sort of tax that human engenuity could devise. But it has wrought greater havoc in the few months it has been in force than any other one tax ever imposed by the American Congress. Its effect on the banks and especially on the country banks has been deadly.

In the first place, it imposes an unfair and inequitable burden on the bank by requiring the bank to collect the tax and supply a costly and irritating service for which it receives no return.

President Hoover and Secretary Mellon specified a "stamp tax." The tax as imposed during the Spanish-American War was a stamp tax. The customer bought his own stamps and affixed them and all the bank had to do was to see that the stamp was there when the check was cashed. But under the law as finally adopted the banks are charged with the responsibility and expense of acting as a collection agency and saddled with a great amount of extra bookkeeping and all attendant expense without fee or compensating remuneration of any kind whatever.

That disadvantage, however, is small compared with the effect of the tax on deposits. The Government has given a great deal of attention in recent months to discouraging hoarding. This tax effectually neutralizes any effect the antihoarding campaigns may have had. Customers announce that they will not pay to check their own money out of a bank, and the withdrawal of accounts—especially in the rural districts, where the tax on one check this summer amounted to a third of the price of a dozen eggs—has been in the nature of an epidemic. As a result millions of dollars are now in hiding, carried around in pockets, or sequestered in safety-deposit boxes or buried in sardine cans or tucked away in the proverbial sock.

Incidentally, merely one of the by-products of the evil is its acceleration of the crime wave. The fact that people are now known to carry cash instead of a check book and secret money about the premises instead of depositing it in the bank is an open invitation to the footpad and the second-story man. Business firms with large pay rolls have discontinued the use of checks and are paying their employees in cash. We had an instance of the unhappy results of this method of payment when two paymasters were held up a block from the Capitol here the other day and one killed and the other seriously wounded. We read in the newspapers this morning of a veteran of the Civil War so savagely tortured to make him reveal the hiding place of his savings that he died last night. Such instances are of common occurrence.

But that is incidental. I want to emphasize the extent of this withdrawal of accounts and the consequent decline in bank deposits and in the circulating medium immediately following the imposition of this tax.

Reports from the 12 reserve banks confirm the general trend away from payment of bills by check following the imposition of the tax and the loss of deposits on that account. No less a personage than Gov. Eugene Meyer, of the Federal Reserve Board, is given as authority for the statement that the tax on checks has been a noticeable factor in the withdrawal of bank deposits and the increase of currency in circulation. Some banks in my own State with which I had personal contact report a loss as high as 50 per cent of their deposits as result of the tax. It is no exaggeration to say that this tax has taken money out of every bank in the country, has reduced business transactions to a primitive basis of barter and sale or cash in hand, and, most unfortunate of all, it has greatly reduced the amounts available in agricultural banks for farm loans.

It is axiomatic that a dollar in the bank will support $10 of purchasing power in the community, but a dollar in the pocket is only a dollar. A bank can lend only in proportion to its deposits. The reduction of deposits inevitably means a restriction of credits and the refusal of loans or the calling of loans at a time when farm credit is desperately needed. The farmer no longer has any other source of credit. He can not borrow from the insurance companies. He can not borrow from the Federal land banks. He can not borrow from the local money lender, who now invests his surplus in Government bonds. In brief he can not borrow a dollar to finance his crops from any other source except his local bank, and when this tax drains the credit reservoirs of that bank he is left with no hope of securing means to operate his farm. This provision in the revenue law taxing bank checks is drying up the last remaining source of farm agricultural credits at a time when it is a matter of life and death not only to the farm but to the Nation.

Mr. MAY. And at the same time the measure failed to yield the anticipated revenue.

Mr. CANNON. Unfortunately that is true. The tax is failing in the purpose for which it was enacted. It is not bringing in the revenue anticipated at the time of its enactment. Every Member of Congress received a circular from a New York firm last week advertising a system under which 90 per cent of the tax on checks could be avoided. Large business concerns are availing themselves of the loopholes in the law while the small depositor pays the tax or discontinues his account. At the time it was under consideration it was predicted the tax would produce revenue at the rate of $95,000,000 a year. Later those figures were revised to $78,000,000. But reports by the Treasury Department now indicate that it will not bring in half of that amount, the returns to date being: June, $1,094,287.34; July, $3,364,-251.06; August, $3,793,136.51; September, $3,538,415.37; October, $3,835,995.76; November, $3,642,530.06; aggregating to date of last report $19,268,616.10. At that rate it can not bring in much more than $40,000,000 a year. And in the meantime it is doing a thousand times $40,000,000 worth of damage to the country at large. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. BLANTON. During the last six days of this Congress the Speaker can recognize any Member he is willing to recognize to pull a bill out of his hip pocket that never even has been sent to a committee to pass it under suspension of the rules. I wish my friend from Missouri would prepare such a bill and get the Speaker to let him call it up under suspension and repeal this tax of 2 cents on bank checks and repeal the law that caused the increase of postage from 2 cents to 3 cents, so that the letter postage will be 2 cents again, and repeal the tax on electrical current that the poor people all over the country can not afford to pay, which above taxes should never have been passed; and if the Speaker will recognize him and let us pass it under suspension of the rules and get it passed in the other body before we adjourn we will grant much relief to the people. It will be the least that should be done for the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I sincerely hope that the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas can be carried into effect. There would be no difficulty securing the requisite two-thirds vote.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I am always glad to yield to my friend from New York.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I am heartily in accord with the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas; but in addition to that would it not also be well to couple with those things a provision to stop the publication of the names of borrowers who go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for money?

Mr. CANNON. They are all excellent measures, and every one of them should have consideration.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Then why should we not stand up here and assert our rights?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can count on my standing with him.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I am in the minority, but I am willing to join hands with the gentleman to-day or tomorrow or next week to get something done along these lines. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Permit me to again call the attention of the House to the effect of this tax on the farmer. There is no source from which the farmer can get credit to finance his farm operations to tide him over during the peak of the crop season except the little country bank, and when you take the country bank away from him you take away the last source of credit to which he can apply. And remember this: You will never bring this country back to prosperity until you start with the farmer. [Applause.] As soon as you restore the farmer's purchasing power he is going to the merchant. The merchant orders from the factory. The factories go out on the streets and call in the unemployed, and prosperity is on its way back again; but we will never start it back until you begin with the farm. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

I wish you gentlemen who represent city constituencies and you who represent labor constituencies would realize the importance of cooperating with us in this matter. It is your battle as well as our battle.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman indicate the bill to which he referred, which he said should be passed within the next 14 days?

Mr. CANNON. It is a bill introduced in the last session, House Joint Resolution 463, now pending before the Committee on Ways and Means, repealing one clause in the revenue act, the 2-cent tax on checks. The tax should be repealed before this session adjourns. It is breaking banks every day and will continue to break them until it is repealed. It ought to go to the Senate in the next 14 days. [Applause.]

Mr. BALDRIGE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BALDRIGE. We all agree absolutely with what the gentleman has just said, but why do not the leaders of this House step up and do what the gentleman has suggested?

Mr. CANNON. I believe it is because good fellows like the gentleman and myself have failed to call it to their attention. Now is the time to remedy that omission. The bill can be passed if we can secure a vote on it. I have yet to talk with a single Member of the House who does not want to repeal it, and who does not say that every man in his district who has expressed himself on the subject wants it repealed.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. If the gentleman will furnish the leadership I will help furnish the followers on this side.

Mr. BALDRIGE. We all feel the same way as the gentleman about this matter, but it does not mean much unless the leaders will let it go through.

Mr. CANNON. I have never heard of the leaders on either side of the aisle opposing it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER. In view of the fact that the gentleman's party controls the House, and in view of the fact that we have been adjourning every day at 3.30 and 3.45 and 4 o'clock, day after day, will the gentleman not ask the leaders, instead of adjourning at 4 o'clock this afternoon or tomorrow, to sit later and give the House an opportunity to consider some of these measures?

Mr. CANNON. We shall be glad to sit to-day as long as the gentleman desires.

This is the most objectionable of all the nuisance taxes. If the Government had deliberately planned to destroy rural credits it could not have adopted a more effective weapon. The fact that the injury was not foreseen and is wholly unintentional is all the more reason why it should be repealed as speadily as possible. Only 14 days of the session remain. The time is short. It is to be hoped that in that time the Committee on Ways and Means will find a way to permit us to vote on the question. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the entire Membership of the House has listened not only with much interest but with some amazement to the speech of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]. Personally I want to congratulate him upon his courage and frankness in discussing some of our economic ills and particularly the condition of the banks at this moment. It happens that to-day some very disconcerting news has come to us in regard to the banking situation.

I find myself in much agreement with what the gentleman from Missouri has said, but I want to say to him in all kindliness that some Democratic chickens appear to be coming home to roost. The gentleman denounced the publicity of the loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I have denounced that publicity and voted against that proposal, but the leadership on the Democratic side of the House compelled the House to adopt the measure under which that publicity must be given to the loans of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The gentleman said something about the present 2-cent tax on checks. Why, bless you, that tax is one of the numerous substitutes proposed in this House last year after the Democratic side of the House—I will not say the leadership but the Democratic Membership of the House—had destroyed the manufacturers' sales tax. We Republicans, all the Republicans on the Ways and Means Committee and a large majority of the Republicans in the House, supported that tax, but the Democratic majority on the Ways and Means Committee were deserted by four-fifths of their party colleagues, who forced the substitution for the manufacturers' sales tax of a hodgepodge of miscellaneous revenue proposals—the 2-cent tax on checks, the gasoline tax, the increased tax on trades on produce exchanges, the increase of postage rates, and a lot of other discriminatory and special taxes—many of which have been designated as "nuisance" exactions, often producing small revenue but irritating and vexatious to the public. That is the history of the revenue act of 1932.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. May I suggest to the gentleman, in all comity, that this is a matter from which partisanship should be divorced. This is a matter on which we should get together for the good of the country. Let us not seek to make political capital out of the distress of the Nation. Let us lay aside other considerations and cooperate to secure the repeal of this destructive tax and save the rest of our banks.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I agree with the gentleman. Let us look the facts in the face. If you do not like the 2-cent tax on checks, if you do not like some of these other discriminatory taxes in the revenue act of 1932, why not let us get together, both sides of this House and all the Members of this House, and frame some other legislation? [Applause.]

The Committee on Ways and Means have determined that they will not consider any revenue legislation at this session of the Congress. So far as revenue legislation is concerned, that form of relief seems to have gone by the board.

The gentleman speaks about the sale of Government bonds to banks. Government bonds must be sold. Money must be obtained for the necessary expenses of the Government so long as Congress does not reduce expenditures sufficiently and so long as adequate means of revenue are not provided.

I agree with the gentleman entirely on the subject of postal savings deposits. I think the Government is engaged in a savings-bank business through the medium of the postal savings deposit system from which it should withdraw as soon as possible. It is another instance where the Government has invaded the field of private enterprise, private banking; but we have it, and to-day it happens to be the only place where many people of the country feel they can with any safety deposit their earnings.

We had a matter before the House yesterday which was not a party matter. It should not have been a matter of party cleavage. Everybody recognizes that the United States is being inundated and flooded with foreign importations to the great loss and detriment of the workers of America. Some argument was made to show that these importations were less from the countries which have departed from the gold standard than from those which have not departed from the gold standard. That is not the question. The question is, Where does the competition arise? If you want to make comparisons, compare these importations with American production and consumption, not with former imports. Our consumption has gone down until it is estimated that the national income for last year was $37,500,000,000, as compared with $85,000,000,000 to $90,000,000,000 three years ago. And yet the Democratic majority on yesterday, by caucus rule, had bound their Members not to permit the deficiency currencies legislation, as applied to the tariff, to be taken up for consideration. If we are to banish partisanship, these matters should not be made the subjects of caucus or conference action by either party.

Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with my good friend the gentleman from Missouri that these questions should not be approached and should not be determined from a partisan standpoint. The gentleman's party has a majority here; the gentleman's party has the leadership; the gentleman's party has the initiative. We are powerless. Give us a chance to vote for some of the things that you propose and you will be surprised at the response you will get from this side of the House. [Applause.] Give us a chance to join you in a patriotic effort to redeem the people of this country from the present great distress and we will do all we can to help you along these lines while we have the opportunity; but some of the Members on this side will not be in the next House and will not be able to join you in such remedial legislation as I understand you are proposing. They would like an opportunity to do something now in order that the people may not continue to suffer even during the two months which must elapse before your new administration will be operative. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I had asked for this time in order to cover practically the same ground which has been covered by my Republican colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Verily, the chickens are coming home to roost. Who led the fight, booted and spurred, for the adoption of the publicity features of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans and applications for loans? None other than that Mussolini leader of the Democratic majority of the House, the present Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. The record speaks for itself. The situation portrayed and now condemned by the Democratic gentleman from Missouri is the exact picture as to what would occur as painted on the floor of the House by Republicans who opposed the publicity feature so strongly championed and supported by the Democratic majority.

We know that a small bank out in the country or in a city can not accept deposits over a period of several months amounting to $500,000 or $1,000,000, keep these funds in its vaults so the depositors can withdraw all of their money at once on demand, and still be able to pay interest to its depositors. These funds placed on deposit with the bank are put out by the bank into channels of trade in the form of loans and mortgages and the purchase of bonds. Even in the case of a perfectly sound bank, if its depositors all ask for all of their deposits on or about the same time, the bank can not realize immediately on those mortgages, loans, and bonds and, therefore, does not have sufficient ready cash to meet its obligations to its depositors who desire to withdraw. Therefore, perfectly sound banks which could not liquidate their loans and mortgages by reason of excessive withdrawals have placed with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation proper securities and made loans from that corporation to carry on their business and keep from closing their doors.

What was the result of this publicity feature? Take a case of the average man with a few hundred dollars of savings or a thousands dollars, or with his entire life savings tied up in a bank, what would his reaction be when the headlines of his home newspaper indicated that the bank was in such condition that it had to apply for a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation? The first thing when that bank opens in the morning, said ordinary citizen would be waiting on the steps to make application to withdraw his entire funds. Therefore the situation complained of by the gentleman from Missouri does exist, and the gentleman himself has confirmed the allegation of the Republican minority that this very thing would happen. Certainly my Democratic friend from Missouri can not pass the responsibility to the Republican minority, because it was his Democratic majority which brought about this serious condition which he so vividly pictures. It was the child of the Democratic Party, fathered by your Mussolini leader, the distinguished Speaker of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. If the gentleman wants to ask a pertinent question I will yield, but not for a facetious one.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a most pertinent question. I am wondering what on earth the great Republican Party is going to do after March 4 when the gentleman from Wisconsin, its great leader, will not be here.

Mr. SCHAFER. That is another one of the gentleman's facetious interjections. I wonder what the gentleman from Texas is going to do with reference to the program of the Democratic Party. Your party has had control of the House for two years; your party has had control of the other body for two years, when you consider the Members of that body who, although elected as Republicans, supported Mr. Roosevelt. All that your Democratic majority has been doing is howling and growling and complaining and denouncing.

Why, last Saturday one of your leaders, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON] waxed eloquent in wonderful burst of oratory, boasting about the attacks that the Democratic Party had made on the Republican tariff in the past two campaigns. But has your Democratic majority done anything to correct or change the law complained of and denounced? Absolutely nothing. All you do is to talk, talk—attack, complain, denounce—demagoguery.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. In a moment. I will let the gentleman know when I am ready to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to give the gentleman some definite information.

Mr. SCHAFER. If the gentleman will be patient and listen, he will be reminded of some definite, positive facts. Under the Constitution, tariff legislation must originate in the House of Representatives, and the Democratic Party, which in two campaigns has denounced the existing protective tariff, has been in control of the House for two years, with a majority of its Members, and during that time has not sponsored legislation to reduce one tariff rate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. In just one moment. I will yield after I have given the gentleman a few more definite, positive facts.

Since the gentleman from Arkansas admits his party has denounced in two campaigns the tariff put upon the statute books by the Republican Party, I wonder how the gentleman from Arkansas or any of the other Democratic leaders can present an alibi for the failure of the Democratic majority in control of this House for two years to report out a bill to reduce even one tariff rate.

I notice in the press of yesterday that the entire delegations of Congressmen from Florida and from Georgia, and they are not Republicans, appeared before the Tariff Commission and strongly protested against any reduction in the tariff on tomatoes, indicating that a reduction would do their States harm. [Laughter and applause.]

I yield now to the Democratic leaders who admit they have denounced the protective tariff, to ask if they are going to reduce the tariff on tomatoes in the near future.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may state to the gentleman that the entire delegation from Georgia did not appear there.

Mr. SCHAFER. Well, a substantial majority of them.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I can not state about that, because I was not there.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to a humble Member?

Mr. SCHAFER. Now I yield to any and all of the Democrats in this House, including the gentleman from Texas, to ask them what particular rate or rates in the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill are too high and how much of a reduction they believe should be made to carry out the policies announced by the Democratic demagogues on the stump for the past two years. [Laughter.] Is there any Democrat here who will name one specific rate in the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill which should be reduced and indicate the amount of reduction that should be made?

Mr. HOWARD. I accept the challenge.

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWARD. I will state for the benefit of the gentleman that I have introduced a bill to cut down the profits of his own Mussolini in his dealings in aluminum to the extent of 50 per cent of the present tariff now levied upon cooking utensils in the homes of the American people and upon the surgical instruments in the hospitals of our country.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman's bill has been strangled and chloroformed in committee by the Democratic majority.

Now, one Democratic brother has testified. Are there any more? I yield again. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas with respect to advising what tariff rate he would reduce.

Mr. BLANTON. I would reduce all that are not strictly competitive. I want to remind my friend that last year when the people of the country were dissatisfied with the Congress and the White House and the Senate, they elected a new Congress and a new White House and a new Senate. But the new Members of the House, and Senate, and White House will not take office until March 4, and after March 4, and not until then, can the new Democratic régime be held responsible.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will then put the question this way: After March 4 what particular rate or rates would the gentleman ask to be reduced, and in what amount?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there will be a complete revision then.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman does not know. I now yield to any or all of the Democratic brethren to rise in their places and give the House information as to what particular rate or rates in the Hawley-Smoot bill should be reduced and in what amount they should be reduced, after March 4.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Is the gentleman going to answer the question?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I want to——

Mr. SCHAFER. I am not yielding for a correction.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I want to correct a statement which the gentleman made.

Mr. SCHAFER. I pause one minute, I pause two minutes, and I hear no answer. [Laughter.] This shows the demagoguery of the Democratic Party. They only want to denounce and not act to reduce the tariff rates. I expected that the gentleman from Arkansas might rise and indicate that we should reduce the tariff rates on long-staple cotton and on rice.

Mr. RAGON. Since the gentleman has mentioned me, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. RAGON. I used to be connected with the management of a nervous hospital and such whining as the gentleman is doing never did bother me.

Mr. SCHAFER. It is just like the Democrats to inject a facetious remark as a defense when they have no other. The gentleman has no defense. The gentleman's party has been in control of the House for two years and has been denouncing existing tariff rates, but has not moved to reduce even one of the many. That record might meet with the approval of those connected with and confined in the gentleman's nervous hospital. Of course, we well know, and medical authority will confirm the fact, that residents in, and managers of, certain kinds of nervous hospitals are experts when it comes to complaining and denouncing.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I understand the gentleman made the statement that the entire Georgia delegation appeared before the Tariff Commission on yesterday. I am sure the gentleman does not wish to make a statement that is not borne out by the facts.

Mr. SCHAFER. I was quoting from a newspaper report which I hold in my hand.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. There were only three members of the Georgia delegation who went before the commission on yesterday——

Mr. SCHAFER. Who were they?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I did not go. The gentlemen from Georgia, Mr. VINSON, Mr. TARVER, and Mr. WOOD, were the only members who appeared. Not one of them said a solitary word for the tariff. They went down there and laid the resolution of the Georgia General Assembly on the table without comment.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is the gentleman from Georgia against the tariff on tomatoes?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I am.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman is not in accord with the resolution of the Georgia Assembly?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I am not.

Mr. PARKS. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman think that if we should reduce the Smoot-Hawley tariff it could do the country more harm than has been done it by the Republican Party?

Mr. SCHAFER. Before a year rolls by the people will find that the Democratic cry of fire with reference to the Republican Party was a false alarm. They will find that the Democratic Party is long on denunciations and promises and short on deeds and accomplishments. Your party has eloquently claimed that the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill has wrecked the prosperity of this country and the world, and yet you have had control of the House of Representatives for two years and haven't made a single move to reduce a single tariff rate. If the Smoot-Hawley tariff rates caused all this trouble, and you have had a Democratic majority in this House for two years, why have you not made some move to reduce the rates. On the other hand the Democratic program in the sales-tax provision of the revenue bill in the last session raised nearly every tariff rate on the protected list and placed a tariff on nearly every import on the free list. Your Democratic allotment bill in this session also provides for a multitude of increases in the tariff rates of the Smoot-Hawley Act and also for a tariff on a multitude of imports on the free list under that act. Many of these rates in the Democratic sales-tax and allotment bills are of an embargo nature. I notice that one of your Democratic leaders, Mr. Baruch, testified yesterday and opposed the Democratic farm-allotment monstrosity. He advocated that a portion of the farm lands be taken out of production and that the Federal Government pay rent to the farmers for that portion with funds raised by taxation of our citizens. That is how Mr. Baruch would take care of the surplus of farm products.

On the other hand, the Democratic leader who goes into the White House on March 4 indicates that the Federal Government should take hundreds of millions of dollars from the overburdened American taxpayers to develop the Tennessee River Basin and bring into cultivation and production thousands of acres of additional fertile lands.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. No; I can not yield to the humorous gentleman from New York at this time as my time is limited.

Mr. BOYLAN. But this is a very serious question.

Mr. SCHAFER. Yesterday you Democrats demonstrated that the Democratic discharge rule was a vehicle for talk for the past several years, but not one for actual use, according to the principles of your party. You would not even use your own vehicle to give the House an opportunity to consider the Crowther bill or similar legislation, notwithstanding the fact that 145 Members desired such consideration.

Your leaders have said that such consideration would interfere with the Democratic program, and yet you adjourned yesterday at 3.55 p. m. Look over the RECORD, and you will see that the Democratic majority of this House has adjourned many afternoons at 3.45, at 4.15, and still it criticizes the Republican minority, the lame-duck Republican minority, as interfering with the legislative program of the Democratic Party. Why, the Democratic majority in this House for two years has had no program except to mark time, criticize, condemn, and denounce the Republican minority and the Republican President. You Democrats have been the majority party in the House for two years and you can not evade your responsibility by throwing up a smoke screen. You might have fooled some of the people in the last election but they will pierce the smoke screen before the next and see the light. [Applause.]

Why, even your great leaders are divided on farm-relief legislation. Your next President, and one of his chief advisers, Mr. Baruch, and the chairman of the Democratic-controlled Agricultural Committee absolutely face different ways on farm-relief legislation.

For the sake of our common country and the millions of our fellow citizens I hope and pray that the Democratic Party will be able to unite on a constructive program and will have a successful administration, although their Speaker admits that the Democratic majority in this House could not function on appropriations, could not function on balancing the Budget or on tax reduction, and that the new majority of the Democratic Party in the next Congress, a majority of over 130, can not function, but will have to abdicate most of the prerogatives of the Congress and give them to the President. It is a sad state of affairs from the standpoint of the American people, a very sad state of affairs, when the Speaker of the House indicts his own Democratic majority, which has had control of the House for two years.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. And a working majority of his party and its followers in the other body, which has had control of that body for almost four years. I am afraid that before a year rolls by the people will wish to high Heaven that they had voted differently at the last November election. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced a resolution to immediately close the House restaurant and the public restaurant adjacent to the House restaurant, and the House barber shop and the public barber shop adjacent thereto for the reason that it will save a little money and that there is a general impression over the country that these institutions operate free to Members of Congress, when as a matter of fact every meal or hair cut or shave is paid for by the Member.

The resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this resolution the House restaurant and the public restaurant adjacent thereto and the House barber shop and the public barber shop adjacent thereto be permanently closed.

I hold in my hand the House of Representatives restaurant menu for Saturday, February 11, 1933, showing the reduced or depression prices now effective. Here they are:

Hearts of celery for one person, 20 cents.

Stuffed mangoes for one person, 20 cents.

Bean soup, 15 cents.

A plate luncheon of chopped sirloin (that means the fragments), with potatoes, peas, spaghetti, and pie, 50 cents.

Another plate luncheon of lamb, jelly, potatoes, peas, pie, and coffee, 65 cents.

A dietary platter of salad, bread, cottage cheese, custard, and buttermilk is priced at 60 cents.

Under "ready to serve" we find:

Chicken, cranberry sauce, potatoes, and peas, 60 cents; and with dessert and coffee added, 85 cents.

A tenderloin steak is $1—that would almost pay for a calf—then add two vegetables, 30 cents; dessert, 15 cents; and a cup of coffee, 10 cents—it totals $1.55.

A cheese sandwich costs you 15 cents, a chicken sandwich 40 cents. A chicken salad for one person is 75 cents. Coleslaw, which consists of a half a penny's worth of chopped cabbage, is 20 cents; apple dumpling, 20 cents; coffee or tea, 10 cents a cup.

We pay 50 cents for a hair cut and 25 cents for a shave.

During the 14 years I have been here no one to my knowledge has had a morsel of food nor a hair cut nor a shave at the taxpayers' expense. I ask now, Has any Member here ever had a free meal or free hair cut or a free shave? No response. No, not one—this year, nor last year, nor at any other time. You can get a hair cut and shave for 75 cents in the House barber shop.

There are restaurants and barber shops from 3 to 10 blocks from the Capitol. To save a little money and to secure better understanding I propose we close the Capitol restaurants and barber shops and patronize these outside places or fast during the day.

At going prices our restaurants that feed Members and the public who come to the Capitol by thousands as sightseers or on business lose money. Let us close them up. Because of the necessary food loss from vastly unequal patronage from day to day there is an annual loss of 1 penny for every 125 of our population.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I think it is well that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] has brought this matter to the attention of the House and more particularly to the attention of the public. The trouble with the situation is that there has been no differentiation on the part of newspaper reporters with reference to so-called abuse of privileges of the House and those of another body. I have had something to do, as all Members know, in the past with running the restaurant. So far as the restaurant is concerned, the Members pay exactly the same price there for food as does the general public. As a matter of fact, more of the general public patronize the restaurant than do Members of the House.

There are evils in the barber shop which ought to be corrected. Those men are on the pay roll as cloakroom employees. They are paid a salary, and yet when you go there for a shave or a haircut you are charged the prevailing prices that exist elsewhere. It is my understanding, unless it has been changed, that some of the material, particularly the towels that are used in the barber shop, are furnished at the expense of the House and that the laundering is done at the expense of the House. That ought not to be.

I want to say just a word in defense of the restaurant. The restaurant is not only a matter of public convenience but it is absolutely essential to the transaction of public business. Most of the Members attend committee meetings in the morning, which adjourn about a quarter to 12. The Members go immediately to the floor of the House and there important business awaits their action. They can not go out in the middle of the day and get a sandwich or a cup of coffee, nor can they buy a decent meal in the vicinity of the Capitol.

It is necessary also that those who come to the Capitol on public business should have a place where they can get good food. It is necessary to public health and it is necessary to the transaction of public business. I do not approve of the abolition of the restaurant. There may be some economies which can be observed there. What they are I do not know. The cost has been brought down to a minimum. The uncertainty of the number which will be served during the day is one cause of the deficit. You can not prepare a meal for several hundred people and then have the House unexpectedly adjourn with a consequent reduction in the number of people to serve, without a deficit. The restaurant has to be run for the peak of the load. In other words, you can not tell what day the restaurant is going to be crowded to overflowing. Tables will be set in the corridors, they will be set in the room of the Committee on Accounts, they will be set everywhere that we can find a place to put a table—in order to accommodate whom? The Members of the House? Oh, no. It is to accommodate the general public who come here transacting business. It is very necessary to have some of these conveniences. They are not luxuries. However, I would advise the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS], if Congress wants to do it, it can save a million dollars a year on the hill by the abolition of certain places and positions, jobs which are now filled under patronage. For one, the cafeteria in the coat rooms, under the galleries, operated by employees of the House who are paid a salary, provided with equipment at public expense, and who put the profits in their pockets.

Patronage is the curse of Capitol Hill. There are men employed here who have absolutely nothing to do and who seek a haven of refuge down in the House library or elsewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] has expired.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. UNDERHILL. How many Members of this House know there is a House library? We have the Congressional Library. There is a railroad running underneath the Plaza, and in two minutes you can get a book from the Congressional Library shelves. We have a library on each side of the Hall. There is quite a library in the Clerk's office; and yet down in the basement of the House Office Building there is a library, and this library is nothing more nor less than a refuge for certain jobholders. They do little or no work.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know why such a valuable Member as the gentleman from Massachusetts has been, and one who is so active now and who has always been so active, has not used the House library. I call on it frequently for statistics and data. There are two very fine expert employees of the Government in that place, a lady and a gentleman. The lady is most proficient in looking up statistics.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I am willing to yield for a question but not for a speech.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with my friend from Massachusetts 100 per cent in eliminating all waste and extravagance. But I think those two employees in the library in the House Office Building are very essential and are two of the most valuable employees we have here, and neither of them is from Texas. I just wanted to say that.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Well, that is a matter of opinion.

The gentleman from Texas may use that library, but I doubt if 1 per cent of the Members ever were in it or ever got a book from it, and I doubt if the public should be obliged to pay the cost for the sole benefit or convenience of the Member from Texas.

When I brought that matter before the House some three or four years ago the Speaker of the House at that time did not know there was such a library in the House Building, and he was one of the commissioners in charge of the building. There are other places. They were all presented to the House four years ago, and you did not do anything. Why? Because of patronage—that most inviolate, that most sacred thing here on the hill. Gentlemen, if you will remove patronage and put such employees as may be needed here under civil service, you will stop this criticism of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield for a question only.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that those two positions in that library have been there all through the past 12 years of Republican régime, ever since the gentleman has been a Member?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And, as the gentleman is now going out of this Congress, this is the first I have ever heard him make a speech against it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I am not saying this is anything recent. The gentleman will remember I introduced into the House, after four months' work on a subcommittee, a resolution suggesting to the House the elimination of some 25 positions. That committee consisted of three, but the work was done by one, and may I take the credit for what work was done?

Some of those positions we could not even find, and the holders of those posts had never even reported to the pay office. They had their checks sent to them. Some of those positions may have been abolished, but more have been created. Two years after I made my report for economy, the Committee on Appropriations were given the same job, and they raised the expenses on Capitol Hill to the taxpayers over $1,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. That was under past years of the Republican régime.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Oh, never mind what régime it was. It was under patronage, and nothing has been done to remove the patronage. Now, I say to all of you, not because I am a Republican or you are a Democrat, but for your own protection, if you want to be honest with yourselves, if you want to stop this criticism of Congress, you will get after this patronage, and you will remove that fester here on the Hill. If you will do that there will not be much with which the taxpayers can find fault, or that the newspapers can find to exploit as far as special privilege, waste, extravagance, or business management in the House of Representatives is concerned, and another body might be obliged to follow a good example. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that I was not here at the beginning of the address made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] a little while ago with particular reference to my resolution which lifted the blanket of concealment from the doings of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation during those dark days of 1932, when transactions were made under cover.

I have no apology to offer for that resolution. I am receiving a vast volume of correspondence with reference to that subject, and I recall receiving one letter from a constituent in the gentleman's own home State telling me that a certain loan had been made down there, and in his judgment there were no securities worth while behind it, and telling me it was my duty to go ahead and investigate.

Mr. Chairman, I replied very courteously to the gentleman, and told him I thought he ought to address the Senators from his own State or his own Congressman and ask them to perform the investigation; that I had performed my duty when I introduced my resolution which lifted the blanket of concealment.

Now, with reference to the "Ogden Mills address" which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] has made this morning, I have a proposition to offer the gentleman. I trust he will hear me and I trust he will grant it. This is my proposition: I would like to have the gentleman from Missouri arrange for a joint debate between the man who makes just such a speech as the gentleman made this morning, Mr. Ogden Mills, and this humble Member from Nebraska with particular reference to the problem of publicity of the doings of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Of course, I want to have that debate conducted on neutral ground, so I suggest it might be conducted within the confines of the State from which the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CHINDBLOM, hails. That is very near to the State of Missouri. Why would I like to have it on neutral ground?

Because the people out there in that particular neutrality of which I speak are magnificently human; I think they would give me a square deal. That is all I ask.

I have been somewhat astounded that the gentleman from Missouri, when speaking as a Democrat here, would so assail the Speaker of this House, who is the real author and who has been the whole soul of the proceedings directing publicity of the loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I frankly stated here on the floor the other day when I introduced that resolution that I felt I was carrying out the wishes of the Speaker, my Speaker, of this House.

A little while ago the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] stood here and made some very pertinent remarks and asked some very pertinent questions. With permission of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I shall emulate him for a moment. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM]—he is absent, I see.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] who protests against publicity of the loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to these great banks and trust companies, if he has ever protested against the publication of the Federal loans made to the farmers of America in the sum of a few hundreds of dollars for the purpose of enabling them to get feed for their animals or seed to carry on their crop-production efforts during the ensuing year? Has the gentleman made any protest against the publicity of those little loans? [After a pause.] Silence is a hideous answer to the question.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I understand the gentleman was inquiring for me while I was out for a moment.

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, I am glad the gentleman has arrived. The gentleman in his tenderness, and he is always tender, was deprecating the fact that the loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the great banks and trust companies must be given to the eye of the public. He thought this should not be done. Now the question I want to ask is, Has the gentleman from Illinois ever uttered a protest against the publication of the names of the farmers in his own State who received a Federal feed or seed loan?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I never knew they were published.

Mr. HOWARD. But they are.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I never heard of their being published.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman should know that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am opposed to their being published, I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska. Not only do I read the large daily papers but I read half a dozen small newspapers of my own State, and I have never seen any attempt to publish the names of farmers receiving loans from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. HOWARD. I may say to the gentleman that in his own State their names are posted on the doors of elevators where these farmers must go to sell their grain. The practical effect is that the elevator people are warned not to purchase this or that man's property because it is under mortgage to the Government.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In what particular town in my State did the gentleman see that?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not refer to any particular town. I refer to the general practice over the country. This is the practice. So I suggest to the gentlemen—the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Missouri—the next time they come on the floor to utter the Ogden Mills plea in behalf of the larger interests that receive Federal aid, that they be so kind as also to make just a little bit of a plea in behalf of the American farmer who received a little feed or seed loan.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, having mentioned my name?

Mr. HOWARD. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. I may say it has not been my good fortune to read any statement by Mr. Mills on the subject, but I have read the resolution adopted by the bankers' association of my State, an association made up of small country bankers and their patrons who are being embarrassed by this situation.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman does not believe in the transaction of public business in a public way, then? He is in favor of its being practically transacted in the dark?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly not; but the gentleman knows that every committee of this House and, as a matter of fact, any legislative or administrative body engaged in the formulation of policy in peace or war must be accorded some privacy and some degree of immunity from outside interference.

Mr. HOWARD. To what does the gentleman refer? I would like to be enlightened. He tells me there are some transactions here that should not be made known. I want to know what they are. I am a Member of this House; I want to know.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman knows that almost daily the Committee on Ways and Means and the other committees of the House meet in executive session. The gentleman knows that the President's Cabinet meets constantly in executive session. It is absurd to insist that a committee should have half a dozen reporters present and half a room full of lobbyists in attendance before it can take up the private business of the House.

Mr. HOWARD. What is the private business of the House; will the gentleman explain?

Mr. CANNON. The business of the House as referred to its various committees.

It has been the practice for the committee to go into executive session at the close of public hearings on bills referred to them from the beginning of the Government. The gentleman is evidently not familiar with the customs of the House.

Mr. HOWARD. I resent the idea that there shall be any private business in this House. I understand the House is governed by rules, and I want to be obedient to every rule of the House which does not take from me my right as an American citizen; but I want to say to the gentleman and to all others that I stand in defiance of any rule of this House which shall deny to me, as a Member of the House, to divulge to my home people or to my country, if need be, anything that goes on here as a matter of public service. They are entitled to know it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that even in any of these executive sessions he, as a Member of Congress, has a perfect, inherent right to be present at every one of them. It is only when certain kinds of matters are being discussed that reporters are kept away, but the gentleman always has the right to be there. Is there anything wrong with that?

I would like to remind my friend from Nebraska that there is always a swarm of lobbyists here wanting appropriations for every kind of scheme imaginable. If the Committee on Appropriations were to throw open to everyone its hearings on the big annual supply bills, lobbyists would be so thick in the hearing room that orderly procedure and careful painstaking investigation into the estimates for bureaus and departments would be impossible. The heads of every department and bureau involved in an appropriation bill are always present, and are always heard, and know everything that takes place in a hearing, but lobbyists and the public are excluded so that the committee may carefully look into and review estimates in the hopes of eliminating all waste and extravagance and appropriations that are unnecessary.

Mr. HOWARD. What has that to do with it?

Mr. BLANTON. That explains why hearings before the committee on appropriations are not public.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; if I have time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska whether he voted for the war veterans' act under which we are giving compensation and disability allowances and various other benefits to veterans?

Mr. HOWARD. I did.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman know that not even he as a Member of Congress can get all the information he might want with regard to moneys paid out of the Federal Treasury to veterans?

Mr. HOWARD. He does know that, and he knows the shame of it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then the gentleman disagrees with the policy of the very act for which he voted?

Mr. HOWARD. I could not get that phase of it eliminated, and I proposed to take the whole good thing notwithstanding its one bad feature.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That was done to keep "peeping Toms" from finding out what men who served their country are receiving.

Mr. HOWARD. I try to live my life so that I stand in no fear of men, devils, women, or "peeping Toms."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is a Government organization created by Congress. So is the Agricultural Credit Corporation. So are the Federal land banks. Does the gentleman know that neither the Agricultural Credit Corporation nor the Federal land banks will give him as a Member of Congress information as to the loans which they make?

Mr. HOWARD. Unhappily, the gentleman does know that, but it is not the fault of the gentleman. If the gentleman from Nebraska had his way, that information would be open to every Member of the Congress upon demand, because the Members of Congress are here for the purpose of performing the service of the country; and I resent the attitude of any organization created by this body to act in any manner superior to this tribune of the people.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But we are now discussing what the policy of this tribune of the people should be. The gentleman has taken a great deal of exception to the loans made, as he calls it, to the big banks and trust companies. Of course, the gentleman would take the same exception with reference to loans made to a small bank in his own community or in mine, where publication of the information that a bank has found it necessary to go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to get a temporary loan tends to destroy the usefulness of that bank in its community and starts a run on it immediately.

That is just exactly what is happening to-day, and it is why we have a new situation of peril throughout the country. We read to-day that the Governor of Michigan even declared a moratorium for eight days, closing every bank in that State.

Mr. HOWARD. Just let me have a little of my time. I replied to the gentleman from Illinois who asked me if I would be in favor of publishing the name of a bank that has secured a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Then he tells about the fear that would be in the heart of the public that that bank was in trouble or it would not have gotten that loan.

Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the largest loan made to any bank in the country was made to a bank in his own State. It was made when that bank had one foot over the precipice of insolvency and the other foot slipping; and yet as soon as it became known to the people that this bank was able to get unlimited money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the public had confidence and the bank was saved.

O my friends, I do not believe that publication of the action of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in granting money to any bank will be harmful to the bank. That is not reasonable. It is not reasonable to think that the depositors will be annoyed or that they will be frightened by the fact that a lot of new money has been poured into the bank. That is not reasonable. Dawes did not think it was reasonable.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The Central Republic Bank & Trust Co. was not saved; as a matter of fact, it was closed. It is now liquidating its assets and the Dawes interests have organized an entirely new bank, the City National Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago. The result of the publicity was to make it absolutely impossible for the Central Republic Bank & Trust Co. to continue its business.

Mr. HOWARD. The way it was running, I think it was a pretty good thing.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman should be careful in his references to the running of the bank. There was no fault to be found with the running of the bank.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FIESINGER].

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, I think it is known to a great many Members of the House that I have been a member of the committee that has been making a study of the effect of the low price of silver. I think I have stated before on this floor that I have no interest in silver whatsoever. I am interested, however, in the restoration or the reversal of the downward trend of the commodity-price level, and this is the angle from which we have been studying silver. We have been studying this for nearly a year and I was interested to note that the President of the United States last night in New York gave expression to the thought that it would be advisable to recognize silver as a part of our monetary reserves. I want to read what he said for the purposes of this record, and I would like to have it stand out emblazoned before the American people:

Nor is it necessary from an international point of view that those nations who have been forced off the gold standard shall be again restored to former gold values. It will suffice if it only is fixed. From this source are the principal hopes for restoring world confidence and reversing the growing barriers to the movement of goods, and making possible the security in trade which will again revive a demand for such goods. To do this it is necessary to have strong and courageous action on the part of the leading commercial nations. If some sort of international financial action is necessary to enable central banks to cooperate for the purpose of stabilizing currencies, nations should have no hesitation in joining in such an operation under proper safeguards. If some part of the debt payments to us could be set aside from temporary use for this purpose, we should not hesitate to do so. At the same time the world should endeavor to find a place for silver, at least in enlarged subsidiary coinage.

I would like to have the House note that the President does not confine his thought to subsidiary coinage of silver or to using silver for subsidiary coinage, but he emphatically states that he would find a place for silver.

I am happy to state that the committee upon which I have had the honor to serve, I think within two or three days, will report out a measure. This measure, I hope—in fact, I know—will contemplate that we stand upon the gold standard; that we must not deviate from the gold standard. However, the committee feels, not perhaps because there is a shortage of gold in the world, but as the President said, this gold has become pocketed, nations and banks are hoarding this gold and do not give it free movement—so the committee, I think, will report out a bill to allow silver to be put into our reserves at the gold price of silver; that is, to extend the monetary reserves.

Along about last August an article appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, which is a conservative journal, on the subject of gold.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five more minutes.

Mr. FIESINGER. I do not want to take the time to read this article, but I will point out the high spots. The point of the article is that in 1816 England went off silver. She went upon a single monetary base, and as a result of this action England went into a depression; in fact, the world went into a depression much as we have it in this country to-day, and as it exists throughout the world. As a matter of fact, there were some 4,000,000 people in England at that time who were upon the rolls. There were bread riots, and people thought that the British Empire was about to fall to pieces.

From 1819 until 1848 there was a fall in the commodity price level; and when new gold was discovered in California and in Australia, and this gold found its way into the circulatory system of the world, commodity prices rose in the United States from 84 in 1851 to 114 in 1854.

Then again, in 1873, when the United States demonetized silver, we had a world falling price level until 1896, when John Hays Hammond discovered gold in the Rand and that gold found its way again into the circulatory system. Commodity prices rose as a result of this gold coming into the circulatory system from 66 in 1896 to 107 in 1910.

Mr. Chairman, I think the President is right. If you had a condition of anemia, we will say, and a doctor came along and prescribed a certain medicine for you and you recovered as a result of this medicine, and 10 years later you had another attack of anemia, and the doctor came along and gave you the same medicine, and you were again restored to health, and then, we will say, that 10 years after this you had another attack of the same disease, what would you do? What would anyone do? They would go back to the same doctor that had restored them on two previous occasions.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIESINGER. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman recall the medicines that were administered to the American people following the election of 1896?

Mr. FIESINGER. I recall that, but I am saying to you that neither Mr. Bryan nor Mr. McKinley produced that medicine. It was produced in South Africa; and when that gold came into the world, prices were rising before the election of 1896.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It was produced by the establishment, permanently, of the gold standard in the United States and by the adoption of the McKinley tariff law following the election of 1896.

Mr. FIESINGER. I think the gentleman is mistaken, in that we did not go on the gold standard until 1900.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It followed the election of 1896, and was followed by legislation two or three years later.

Mr. FIESINGER. The chart will show that commodity prices were rising before the election of 1896 and that it was not due to the tariff.

It seems to be quite generally understood that business stagnation and unemployment are due to the appreciated value of gold. This appreciation of gold is the result of world conditions, and its effect is great injustice as between producer and consumer and debtors and creditors. Gold has appreciated about 50 per cent above normal as reflected in commodity prices and as much as two or three hundred per cent when it reflects real-estate values, which are the base of all our wealth. Gold is a commodity like other commodities, except that it is used as an instrument of measurement in our monetary systems. That is to say, it is a yardstick wherewith to measure the value of other forms of property. That yardstick has increased in measuring length and has the same effect as though a business man buying and selling silk at a dollar a yard should have slipped into his store a measurement for the yard that he used, and did not know about, that was twice as long as the yard. It is conceded by everyone that if we were to increase the quantity of gold by some sudden means, like the discovery of new gold mines, if the quantity were sufficient, that the value of gold would fall and commodity prices as measured by gold would rise. Now, in order to accomplish this in the absence of new gold being discovered it is the purpose of a bill I introduced, No. 14645, to put silver in our metallic reserves at the gold price of silver, so as to extend the base of our metallic reserves much as though new gold were to be placed in our reserves. The effect of this should be to take the strain off gold and thus reflect a rise in commodity price level. It is generally conceded that if the general commodity price level was at 100, as fixed by the United States Department of Labor statistics, that that commodity price level would be a fair relation between producer and consumer and debtors and creditors. In other words, when the commodity price level is at 100, as fixed by the Department of Labor statistics, the purchasing power of gold is in fair relationship to commodities and permits the doing of business between producer and consumer and allows debtors to pay their creditors on a fair basis. The nations of the world, by the manipulation of their currencies with reference to gold, seriously affect the world commodity price level. It is practically within their power by manipulation to say what prices the American farmer shall be given for his wheat, cotton, and other commodities, as well as all wealth which springs from the land. It is the design of this bill to take away from those nations that power and give that power to the United States, which is interested in a fair commodity price level in order to effectually distribute the products of its farms, mines, and factories. This is necessary if we are to restore prosperity, because some of the nations that import prime commodities are interested in a different and a lower commodity price level than we must have in the United States, which is a large producer of prime commodities. It must be understood that this bill does not affect the gold standard nor does it affect the use of gold as the measuring rod, except to bring down the appreciated value of gold where it should be, in our interest, to do justice between producer and consumer and debtor and creditor. This bill does not recognize free and unlimited coinage of silver at any fixed ratio, thereby calling for a double standard of measurement and making our gold subject to Gresham's law. It would remonetize silver at the gold value of silver and increase the primary money of the world, thus giving a purchasing power to more than half the people of the world. This purchasing power would be translated into terms of commodities, and with that demand for commodities the price level would rise, and with the rise of the price level the banks and our Federal reserve system would again function to nourish commerce and industry.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we have had some most amusing exhibitions in the Chamber within the last few days. Our brethren across the aisle have put up frequently our friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] to speak for them and inveigh against promises made in the last campaign as not having been fulfilled.

We have our friend from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL], complaining about extravagances when they have existed ever since he came to Congress and throughout all the 12 years of Republican régime. I was with him 100 per cent on his report, but since then not at any time have I ever heard him speak against them. But now he is going out in a few days and all of a sudden he becomes interested in the subject. I wish that he were going to be here in the next Congress to help us Democrats stop waste and extravagance.

I want to say to my friend that in the last election the people had become tired of the present House of Representatives. They elected a new one. The people had become tired of the occupant of the White House. They elected a new one. The people had become tired of the present membership of the Senate. They elected a new Senate. The people had become tired of the old Congress coming in a year after the election. They passed the lame-duck amendment providing that with the next election the new Congress shall begin to function soon after election.

The new occupant of the White House will not take his oath of office until March 4. If we look outside the Capitol, we will see great preparations are being made for the inaugural of the new President on March 4. The new Senate and the new House of Representatives will not come in until March 4. When March 4 comes, it will be time for holding Democrats responsible for the present conditions.

Mr. BOYLAN. It is only manifestly fair for people to wait until the new government begins to function.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but Republicans here can not wait. They are in too big a hurry. I think there will be a change for the better after March 4. I have such confidence in the man who is going into the White House, I have such confidence about his concern respecting the difficulties under which Americans now live, that I believe we are going to have a decided change for the better.

But I want to say that there is one act that was passed by Congress, which I fought against and tried to keep from passing, that if any great relief comes in the direction of the reduction of governmental expenses must be repealed, and that is the reclassification act of 1923.

Why should not Congress have control over the purse strings of the Treasury? Why should not Congress determine what salaries shall be paid? Why should Congress pass that over to some board of employees to determine for themselves and, in effect, fix their own salaries?

I wonder if the American people know that neither the House nor the Senate can control the salaries of employees of the Government under the present law? They can not do it. When the reclassification act was passed in 1923 with respect to salaries, Congress lost all control.

There has been a reorganization for every little unit, and every bureau has been made a separate department of that bureau; and some little clerk, some $1,200 or $1,400 clerk, has been put at the head of that unit, called a department, and he has been made a director or made a deputy or made a superintendent or made a chief or made this, that, or the other in order to form some excuse for raising his salary. We find the salaries raised, doubled, and in instances almost trebled, and that exists to-day. I can exemplify that to you by calling your attention to what has happened in the District of Columbia. Before doing so, I call the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. HOWARD, to what would happen if we opened up the hearings on appropriation bills to the general public. Since we have been sitting here to-day there has been a great big printed document of several pages sent here by lobbyists and handed to every Member on this floor, lobbying against one little provision in this bill. If you opened up those hearings to the lobbyists of the United States, you would absolutely make it possible for the big lobbyists of this country to influence almost every appropriation that was put into the bill. You would have them hounding to death every member of the committee. They would be calling at our offices; they would be calling us over the phone; they would be writing us letters, sending us telegrams, and it would be impossible for a member of the Committee on Appropriations to properly function if you would open up those rooms to the lobbyists of the country when hearings were going on on appropriation bills.

I want to call your attention now to the way the 1923 classification act has raised these salaries for the city government of the District of Columbia. I have gathered the statistics respecting every bureau of the Government, but to have authentic figures I had the auditor of the District, Mr. Donovan, prepare a list of the employees who get more than $2,500 a year in the District government, and give their raises in salary since 1923. Remember you are paying about $8,500,000 right now of the people's money toward the expense of this District every year, and you have paid as high as $11,000,000 in past times. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include some tables, because I shall refer in my remarks only to certain items in such tables.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I will now quote from the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations held on the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1933, and the positions relate to employees of the District of Columbia only, whose salaries are above $2,500 per annum:

NAMES AND POSITIONS OF EMPLOYEES RECEIVING OVER $2,500 AND SALARIES PRIOR TO RECLASSIFICATION ACT

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in that connection, I want to ask that the committee have Mr. Donovan prepare and submit a table in the hearing showing the names of all employees of the District government who now receive over $2,500 per annum, showing what salaries they drew prior to the reclassification act, under what names their positions then were designated, and also showing those who have come into new positions, who are now drawing over $2,500, and showing what their predecessors drew prior to the reclassification act.

I am making a study of that with respect to all the departments of the Government, and that has been done in regard to the other departments. I would like to have that included in the hearing on the District bill.

Mr. CANNON. That data is being compiled for all the departments, and we will be glad if the auditor could give us that information in regard to the District government.

Mr. DONOVAN. We will prepare such information and insert it in the record.

(The statement referred to is as follows:)

[1] Created since 1923. [2] Per diem.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the foregoing are merely the employees of the District government whose salaries are over $2,500 per year. There is a great army of them who get less than $2,500.

I also had the following information given by the auditor:

DISTRICT EMPLOYEES RECEIVING PAY AS RETIRED EMERGENCY OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. BLANTON. In that connection, there is one other matter that should be included in that table, and that is a list of all employees of the District government, if there are any, who are drawing, in addition to their salaries, emergency retired pay as retired emergency officers.

I want that information also because I am checking that up in the other departments.

Mr. DONOVAN. I insert in the record the following statements.

(The statements referred to are as follows:)

Statement listing employees of the District government who are receiving "emergency retired pay" showing their present positions with the salary received therefrom

| Name | Official position | Salary | Pension |
|---|---|---|---|
| Register of wills, Cogswell, Theodore. | Register of wills | $6,400 | $125 per month. |
| Police department, McGrath, William H. | Private, class 6 | 2,400 | $116.87 per month. |
| Tuberculosis Hospital, Lavalley, George E. | Property officer | 1,440 | $133.78 per month. |

You will note, Mr. Chairman, that I had Auditor Donovan put in the amount of the salary the individual drew before the 1923 classification act was passed and the salary that he now draws. Look at some of these positions and how they have been changed and made into director or superintendent or chiefs and deputies.

Take the Commissioners of the District. When that act was passed they got $5,000 a year, and they now get $9,000. Quite a raise, is it not? Then take Daniel E. Garges, the secretary. He got $2,700 a year before the act was passed, and now he gets $5,600. Then there is Mr. Hargrave, who is in the purchasing division. He used to get $3,000 a year, and now he gets $5,400 a year. He has an assistant getting $3,200 a year. Then the chief of the printing section gets $3,300 and the deputy $3,100. There is another assistant at $2,900, and another chief clerk at $2,600. Remember, if you please, before you passed the reclassification act you had three commissioners, and each one of them controlled certain units of the Government's business. There were just three units, one for each commissioner, and they had one clerk and one secretary, but they have divided all those things up now into bureaus and divisions and departments, with a clerk and secretary for each one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a minute. You will find a clerk for almost every unit at a tremendous salary, nearly double what the clerk for the whole business used to get. Here is the building inspection division. The salary of Mr. Oehmann was raised from $3,000 to $5,800, and Mr. McGuire's from $2,000 to $3,400, that of Mr. J. B. Daley from $1,800 to $3,400. There is another here from $1,800 to $3,300, and then all these assistants and deputies. There is another at $3,200, then Mr. Johnson at $3,200, Mr. Richie at $2,500, Mr. Newman at $2,700, Mr. Hodges at $2,700, Mr. Downey at $2,700, another at $2,600, Mr. Price at $2,600, Mr. Campbell at $2,600, Mr. Roach at $2,600, Mr. Brown at $2,600. They are all assistants and deputies who are in charge of certain little divisions under that one division.

Then we have here the assessor's office. Mr. Richards used to get $3,500 before the act was passed, and now he gets $7,500, and his deputy gets $5,600. Then he has six assistant assessors who used to get $3,000, and all of them now get $4,800. He has two more assistants that used to get $2,000, and they have been raised to $4,800 each by this board. Then you have the collector of taxes, raised from $4,000 to $6,000, and a deputy of $3,000, and then the auditor, Mr. Donovan. Before this act was passed he got $4,000, and he has been raised to $9,000, a $5,000 raise. There is an assistant auditor at $3,100, and another assistant auditor at $3,400, and then a principal assistant auditor at $4,600, and then a chief bookkeeper at $3,000. Pretty high for a bookkeeper, is it not? How many bookkeepers have you in your banks at home who get $3,000 a year?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. Certainly.

Mr. GOSS. Is the gentleman giving notice to the House that he is going to offer amendments to limit these salaries?

Mr. BLANTON. What is the use? You can not do it. The board fixes them.

Mr. GOSS. Not under a limitation.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to the gentleman that I have before the committee a bill, House Joint Resolution No. 344, that has been there for over a year to repeal this act. The gentleman could help us get the committee to vote that bill out and pass it.

Mr. GOSS. Under the emergency retirement act? I am for it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has in mind my bill, House Joint Resolution No. 355, to repeal the emergency officers' retirement act, that I have before his committee, but he has not taken any action on many features of it.

Mr. GOSS. It is not before our committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes, it is. It is my resolution 355 before his committee and 344 is before another committee.

Mr. GOSS. The chairman of the committee is here. He might answer the gentleman better than I can.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I want the gentleman to get busy and vote out the entire resolution, No. 355. The committee has reported a part of my resolution, and passed part of it, but not all of it. I wish the gentleman would report the balance of it.

Mr. GOSS. I hope the gentleman will talk to some of his Democratic colleagues on that committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there is no man here who deserves more credit and commendation than the chairman of the gentleman's committee [Mr. McSWAIN]. He is a splendid, hard working, earnest representative of the people, and he has done a lot of work in there. He has shown me that he has got the guts to act and is not afraid. He is not afraid to act. Within a reasonable time we will get some action on No. 355, but we must repeal this classification act. We must retain control of Congress over the purse strings of the Treasury. It is outrageous that we permit a board to sit here and double and treble salaries, paying ordinary bookkeepers three and four thousand dollars a year out of the people's Treasury, when bookkeepers in banks back home get fifteen hundred and eighteen hundred and two thousand dollars, and not much more than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is the corporation counsel. He is a splendid fellow. He is a good friend of mine and I like him. He is a bully good fellow, but before this act he received $4,000 a year. Now he is getting $9,000. That is a $5,000 raise. Then he has an assistant at $7,000, another assistant at $7,000, another at $6,000, another at $5,000 who used to get $1,800, another at $4,800 who used to get $2,500, another one at $4,000, another one at $3,000, another one at $3,200 who used to get $1,600, another one at $3,200 who used to get $1,500.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute.

The corporation counsel has another assistant at $3,200; one other at $3,200; another at $2,800; another at $2,600; another at $2,200; another at $2,700 who used to get $1,400 before this act was passed.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman give the date of the act?

Mr. BLANTON. 1923.

Here is the coroner, who is just an ordinary justice of the peace. There are justices of the peace in the United States who do not make a thousand dollars a year, who do three times as much work. Here is this coroner who had his salary raised from $1,800 to $3,200.

Here is the weights and measures man, $3,700. Here is a chief clerk who had his salary raised from $2,490 to $4,000. Here is a whole bunch of them in the municipal architect's office. Just notice how they run. The municipal architect, before the act was passed in 1923, received $3,600. Now he gets $7,500. He has an assistant at $5,000; another at $4,600; another at $4,600; another at $3,800; another at $3,800; another at $3,200; another at $3,300; another at $3,200; another at $3,200; and so on down the line. He has about a dozen associate engineers getting from $2,600 to $3,800, all in that one office. The Public Utilities Commission, not the members of the commission but employees of the commission: Mr. Bachman used to get $3,000. Now he is getting $5,000. There is a whole bunch of them.

Here is Mr. Theodore Cogswell, register of wills, who is a splendid, good fellow. He is probably up in the gallery now. He has been around this Capitol for quite a while trying to overturn the action of the chairman on this bill. He used to be a clerk at $1,200 down there. When this act was passed he was getting $4,000. He was immediately raised to $6,400; a $2,400 raise. In addition to that, last year he was professor of wills out at Howard University. He was paid last year $700 salary for that. Then he is retired, as a disabled emergency officer of the United States, supposed to be disabled so he can not work, and he gets $125 per month for life for that—retired pay. When I asked him how much time it took to prepare these lectures that he gave at Howard University on wills, he said three or four hours per lecture. He is a disabled emergency officer, getting $125 a month and has been getting $700 a year from Howard University, and as his salary he is getting $6,400 from the District government. I told him the other day when he came into my office that if he would give all of his time to the Government and cut out these Howard University lectures and if the rest of his employees would do a good, hard day's work like Congressmen have to do, the chairman of the committee would not be criticized for cutting his force.

I am backing our chairman on his bill. You will have a lot of these propagandists and a lot of these lobbyists here to try to tear the bill to pieces. I am wondering if you are going to let them do it?

Let me mention just a few bureaus, to show you how the 1923 classification act raised salaries of all bureaus.

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

Let me show you how the classification act of 1923 affected the employees in the Census Bureau. Mr. William M. Steuart was raised from $6,000 to $9,000 per year. Mr. Joseph A. Hill was raised from $4,015 to $6,000. Mr. Arthur J. Hirsch was raised from $3,300 to $6,400. Mr. LeVerne Beales was raised from $2,920 to $6,400. Mr. William L. Austin was raised from $3,300 to $6,000. Mr. Leon E. Truesdell was raised from $2,920 to $6,000. Mr. Starke M. Grogan was raised from $3,300 to $5,800. Mr. Harvey J. Zimmerman was raised from $2,920 to $5,800. Mr. Clarence E. Batschelet was raised from $2,190 to $5,800. Mr. Timothy F. Murphy was raised from $2,920 to $5,800. Mr. George W. Potter was raised from $1,400 to $3,000.

BUREAU OF FISHERIES

Here is how the 1923 classification act shot upward the salaries of the employees of the fisheries, a few of which I will mention: Mr. Henry O'Malley's salary was raised from $5,000 to $9,000 per year. Mr. Lewis Radcliffe was raised from $3,500 to $7,000. Mr. Reginald H. Fiedler was raised from $1,680 to $4,600. Mr. Glen C. Leach was raised from $2,700 to $5,000. Mr. Ward T. Bower was raised from $3,000 to $5,000. Mr. Albert K. Brown was raised from $2,000 to $4,600. Mr. Wallace T. Conn was raised from $2,400 to $4,600. Mr. Herbert S. Davis was raised from $2,500 to $4,800. Mr. Samuel F. Hildebrand was raised from $2,500 to $4,600. Mr. John R. Manning was raised from $2,200 to $4,200. Mr. Milton C. James was raised from $1,200 to $4,200. Mr. James M. Lemon was raised from $2,100 to $3,400. Mr. John R. Gardner was raised from $1,320 to $2,700. Alice W. Stearns was raised from $1,800 to $3,200. Edgar W. Fearnow was raised from $1,600 to $2,700. John R. Van Houten was raised from $1,400 to $2,500. Carl B. Tendick was raised from $1,000 to $2,500. Helen K. Collins was raised from $1,400 to $2,700. Oscar E. Sette was raised from $2,500 to $5,000. John Van Oosten was raised from $1,400 to $4,200. Dennis Winn was raised from $2,500 to $4,100. Herbert F. Prytherch was raised from $1,400 to $3,800. Edward M. Ball was raised from $2,000 to $3,800. Thomas K. Chamberlain was raised from $1,400 to $3,500. Gustav W. Carlson was raised from $1,700 to $3,200. Harlan B. Holmes was raised from $1,400 to $3,200.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

Let me mention a few positions in the Coast and Geodetic Survey to illustrate how the classification act of 1923 boosted their salaries: Oscar S. Adams was raised from $2,500 to $4,800. Henry G. Avers was raised from $2,600 to $5,200. Harlow Bacon was raised from $2,700 to $5,000. Oscar R. Baker was raised from $1,200 to $2,600. Dudley P. Barnette was raised from $2,440 to $5,000. Percy B. Castles was raised from $2,500 to $4,600. Clara B. Church was raised from $2,040 to $3,400. Charles H. Deetz was raised from $2,900 to $5,200. Lindsey P. Disney was raised from $1,840 to $3,800. Edmund P. Ellis was raised from $2,700 to $5,000. George L. Flower was raised from $2,900 to $6,200. Henry S. Gamble was raised from $2,500 to $4,600. Daniel L. Hazard was raised from $3,000 to $5,200. Walter D. Lambert was raised from $2,500 to $4,800. Harry A. Marmer was raised from $2,700 to $5,200. Frank Neumann was raised from $2,040 to $4,000. Douglas L. Parkhurst was raised from $3,000 to $5,600. Walter F. Reynolds was raised from $2,700 to $5,000. Aaron L. Shalowitz was raised from $2,300 to $5,000. Clarence H. Swick was raised from $2,500 to $5,000. Walter J. Bilby was raised from $1,200 to $3,200. Ralph R. Bodle was raised from $1,620 to $3,000. William Mussetter was raised from $2,040 to $4,700.

PATENT BUREAU

Here are some in the Patent Office: Thomas E. Robertson was raised from $6,000 to $9,000. William A. Kinnan was raised from $5,000 to $7,500. Millard J. Moore was raised from $4,000 to $7,000. Fred M. Hopkins was raised from $3,900 to $6,500. James W. Clift was raised from $3,900 to $6,500. Frank P. Edenburg, Elonzo T. Morgan, Paul P. Pierce, Walter L. Redrow, and William L. Thurber were all raised from $3,900 to $6,500 each. Eugene Landers was raised from $4,000 to $6,500. Irvin P. Disney was raised from $4,000 to $5,600. Harry I. Houston was raised from $3,300 to $5,600. Harold H. Jacobs was raised from $2,800 to $5,600. Franklin L. Adams was raised from $2,800 to $5,600. Robert E. Adams was raised from $3,100 to $5,600. Winfred M. Adams was raised from $3,900 to $5,600. Leo P. McCann was raised from $1,500 to $4,600. Samuel Levin was raised from $1,925 to $4,600. Edwin L. Reynolds and Philip W. Shepard were each raised from $1,925 to $4,600. Louis J. Dembo, Pasquale J. Federico, Alfred B. Goodall, and Revere P. Gurley were all raised from $1,650 to $3,500 each. Leighton W. Johnston was raised from $1,200 to $3,500.

The above will illustrate just how the salaries have been raised by the 1923 classification act in all of the numerous bureaus of this Government. I fought against that act when it passed. I did everything within my power to stop it. The unions of the various employees of this Government under whip and spur forced it through Congress. And the above is the result.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Please let me get these facts in here. They are important. I have already taken too much time. These are important statistics. You will find this same condition in every bureau and every department of this Government where this Classification Board has taken fourteen and fifteen hundred dollar clerks and put them in as chiefs or deputies or superintendents or directors in charge of units and called them department heads and raised their salaries double and sometimes treble since 1923. It is not right. I am one who is going to fight them until something freezes over.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if this increase in salary had increased the efficiency of service, or if they got a better personnel?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. They got the same ones, and they usually put somebody else in his place as assistant at a bigger salary than he got formerly to do the work for him.

I have been trying to get the secretary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on the phone all the morning. I tried to get his assistant. I could not even get his assistant. Finally, I got a subsecretary down the line four or five times removed. She promised to give me some information in two or three hours, and I have not gotten it yet. I will have to go down there to get it.

You usually destroy efficiency when you raise salaries in the way these salaries have been raised.

Did you know that you can not control the salary of a single one of these bureau chiefs? Did you know that? You have not got a bit of control; you are absolutely helpless. You go back home and your people say, "Why do not you do so and so?" I want you to tell them you can not do it because there is a law here, the classification act of 1923, that puts it in the hands of a board of Government employees to say how much salaries the employees of the Government shall receive.

Now, I am for the employees. God knows I sympathize with the real workers who do the work down there on little measly salaries. It is these up-above chiefs who are getting paid and do not do the work, who spend lots of their time on the golf links in golf weather, and who are doing extra work outside the Government, lecturing somewhere, or getting outside salaries for something else that I complain about. It ought to stop. I want you to read the facts I have mentioned to-morrow. Did you know that I have gotten a list of every employee in the Government, in every bureau and department, who draws over $2,500 a year, showing what they drew in 1923 and what they have drawn since the 1923 act was passed? I wish the Congress would give me authority to publish it in document form and let you have it. It is worth the money. I have spent a long time in accumulating this information, and I hope the Committee on Printing, before we adjourn, will pass a resolution to give me authority to publish it in pamphlet form.

Now I am through and shall be pleased to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. HOLMES. On what page of the hearings are these figures to be found?

Mr. BLANTON. These figures are printed in the hearings on the District of Columbia appropriation bill for 1933, beginning at page 30. From the RECORD to-day the gentleman will have the figures on District of Columbia employees who draw over $2,500 per annum.

If there are no further questions, I gladly yield the floor.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN].

Mr. MCGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, along the line of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FIESINGER], a member of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, which committee has been discussing the silver question and other related monetary questions, I wish to make a few remarks.

In the beginning I may say that it seems to me we are just about at the end of the road on the principle involved in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, of Government credit being extended to private institutions. That is, we are about at the end of the road so far as is concerned the ability of the Government to carry out this program. However, we have just barely started in trying this program, unless we obtain some monetary reform very quickly.

Now, let us see what confronts the country. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has an authorization of a total amount of $4,000,000,000. We started out with the idea that we would only bolster up the credit of certain key institutions, such as the banks, insurance companies, and railroad companies. The first Reconstruction Finance Corporation movement contemplated the use of $2,000,000,000.

When we were considering the first Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill it was suggested by gentlemen from Chicago and New York City that municipalities be made eligible for loans. The House literally howled that down; they gave it no consideration. We had not gone more than three or four months with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation plan until the President himself had to bow to the inevitable and ask to make loans to cities.

What has happened? We now find the farm mortgagees demanding that they be given relief through the principle of borrowing money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We have bills here for $1,000,000,000 of farm mortgage relief to take care of some interest. This will be but a drop in the bucket. There is $9,000,000,000 of farm mortgages, and if we are going to furnish credit to take care of the interest we are ultimately going to have to furnish money to take care of the principal. Then, when we take care of the farm mortgages it follows, as night follows day, that Uncle Sam must be as good to his city children as he is to his rural children and take care of the city mortgages, and that will be another $14,000,000,000.

Having taken the course of trying to use public credit, Government credit, to bolster up private obligations, we find ourselves confronted with this situation: That there is now a total of nearly $24,000,000,000 of debt in this country which is clamoring for the same protection; and, sooner or later, Congress will be forced to give in. When this happens what will be the situation of the Government of the United States? The very Government that is being called upon to take care of these obligations is a Government which can not balance its own Budget and is unable to get enough revenue to meet 50 per cent of its current obligations.

We have not played the game exactly square with ourselves or with the country. We have said we would not make appropriations for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation but would have the corporation borrow the money. It was obvious from the beginning that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could not go out and borrow that $4,000,000,000, or the $2,000,000,000 to start with, from the public, and it was necessary to provide for the Secretary of the Treasury to take up the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bonds. This is what has been happening. The Secretary of the Treasury has been buying the bonds. Where has the Secretary of the Treasury been getting the money? By issuing short-term notes and selling them to the banks, the same identical way the Secretary of the Treasury would have gotten the money had we made the appropriation to provide funds for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

It appears now that our Budget has become unbalanced to the extent of about $1,500,000,000 since July 1 of this last year. That is what appears in the Budget. The truth is it has become unbalanced nearly $2,500,000,000 to $3,000,000,000 since July 1 last year, because there should be added thereto the money the Secretary of the Treasury has borrowed and turned over to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

There is $198,000,000,000 of debt in this country. This much is certain: If the people can not pay the debt themselves directly, then they can not pay it through the processes of paying taxes into the Government and the Government lending the money back to them to take care of their debts. We are reaching the phase where neither the people nor the Government can borrow itself out of debt. The truth of the matter is we have now about reached the end of our program, and the American people are squarely confronted with making a choice between two alternatives: Either going through a liquidation, which means a repudiation in whole or in part of the debts of the country, or bringing about a reduction in the value of the dollar which pays the debts.

We can simply take our choice. Personally I think it is more humane to take an honest, fair, frank reduction in the value of the dollar that pays the debts.

Now, what is the value of a dollar? Some one says a dollar is worth 100 cents. That is an illusion. A dollar is worth 22.23 fine grains of gold, because that is the gold content of a dollar; and when you talk about reducing the value of the dollar there is just one way to reduce it, and that is to reduce the amount of gold in the dollar. As long as you leave the same gold content in the dollar it is going to have the same identical value.

There are those who seem to think it is exceptionally hazardous to think about reducing the gold content of the dollar. What is sacred about 22.23 fine grains of gold in a dollar? Why is that the content of our gold dollar? Because Congress at a former time provided by law that that would be the content of a gold dollar.

At that time the gold dollar did not have to bear the responsibility of paying $21,000,000,000 of national debt and countless billions of dollars of State and local public debt. The gold dollar at that time did not have to bear the responsibility of paying a total debt in this country of $198,000,000,000. It does to-day, and the amount of gold has not increased in proportion to the increase in our debts. That simply means that this amount is not going to be paid in full on the basis of a dollar of 22.23 grains of gold.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The gentleman has given this subject a great deal of thought and attention. I wonder what his answer is to what would be done with the value of additional gold which is now in existence and which would be increased by such a reduction in the value of the gold dollar. For example, if you reduce it one-third then the present four and a half billion of gold would have the same intrinsic value, and you would have a third more for coins which would be in the hands of the people who have the actual gold. How are you going to equalize that if you make such a change?

Mr. McGUGIN. We have now approximately four billion in gold based upon 22.23 grains to the gold dollar. Of course, if we reduce the gold content one-third it would mean we have six billion of gold instead of four; no more gold, but we would have $6,000,000,000 of 15-grain dollars instead of $4,000,000,000 of 22.23-grain gold dollars.

Now, as I understood the gentleman's question, suppose I have a thousand dollars of gold. The minute you reduce the content of the gold dollar a third it means that I have approximately 1,500 of the new dollars of 15 grains each. You say I make a third. Yes; the man that has his money invested in gold makes one-third; but the man that has his money invested in anything else will make a third, measured in the value of new dollars. If he has a farm which to-day is worth five thousand of present dollars, if you reduce the content of the dollar one-third the farm is then worth one-third more dollars—not 22.23 grains but of 15 grains.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Then, if you have changed the measuring rod and you have said that this thousand dollars in gold which has 1,000 as its mark, you leave the gold exactly as it was and say that its mark is now 1,500, how have you done anything but just change words?

In other words, the gold is the gold, and the figures representing its value have been changed, but the quantity of gold is the same. Its intrinsic value for trading or other purposes does not change even though you change the figures representing it.

Mr. McGUGIN. Measured in the number of dollars, it is increased one-third. It is changed. It is increased one-third. If you have a pound of metal here and divide it by 22 you have fewer units than you do if you divide it by 15, do you not? That is obviously the situation.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman spoke of there being two alternatives—one to repudiate and one to reduce the amount of gold in the dollar.

Mr. McGUGIN. No; I did not say that. I said we had the alternative of either going through repudiation, which we are now going through, or reducing the value of the dollar which pays the debt.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then the method the gentleman would employ would be reducing the number of grains that go into the dollar?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then, take this twenty-one billion of to-day that the United States owes, most of which is written payable in dollars of the present standard of weight and fineness, do you not present to the people who hold these bonds one-third more dollars than they are entitled to? You either do that or, if you make them take the reduced dollar in the debts named in the bond, then you have repudiated the debt to the extent of one-third.

Mr. McGUGIN. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. How are you going to handle that situation?

Mr. McGUGIN. There is no question in my mind but that you are either going to repudiate in part the number of dollars due or you are going to repudiate it in part by reducing the value of the dollar.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then there is the further question, How are you going to settle with the bondholders of this country? Are you going to repudiate the bond in part or are you going to pay them more of these dollars? How are you going to make such a settlement and has Congress the power to repudiate and not maintain the faith of the Government?

Mr. McGUGIN. Here is the power that Congress has: Congress has the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof. I think this means, primarily, coining a metal coin which is our basic coin or gold coin and regulating the value thereof by prescribing the amount of gold in the coin. Now, answering the question, whenever the Congress of the United States under its constitutional power provides that the gold dollar shall have 15 grains in it, I think this 15-grain dollar will pay any dollar of debt in this country, and I do not believe that by private contract a debtor may be made to pay a dollar different from the dollar which is prescribed by Congress, under constitutional authority vested in Congress to coin money and regulate its value.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. PITTENGER. Most of these mortgages and contract obligations now provide for payment in gold coin of the United States of the present weight and fineness. Does the gentleman mean that under the Constitution of the United States you can break that kind of contract?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. McGUGIN. Answering the gentleman's question, let us take this illustration. I borrow $1,000 of you to-day with the clause in it, payable in gold of the present weight and fineness. Within six months the Congress changes the content of the gold dollar until it is a 15-grain dollar. When this note falls due, I come to you and offer you my check and you say, "I do not want a check, I want gold dollars." I go back and get you gold dollars from the Treasury of the United States and bring them to you. You toss one of them into the scales and say, "I do not want that dollar; I want a 22-grain dollar and this is only a 15-grain dollar." I say to you, "I can not get any such dollar and there is not any such dollar. The Government of the United States has quit making it." You then say to me, "You can give me more dollars," and I say to you, "No; I agreed to pay you $1,000."

Now, obviously, this contract must be breached in one of two respects, either I must be made to pay you approximately $1,500 when I agreed to pay you $1,000, or you must take a 15-grain dollar instead of a 22.23-grain dollar. In the last analysis, this is a question that only the Supreme Court of the United States can decide, but I do not believe the Supreme Court is ever going to say that I, a debtor, must pay to you, a creditor, a dollar different from the dollar prescribed by the Congress of the United States under the Constitution.

Mr. PITTENGER. So that the gentleman believes you can be compelled to take a dollar that has fewer grains in it than the old dollar that you agreed to pay.

Mr. McGUGIN. Certainly. I believe that all private contracts must bow to and adjust themselves to the majesty of the Constitution. The Constitution vests in Congress, not private contractors, the power to prescribe the content of gold dollars. In addition to this, Congress can place in such legislation an equalizing tax that will take 100 per cent of all profits made from collecting dollars of more than 15 grains of gold.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Thursday, the gentleman will find a brief on this subject in a speech of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes; I may say to those who are interested in this phase of the question that the address of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] of Thursday, February 9, discusses this question and cites Supreme Court decisions, none of which is directly in point because the specific question has never been before the Supreme Court of the United States. But in the legal-tender cases the court does recognize the proposition that Congress is all powerful in coining money and regulating its value under this section of the Constitution.

Now, there is one other thing I wanted to discuss. Last night President Hoover, in his address at New York, made the statement that the one hope of the world to-day is for the gold standard to be reestablished in foreign countries.

What constitutes the gold standard? We say that France to-day is on the gold standard. She is; but the franc to-day is only worth about one-fourth as much as it was prior to the war. Why? The content of the franc was reduced some 80 per cent. France is still on the gold standard, and we can reduce the content of the gold dollar one-third and we are still on the gold standard, but not a gold standard by which we redeem our dollars with 22.23 grains of gold, but by which we redeem them with 15 grains of gold. Now, how are you going to reestablish the gold standard in foreign countries? How can England reestablish her gold standard? When England went off the gold standard her pound was worth $4.86 in exchange for American dollars. This was equivalent to saying that England was redeeming a gold pound with 108.3 grains of gold because that represents $4.86 or 22.23 grains of gold per dollar. To-day the British pound is worth $3.30, and this is equivalent to saying that the British pound is worth 73.35 grains of gold.

If you want to do away with depreciated foreign currencies, if you want to reestablish the exchange value of American dollars with foreign money, we have one of two courses to take—either foreign countries agree to redeem their money in gold of the former weight and fineness or we reduce the weight and fineness of our dollar.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. McGUGIN. If we were to-day to reduce the content of the gold dollar one-third or approximately to 15 grains, this would mean that the British pound, now worth 73.35 grains of gold, would be worth $4.90. It would be worth $4.90 of 15 grains of gold each, whereas to-day the same British pound is worth $3.30 of 22.23 grains of gold each.

Now, when you talk about reestablishing the gold standard in foreign countries, it seems to me there is only one course left, and that is for the value of the American dollar to be reduced proportionately to the depreciation of foreign currency. Why? Foreign countries do not have the gold. They can not possibly go back on their former gold standard, for they have not the gold with which to do it.

The average depreciation of the foreign currency is from 30 to 40 per cent. If we depreciate the value of our gold dollar accordingly, there will be no such thing as a depreciated foreign currency as compared with our dollar. We shall have reestablished the rate of exchange.

If there were some way that England could go back to her former gold standard, that would be preferable.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. PITTENGER. Does the gentleman think that we are going to restore prosperity by depreciation of our currency?

Mr. McGUGIN. I am glad the gentleman brought that up. The gentleman and I know that the foreign debts, as matters now stand, are going to be canceled or repudiated, and will not be paid dollar for dollar on the basis of gold dollars of 22.23 grains of gold. Why? Because the foreign debtors, France excepted, do not have the gold. But if you reduce the content of our gold dollar one-third you have reduced the foreign debt one-third.

Mr. PITTENGER. The gentleman means that that is an indirect way of cancellation?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes; it is an indirect reduction, but that is less costly than an inevitable direct reduction, with the reduction placed squarely on the shoulders of the American taxpayers.

Mr. PITTENGER. It is a depreciation of the dollar.

Mr. McGUGIN. Sure.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. The Democratic Party promised in the campaign that they would collect the foreign debts dollar for dollar.

Mr. McGUGIN. All I can say to my friend is that as far as I am concerned, this is too serious a matter for us to bog it down in the mire of party politics. I say to Democrats and Republicans that the time has gone by when we can stand on the floor of this House and criticize each other. The banks of Michigan to-day closed, and the Republicans and Democrats alike are suffering in that State and do not care a damn about party politics; what they want is a financial system which will permit payment of liabilities. [Applause.]

Coming back to that, we discussed here the other day the giving of Mr. Roosevelt more power. That which was suggested by the Speaker of this House is an infinitesimal part of the power that will be given the President of the United States by January 1, 1934. This country is going to be in a desperate condition that will cause 122,000,000 people to be ready to say to him, "Save this country if you can, God speed you—we can not save ourselves." [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] in favor of cutting down the gold content of the dollar. I have said before, and I repeat it to-day, that one of three things must happen.

We are going to have currency expansion, whether it be in the manner provided in my bill (H. R. 13012), whether it be by cutting down the gold content of the dollar, or whether it be by remonetization of silver.

If we fail to secure an expansion of the currency, then we will have to have a readjustment of all public and private debts, scaling them down, extending the time for payments, and reducing interest rates almost to the vanishing point.

Unless we do one of these two things, without much more delay, we are going to be swept into a saturnalia of wholesale repudiation of public and private obligations—ultimately including all district, municipal, county, State, and Government bonds. You say that will be revolution. So it will; but we must face the facts. The revolution has already begun. Its echoes are rolling in every day from the cornfields of Iowa, the wheat fields of Kansas, and the cotton fields of the South, where the embattled farmers are resisting the efforts of their creditors to drive them from their homes and take from the mouths of their children the bread produced by their own toil. Frankly, I do not blame them; I would fight, too. They are the victims of conditions for which they are not responsible—conditions which Congress could relieve in 30 days if it would only act in the interest of all the people and stop yielding to the dictates of the money changers of Wall Street.

The dollar is too high. A farmer who pays a debt now, or pays on a bond issued or contracted four years ago, is paying about four dollars for one, when measured in terms of the agricultural commodities or the land he must sell, or other raw materials, or even manufactured articles he must sell, in order to raise the money to meet these obligations.

Let me discuss just for a moment the three methods of expanding the currency to which I have just referred and give you briefly my reasons for preferring the method proposed in H. R. 13012, known as the Rankin-Thomas bill.

There are two things necessary to maintain commodity prices. One of them is a sufficient volume of money and the other is a sufficient velocity of its circulation. The trouble to-day is not so much a shortage of volume of currency as it is stagnation of its circulation. To reduce the gold content of the dollar would undoubtedly have the effect of increasing the volume of our circulating medium, or at least broadening the base for such an increase. If the same forces were in control of our financial system that are in control to-day, they could even then prevent any expansion of the amount of currency in circulation.

The remonetization of silver would even be more desirable than cutting down the gold content of the dollar, provided that its coinage should be so limited or controlled as to stabilize price levels when they reach the 1926 level and thereby prevent those abnormal fluctuations that have always proved disastrous to the masses of the people in the end. Such a provision is incorporated in H. R. 13012 which I shall discuss next.

Another trouble of remonetization of silver is that some of its chief sponsors insist on its being done through an international conference which would probably take months, or even years. The country can not wait. We are sweeping on to disaster. Something must be done without delay! For me it is the first order of business from now on, whether in this Congress or the next.

The third method, and the one which I propose, is to expand the currency by issuing United States notes against the gold we now have, and putting that money into circulation by paying the running expenses of the Government with it—everything from the salary of the President to that of the rural letter carrier in the most remote precinct, soldiers' compensation, loans to farmers, and other transactions that take money out of the Treasury to be paid in these notes. That would put this money in circulation at once and start commodity prices up. It would also eliminate the necessity for increasing taxes at this or the next session of Congress.

We do not propose to issue an unlimited quantity of these notes, but to continue issuing them and putting them in circulation until commodity prices reach the 1926 level. If there should be a tendency toward an abnormal inflation, as soon as this price level rises to 103, then we provide for the sale of bonds to call in a sufficient amount of these notes to check the advance and prevent what the financiers call skyrocketing of prices. If values again decline, as soon as the price level reaches 97, we provide for the issuance of more notes and the purchase of bonds to put them in circulation until the price level again advances to 100. In that way we raise commodity prices back to what they were in 1926 and stabilize them within a 6 per cent margin ranging from 97 to 103.

You will hear this denounced by the representatives of Wall Street as "fiat money." People who have their money invested in tax-exempt securities or have their wealth in cash and are hoarding it in their vaults, snugly conscious of the fact that it has risen in purchasing power 300 or 400 per cent, do not want any expansion, because they do not want commodity prices to rise. Their holdings would not buy so much if normal conditions were restored. Like Shylock of old, they prefer to exact the last pound of flesh. They and their spokesmen on this floor will call these notes "fiat money," when they know that they are not fiat money but good and lawful money of the United States and worth 100 cents on the dollar.

Under the present Federal reserve act we are required to retain a gold reserve behind each note of only 40 per cent. We have more than $4,000,000,000 worth of gold—a sufficient amount to have outstanding currency of $10,000,000,000 when as a matter of fact, at the present time we have only about $5,600,000,000 in outstanding currency, practically all of which is being hoarded by the large banks and wealthy individuals, and very little of it is in circulation among the people. Start to issing these new notes and putting them in circulation and you will see commodity prices begin to rise. Not only will wheat, corn, and cotton advance in value, but land values will return, labor will advance in price, houses and other properties, whose values have virtually disappeared, will come back. Then you will see this hoarded money come out and begin to seek legitimate investments, and this panic will disappear with a swiftness that will thrill the world.

The argument has been made time and time again that this is a world condition, and that expanding the currency in the United States would not restore the purchasing power of the people of other countries, and therefore would not relieve the situation. That argument was ably answered a year or two ago by Hon. T. B. McCauley, president of the Sun Life Insurance Co. of Canada, when he pointed out the fact that whereas formerly London was the money market and gold was the standard, to-day the United States is the money market, whether it be New York or Washington, and the standard is the American dollar.

Prices throughout the world are to-day measured in terms of the American dollar. Even the currencies of other countries are so measured. The value of the pounds of Great Britain, the francs of France, the rubles of Russia, the yens of the Orient, the pesos of Spanish America, are all measured in terms of the American dollar.

Therefore, when we expand the currency and raise commodity prices in America, it will have a corresponding effect on commodity prices throughout the world. It will not only restore the purchasing power of the American people, but it will automatically restore the purchasing power of our customers in every foreign land.

On yesterday there appeared in this Capitol a Wall Street international banker, Mr. Barney Baruch, one of the three wise men from the East. The other two are Ogden L. Mills and Eugene Meyer. If the policies of these three Shylocks of finance were carried out indefinitely, this panic would last for a thousand years. There is absolutely no hope of relief in anything that anyone of them advocates. But, on the other hand, the very policies for which they stand are responsible for the present conditions of wreck and ruin.

Here are some of the things that Mr. Baruch in his statement before the Finance Committee of the Senate laid down: First, he started his drive against currency expansion with the old camouflage cry of "Balance the Budget!"

Mr. Chairman, it is utterly impossible to balance this Budget and keep it balanced on the present price levels. If every pound of cotton grown in the United States last year had been sold on the market last night it would have brought a little less than $360,000,000. If every grain of wheat grown in the United States last year had been sold last night it would have brought considerably less than $400,000,000. If every grain of corn grown in this country last year had been sold last night it would have brought less than $700,000,000. All of them put together, the three principal crops of the country on which our balance of trade depends, would have brought less than $1,400,000,000. Yet we have a National Budget alone of more than $4,000,000,000, to say nothing of the budgets of the States, counties, and municipalities. You can never balance this Budget and keep it balanced until the value of these three principal crops exceeds the national expenditures. At the prices prevailing in 1920 they would have brought approximately $8,000,000,000; at the prices prevailing in 1926 they would have brought $5,600,000,000, whereas now they bring the pitiful sum of $1,400,000,000.

I know what Mr. Baruch is after. He wants a Federal sales tax to wring from the toiling masses of America the last drop of financial blood. Our present leader, Mr. RAINEY, said last year as an excuse for his capitulation on the sales tax that Mr. Baruch had converted him. They want to levy a further tribute upon the man who is already bankrupt, who is already poverty stricken, who is out of work, whose farm or home is being swept away for debt or confiscated for taxes. They want the sales tax, and why? Mr. William Randolph Hearst is one man who is honest about it. He says he wants to relieve people from paying income and inheritance taxes. Those fortunate individuals who now own millions and billions of American wealth want to escape the payment of taxes and put them onto the backs of the great mass of the people of America and drive them down to poverty, peonage, and degradation.

Mr. Baruch says that he is a Democrat. But there is nothing Democratic in anything that he advocates. He suggests "lightening the burden of debt." Of what debt is he talking? The debt on the back of the man at home? The way to lighten the burden of his debt is to raise the price of the commodity that he has to sell. You can not do it by canceling the foreign debt.

I opposed the Hoover moratorium, and I voted against every one of the debt settlements, because every time you cancel one dollar of the foreign debt you unload it onto the backs of the American people. You can not cure this situation by canceling the international debts and unloading that burden onto the already overburdened American people.

What is wrong with the country? We are in a money panic. Let me call your attention to a statement made by a great financier. He said that when Rome fell a few people owned the Roman Empire. They had gathered unto themselves the wealth of Europe. Gold was the money of all those countries. They hoarded it. They charged as high as 48 and 50 per cent interest. To-day, when the farmer pays his taxes or pays his interest, measured in terms of his own commodities, he is paying 25 to 45 per cent interest. What was the result? People were driven to barter and trade, international trade fell off, commerce died, poverty, depression, and stagnation prevailed, Rome fell, and Europe lapsed into an economic lethargy that lasted for a thousand years. It was broken only by the discovery of America with its new and apparently unlimited supplies of gold. When that gold was added to the circulating medium of the world, Europe awoke from her lethargy of centuries and leaped forward into an era of prosperity the like of which mankind had scarcely dreamed.

We are now at the point where Europe was at the time of the fall of the Roman Empire. We have reached the end of gold. We have exhausted every field. We have prospected every mine. We have searched every territory. There are no more fields to be brought in. The per capita supply of gold is diminishing day by day. Every country, except about three, has gone off the gold standard. South Africa, which produces 55 per cent of the world's gold, suspended the gold standard less than three weeks ago, and since that time there has been a crisis in the Parliament of Holland as a result. While we have nearly one-half of the monetary gold of the world, the large financial interests of this country, who profit by high money and cheap commodities, are blocking every move to expand our currency and put that gold to work for humanity.

We have a sufficient amount of gold to issue $4,000,000,000 of extra money, United States notes or Federal Reserve notes, and if we will do it and put that money into circulation this panic will be broken over night. In fact, it will not take that much. When we begin to expand in earnest, this hoarded money will come out and seek investments, and prosperity will return.

Now, let us see what Mr. Baruch says about that. I want to show you the fallacy of the arguments of these Wall Street bankers, these men who have their money invested in tax-exempt securities or in the institutions which are hoarding a large part of $5,600,000,000 of currency that we now have.

Mr. Baruch calls attention to the fact that in 1928 we had $4,700,000,000 in circulation and that prices were high, whereas in 1932 we had $5,700,000,000 in circulation and that prices were low. All of which is true—on paper.

There are two things necessary to maintain commodity prices: One of them is a sufficient volume of money, and the other is a sufficient velocity of its circulation. Where the volume is low you must have a rapid velocity, or prices will decline. If the velocity slows down, as it has done, and is doing now, then its loss must be made up by an increase in volume.

When I was a boy we owned a water mill. When farmers would bring their corn to get it ground the miller would raise the water gate almost to the top of the dam. When the rocks started to turn they would increase in velocity very rapidly. Then the miller would drive the gate down till it was almost closed. I asked him why he raised it so high and then shut it down, or almost shut it down. He explained that he raised the gate high in the beginning in order to get the rocks started to turning and give them the proper momentum or velocity. Then, he said, it would not take so much water to keep them going.

It is the same way with money. You must make up in volume what you lack in velocity, and vice versa, in order to maintain commodity prices. In 1914 we had $3,400,000,000 in circulation, or a little better than $34 per capita. That was before the war broke out. About that time the Federal reserve act was passed, and we immediately began to expand the currency through the issuance of Federal reserve notes. By 1920 or 1921 it had increased to around $6,000,000,000, or about $54 per capita, and there was a reasonable velocity of circulation. What was the result? Wheat advanced to $2.50 a bushel, corn went to $1.50 a bushel, and cotton to 30 cents a pound. Land, labor, clothes, and all other commodities advanced in price, and people enjoyed an unusual measure of prosperity. While those price levels prevailed we all got into debt. We floated bonds of all kinds, we fixed our standards of living, and our tax rates, wages, salaries, and so forth.

We had a slump in 1920 and 1921 due to a contraction of the currency, which I shall not take the time to discuss, which was later partially cured by further expansion.

About 1926 there began a systematic contraction of the currency that lasted until after the crash of 1929. As Mr. Baruch pointed out, the currency was contracted from around $6,000,000,000 in 1921 down to $4,700,000,000 in 1928, or back to about $35 per capita—almost to where it was per capita in 1914. At that time Wall Street was "shearing the sheep." The financial elements represented by Mr. Baruch, Ogden Mills, Andrew Mellon, and Eugene Meyers were unloading their watered stocks onto the unsuspecting American people. Also they were unloading about $2,000,000,000 worth of foreign bonds that are now scarcely worth the paper they are written on. There was a veritable jamboree of trading which speeded up the velocity of the circulation of what money we had. That held commodity prices up until the crash came in October, 1929.

During that time the number of people in the United States with incomes of $1,000,000 a year grew from 21 in 1921 to 513 in 1929. During those short years there was the greatest concentration of wealth ever known in the history of mankind. When the crash came in 1929, when the criminal stock market "racket" was laid bare, the velocity of the circulation came almost to a standstill. Our foreign trade was gone. Our high protective tariff laws had provoked retaliation on the part of practically every country on earth. Our farmers were already bled white. Their purchasing power was gone. Therefore there was no one to buy our manufactured goods, especially at the high prices our high protective tariff laws had inspired. The result was that when the crash came those men who had sold watered stocks in their manufacturing enterprises invested their surpluses in tax-exempt securities, closed their factories, and turned their workmen onto the street. Our circulating medium had already been reduced below the danger point, as Mr. Baruch's figures show, and then when the circulation was paralyzed by the crash commodity prices swept to the lowest price levels in all history. Wheat went to the lowest price it has reached in more than 400 years. Cotton to the lowest level known in all the history of the exchange, and corn to the lowest price level since the first grain was purchased from the Indians.

It is true there has been expansion since that crash, and the volume of currency, on the books, has risen to $5,700,000,000. But where is it? I wonder why Mr. Baruch did not pause to explain that this money is not really in circulation, but that it is packed away in the vaults of the big banks and wealthy individuals who are now hoarding it and opposing every effort at real expansion, because their hoarded money has doubled and trebled in purchasing power and they do not want to lose what they have gained. The money that has been expended through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has, as a rule, found its way almost immediately into those large banks, where it is now hoarded.

These big financiers are opposing expansion and clamoring for "an honest dollar." The men who got rich out of the war, coining their money out of the blood and tears of the suffering peoples of the world, as well as those who got rich out of the tariff, have their wealth invested in tax-exempt securities, and they too are clamoring for "an honest dollar." They do not want any currency expansion. They forbid us to touch that sacred ark of the covenant, known as the gold standard, which they understand to mean a gold standard so manipulated as to keep their dollars high at the expense of human misery.

Is it an honest dollar that bankrupts the Nation, drives farmers from their homes, fills the streets with hungry men, women, and children begging for bread, undermines and destroys our sacred institutions, and threatens to plunge our country into a devastating revolution that may destroy our civilization? No; it is a dishonest dollar; and I question the honesty of any intelligent man who calls it an honest dollar and demands that it be perpetuated on its present high pinnacle while the suffering people of an impoverished nation pay the terrible price in human suffering they are now forced to endure. Here we are in a land rich in natural resources beyond the dreams of avarice. Protected by the most wonderful natural barriers, with a wonderful climate, a fertile soil, and peopled with the offspring of the pioneer races of the earth—the "heirs of all the ages in the foremost files of time." Our land is teeming with abundance. We have more wheat, more corn, more cotton, more manufactured articles, more of everything necessary to sustain human life and contribute to the human comforts than was ever known before in all the tides of time. We live in an advanced age when we have gained the greatest ascendency over the forces of nature and the greatest command over our surroundings ever attained before in all the ages. We have gathered unto ourselves more gold than was ever held before by any nation since the fabled days of Midas.

Yet with all that we have more poverty, more bankruptcies, more failures, more suicides, and more suffering than was ever known before in any one country at a given time.

We have the power to relieve the situation, yet we sit, with an impotent leadership, and let the influence of such men as Ogden Mills, Barney Baruch, and Eugene Meyer continue to paralyze the country and intensify its suffering merely because the Congress of the United States does not have the courage and the statesmanship to properly assert itself and pass legislation to expand our currency, put that currency in circulation, and bring back the purchasing power and restore the prosperity of the American people.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. I want to call attention to the fact that the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago at the present time has a backing of over 90 per cent against every dollar in circulation, and regardless of that fact, in my country and, I notice, in Michigan, practically one-half the banks have closed.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. I thank the gentleman from Iowa, and that is just the symptom of the real disease. Unless something is done this crash is going on and on until all those banks go down.

Mr. RAGON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. RAGON. Have those countries which have gone off the gold standard in recent years inflated their currency, or what has been their tactics?

Mr. RANKIN. Well, some of them have, but when they go off the gold standard and realize that they do not have to have gold behind their currency, it is a relaxation, just like a man waking up from a nightmare. It would have the same effect here if we expanded to a reasonable extent. We do not have to abandon the gold standard. We have a sufficient amount of gold to expand and stay on the gold standard.

Mr. RAGON. What has been the experience of Great Britain, for instance, or the United Kingdom, in increasing or decreasing or modifying in any way their commodity prices? Does the gentleman know that?

Mr. RANKIN. All I can say with reference to Great Britain is that I read a statement by Mr. Kayne. I think he is the ablest economist in Great Britain. He said a year ago that Great Britain had improved in prosperity; that she was at that time the most prosperous country under the shining sun. The gentleman will find that statement in the Atlantic Monthly. I believe it was the issue of May, 1932.

A few months ago this condition arose in South Africa: There are two parties in South Africa, what they call the Dutch Party, that is headed by Prime Minister Herzog, and the South African Party, headed by Gen. Jan Christian Smuts, who is of English descent. When Great Britain suspended the gold standard Smuts wanted South Africa to follow her, but Herzog opposed it. Conditions grew worse, just as they have here, until they almost had a revolution in South Africa. About three weeks ago Judge Teilman Roos, who had been a Member of Parliament, but who was at that time a judge of the Supreme Court of South Africa and a member of the Herzog party; resigned his place on the Supreme Bench and took up the fight for a suspension of the gold standard. He said, "We must save the people of South Africa if we save South Africa." He went down to Johannesburg to speak, a town that ordinarily pays little or no attention to political matters. He was greeted at the train by 5,000 people. He made a speaking tour and so aroused public sentiment that he forced the suspension of the gold standard in less than a week, and commodities went up 20 per cent in only a few days.

But, as I said, we do not have to go off the gold standard. We have ample gold here to back up all the currency we need. The thing we need is an expansion and new money put into circulation among the American people.

The Department of Labor worked out a chart that shows the average price of 784 commodities from 1921 to 1928. The average price level from 1921 to 1930 represents 100.

The 100 mark was passed in 1926, and that year was practically stable. Using that as the basis, we provide that whenever the commodity price level reaches 100 we cease to expand. If it goes to 103 we sell bonds, in order to call in a sufficient amount of these notes until the price level reaches 100. If the price level takes a slump and goes below 97, we propose to buy bonds and put more money in circulation until the price level rises to 100. In this way we can stabilize it within that 6-point margin, and save our people from the direful effects of violent and devastating fluctuations in the future.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. McSWAIN. May I suggest to the gentleman that he discuss the third alternative he said was a possible and thinkable way out, to wit, the matter of the scaling down of the $200,000,000,000 of mortgaged and bonded debts of this Nation in the ratio of the increased purchasing power of the dollar? May I ask whether or not he thinks any such suggestion is at all feasible or practicable?

Mr. RANKIN. No; not unless we scale them all down, bonds and all, so as to reduce taxes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Then we can eliminate that?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; unless it is our last resort. If we are going to scale down one debt we should and must scale down all debts.

Mr. McSWAIN. That would have to be done.

Mr. RANKIN. And if we are going to scale down private debts we will have to scale down public debts and scale down the values of United States bonds. Do not get the idea from Mr. Baruch, Mr. Mills, and Mr. Meyers that the people who own these Government bonds are going to be able to exact the last pound of flesh from the suffering people of America. If we stay on these low-price levels then there must be a scaling down of the bonds, along with other debts. Under such a system you will have to begin at the dome of the Capitol and go to the most remote precinct of the United States.

Last year we attempted to do this by expanding the currency and paying off the soldiers' adjusted-service certificates. The very ones who opposed us then are now encouraging the idea of canceling $9,000,000,000 of the foreign debts—more than three times what it would have cost, even if raised by taxing the American people, to obtain the money to pay off these adjusted-service certificates. What we proposed to do was to expand the currency $2,400,000,000 and put this money in circulation in that way, which would have sent commodity prices back up to normal levels and relieved this deplorable depression, without levying one additional dollar of taxes. But we were defeated in our efforts, and conditions have gone from bad to worse.

Something must be done. We can not go on this way another year. Some man said the other day that this advertisement was doing a great deal of harm. But I submit this advertisement is not what is doing the harm. This advertisement is not what is selling the farms all over the country. This advertisement is not what is bankrupting business men and breaking the small banks of the country. This advertisement is not what is driving our farmers from their homes. It is not what is filling our bread lines and our soup kitchens.

Pass this bill. Start this policy of expansion, putting this money into circulation and you will see cotton begin to rise, you will see the value of corn begin to come back, you will see wheat, hogs and cattle, lumber, land, and other commodities coming back. Then you will see this money they are hoarding begin to come out and join it. You will not have to flood this country with new money. By the time we issued $1,000,000,000 of new money, when the people realize that the Congress is coming to their relief, rather than keep their hoarded fortunes in their vaults, people who are hoarding money will begin to invest, and then you will see commodity values return.

What will be the result with you men from the cities? You will never put men to work until you restore the purchasing power of the American farmer. You can follow Barney Baruch and Ogden Mills and Eugene Meyer until doomsday, you are never going to break up your bread lines until you restore the purchasing power of agriculture.

Our farmers are naked. I had a letter from one of the best men I know, who told me of seeing children on the streets at this time of the year barefooted. People are absolutely poverty-stricken. But give them purchasing power to buy clothes and shoes and hats and harness and other things to work with, and you will see your factory wheels begin to turn, your bread lines will disappear, your unemployment will diminish, and America will step forward into a new day of happiness and prosperity. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KUNZ].

Mr. KUNZ. Mr. Chairman, we hear much said about the condition of our country. There is not any question but that the depression has brought on a chaotic condition. There are many remedies for the ailment, and for the last 12 years every Member of Congress has had a cure; but I believe the last speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], struck the keynote and hit the nail on the head when he said that we are in the same position the Roman Empire was in just before it fell—the hoarding of money by a few and the taxation of the many who can not afford it.

I have introduced an amendment to Article XVI of the Constitution, whereby tax-exempt securities can be assessed for taxation. If this were done, the tax on them would pay the war debt and bring about a condition in this country where we would be in a position to balance the Budget and bring about prosperity.

It is estimated that $60,000,000,000 is invested in tax-exempt securities. The gentlemen who have invested this money pay no income tax or any other tax, and the individual who earns a measly salary pays the tax for the rich man.

Why, only the other day I read in the paper where Rabbi Wise stated that the patience of the people is exhausted and that one-fifth of the people of the Nation are in bread lines because of financial stupidity.

Then, again, Father Ryan—and this comes from the pulpit—says, "Greed, timidity, cowardice blamed for economic crisis."

Every Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock you hear a reverend gentleman by the name of Coughlin, who talks to the country at large. He tells them that the hoarding of millions by capital is causing the destruction of our Nation.

You hear these things everywhere. You have heard them for years, and yet the ears of Congress are deaf. If Congress desires to cure the ailment, pass this resolution, send it to the States, and if the people feel that present tax-exempt securities ought to be taxed, let them elect delegates who will return this amendment to Congress so that those who have hoarded money since the days of war and paid no tax, may pay the war debt for those who have suffered or lost their lives or property during or since the war.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNZ. Yes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Does the gentleman understand that tax-exempt securities now in existence would be subject to taxation with the adoption of such an amendment?

Mr. KUNZ. Tax-exempt securities could be recalled and if the amendment were passed, other securities could be issued and a tax put upon them.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If the gentleman will yield further, would not that cause the new issue of securities to carry a higher rate of interest to take care of the difference?

Mr. KUNZ. No; not at all. I see in the Washington Herald, under date of Saturday, February 11, "Treasury issue oversubscribed at 0.23 of 1 per cent."

And yet throughout the world you hear of this depression; you hear of people in the bread line; everywhere throughout the world you see this depression and the chaotic conditions; and yet, as this paper says, there was an oversubscription of this loan of $75,000,000 for 91 days. That does not look like depression.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNZ. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does not the gentleman realize that there is so much money available for public securities that it shows that the money is not being used for private enterprise, and that that is the result of the depression?

Mr. KUNZ. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion; there is no question about it. But if the Liberty bonds, eight billion callable in November, if those were brought in and Federal bank certificates issued, you would put in circulation $8,000,000,000. And even now you are not going to get it unless something is done to bring out the money hoarded by capital.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNZ. I do.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Under the gentleman's resolution, would State and municipal securities be subject to taxation?

Mr. KUNZ. Yes; I permit the State governments to tax them.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Would it prohibit the further issue of tax-exempt bonds?

Mr. KUNZ. No, it would not; but they could recall them and place a tax upon them, and by doing that reduce the surplus.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Would it prevent any State or municipality from issuing bonds tax free?

Mr. KUNZ. There would not be any tax-free bonds.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. They would all be subject to taxation?

Mr. KUNZ. Yes, subject to taxation.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In other words, the bonds issued by States and municipalities would be subject to taxation?

Mr. KUNZ. Yes. I have introduced the following House joint resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States:

SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of each State.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNZ. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It seems to me there is an error in limiting this taxing power to income by residents of a State. There is property in a State which is taxed on account of the situs of the property itself.

Mr. KUNZ. This gives the power to assess and tax.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But it refers only to income by the residents of a State. There might be incomes in the State by nonresidents.

Mr. KUNZ. Apart from the creation of trusts, the three principal methods of avoiding taxation are perhaps investment in tax-exempt securities, losses, real or artificial, and the transfer of property to corporations that pay few or no dividends. Investment in tax-exempt securities is the surest method, in that the protection it affords is based on the Constitution, and therefore the taxpayer resorting to it is not under the necessity of keeping a weather eye constantly lifting for any action of Congress that might affect his status. On the other hand, though the cost is small in proportion to the tax saved in the case of a wealthy man, it is nevertheless substantial. Even, however, if surtaxes be substantially reduced, we will recognize that in this emergency high taxes on income may become a national necessity, and we should endeavor to put our income-tax system on a basis which would enable high tax rates to be levied more simply, more equitably, and more effectively than has been accomplished under recent and existing laws.

Prohibition of future issues of tax-exempt securities is clearly one of the first and most important requirements to this end. No part of the Nation's wealth should be in the position in which tax-exempt securities now are, that of being immune from taxation in any national emergency, however great.

Are tax-exempt securities taking an important or unduly large fraction of the new capital? Mr. Mellon has stated his own conviction on this point and his opinion of the serious nature of the problem raised, in a letter to the Hon. Joseph W. Fordney, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives. The following is an excerpt from that letter:

The most important consideration is that the existence of the growing mass of tax-exempt securities, coupled with the extremely high surtax rates still imposed by the law, tends to drive persons of large income more and more to invest in wholly exempt securities issued and still being issued by the Federal Government. The result is to impair the revenues of the Federal Government and to pervert the surtaxes so that, instead of raising revenue, they frequently operate rather to encourage investment in wholly tax-exempt securities and even to encourage the issue of such securities by States and municipalities. This process tends to divert investment funds from the development of productive enterprises, transportation, housing, and the like, into nonproductive enterprises or wasteful State or municipal expenditures, and forces both the Federal Government and those engaged in business and industry to compete with wholly tax-exempt issues and on that account to pay high rates of interest.

The greatest value of the full exemption from taxation arises, of course, from the exemption it confers in respect to Federal income surtaxes, and the constantly increasing volume of tax-free securities, therefore, constitutes a real menace to the revenues of Federal Government. At the same time it makes the high surtaxes operate as inducements to investments in nonproductive public indebtedness and is gradually destroying them as revenue producers. As a consequence, the yield of the surtaxes is dwindling, and there is a premium on the issue of bonds of States and cities. In the last analysis this is at the expense of the Federal Government, and it is having a most unfortunate and far-reaching effect upon the development of the whole country, because of the diversion of wealth from productive enterprise.

The greatest challenge to scientific American government and to political engineers, great and small, is the orderly organization and simplification of our tax system. As matters stand, government simply sets up a set of tollgates at the points where money passes, estates, customs, ticket offices, and the like and takes a crack at cash in passing. We have customs duties, income taxes, excise taxes, sales and luxury taxes, entertainment taxes, inheritance taxes, poll taxes, and general property taxes, all writhing together in a matted mass of conflicting jurisdictions and governmental cross purposes. To-day the American tax system is in chaos, and most of the large cities of the country are bankrupt, with State taxes still rising.

In the United States Daily, under date of February 10, in regard to the proposal to tax public securities, Mr. Mills is quoted as saying the measure was practically useless in meeting the present financial crisis, but that the Government funds would be in better shape to-day if such a provision had been adopted 10 years ago. What is oil for the goose is oil for the gander. Ten years ago Mr. Mills was in Congress when his predecessor, Mr. Mellon, advocated the taxing of tax-exempt securities, and to-day he has stated what should have been done 10 years ago. If 10 years ago you could have taxed the tax-exempt securities, why not do it now, when an emergency exists, and the country is in a chaotic condition?

In the last 30 years the cost of American government has been multiplying out of all proportion to the growth of American wealth. Since 1900 our wealth has increased from about $90,000,000,000 to about $360,000,000,000, an increase of 300 per cent. In the same period the cost of Federal Government has increased from a little over half a billion to over $4,000,000,000, an increase of 700 per cent. State levies on general property have increased from $72,000,000 to nearly $4,000,000,000, an increase of nearly 500 per cent, and municipal taxation for all cities over 30,000 population now amounts to well over $3,000,000,000. The cost of American Government to-day is around $12,000,000,000 and is still going up. The debts of the Government are rising steadily. In 1902 all governmental debts amounted to less than $3,000,000,000. To-day they are over $30,000,000,000, an increase of 900 per cent. The State debts have increased from $2.99 per capita in 1902 to $15.38 per capita in 1929. In the 20 years from 1902 to 1922 the combined debts of all State and local governments increased from less than $2,000,000,000 to nearly $9,000,000,000, and then they really began borrowing in a big way. Since the war the expenditures of our cities have exceeded their revenues by at least a quarter of a billion dollars a year. In 1929 out of 74 cities which had a population of 100,000 or over only 19 had balanced their budgets. In that year, which was one of the most prosperous on record, Chicago had a deficit of $150,000,000. In Chicago the per capita revenue for 1922 was $54.20 and, in 1929, $30.43. The cost of administration for Chicago in 1920 per capita was $39.92 and in 1929, $50.93. In other words, while during that period the cost of living decreased 10 per cent the cost of city government rose 50 per cent. Stated differently, the cost of city government to the inhabitants of a city was greater than the combined cost of State and National Governments to the same individual. For every cent saved in taxes in Washington, 5 cents were added to his taxes at the city hall in Chicago. Of course the condition of Chicago was very different from other cities. Chicago at that time was placed in the position by a very resourceful gentleman who was seeking the high office of mayor, and in 1927 while president of the county board he had passed a resolution on July 10, 1928, nullifying the assessment and ordering a new assessment, so that in Chicago in 1928 and 1929 no taxes were collected, and the entire county of Cook was compelled to borrow money on tax warrants issued by the county and by the city and the drainage board at, I believe, the rate of 6 per cent per annum. Of course that caused consternation among the employees of the city, county, and drainage district in the city of Chicago.

In 1927 the Board of Assessors in Cook County made what was presumed to be an honest assessment on the valuation of all the property in Cook County. It seemed that the Loop district, which represents the capital of Chicago, was assessed much higher than on previous occasions, and the district outside of the Loop lowered. Mr. Kelly, representing the Loop business district with other gentlemen, instigated a movement and a resolution was introduced by the president of the board for a revaluation of the property and that this revaluation be made by one of the representatives of the president of the county board and who was afterwards appointed. That gentleman was Mr. Jacobs, who afterwards reduced the valuation of the Loop district and increased the valuation of the property outside of the Loop, which, of course, compelled the poor property owners to carry the burden of taxation of the rich. Not only that, but one of the advisors of the mayor, Mr. Sargent, who represents the First National Bank and the Morgan interests and president of the Northwestern Railroad, had the valuation of the railroad properties reduced $20,000,000, according to my information. This revaluation cost the taxpayers of Cook County $4,000,000, and the interest that has been paid on money that was borrowed on tax warrants amounts to a million dollars a month. Of course, 1927 and 1928 were the most prosperous years we had, and the foresight of the present mayor, who had this resolution passed while he was president of the Cook County board, could not see that depression would stare the country in the face. If he had, I do not believe that he would have taken the opportunity of spending the people's money to revalue and reassess the property in Cook County at the expense of the taxpayers. That is why in 1929 the tax was $50.93 per capita, and that is why the taxpayers outside of the Loop district were paying the Loop district's share of the taxes.

Only 2,411,000 individuals were liable to tax out of the 48,000,000 gainfully employed Americans in 1930. Unless prompt action is taken to stop the issuing of tax-exempt securities and divert the money now hoarded by the vested interests of the country into channels of business which will be productive to the people of the country as a whole, the authority and stability of the Government of the United States will go by default in the face of a wild clamor for funds for the farmer, funds for the veteran, funds for the unemployed, funds for nice new court houses and municipal henchmen.

The position of the Treasury grows continually worse. The long period of Treasury surpluses is plainly over. From 1920 to 1930 they totaled about $4,000,000,000, nearly all of which was devoted to reducing the public debt. During the present year we shall actually increase public indebtedness. It is plainly time for a serious consideration of fiscal policy. Unfortunately instead of facing the situation like a statesman and inviting his countrymen to think soberly what ought to be done, the President on March 31, 1929, made a political plea as follows:

> There will be no increase of taxes if the next Congress imposes no increases upon the Budget which the administration will present. But for Congress to do this, the people must cooperate to effectively discourage and postpone consideration of sectional and group interests.

This is political buncombe and nothing else. The President knew or ought to have known that such was not the case as the facts have proven that the Congress actually appropriated $28,000,000 less than the Budget officers recommended. The attempt of the President's statement was to shift to Congress in advance the blame for the anticipated deficit and an effort to prejudice public opinion in advance against any expenditures the President might see fit to oppose, whether unemployment or farm relief or something else as the demands of sectional and group interests. The President and his supporters proposed a policy of drift in the hope that things would turn for the better. Let the Treasury meet this year's deficit by short-term borrowing as it must; it will simply face another shortage next year. This can not go on indefinitely. It is a time for tax increases, despite the anxiety of some to avoid it.

Where should the increased revenue come from? Out of higher individual income and estate taxes. We have really only started to use these powerful modern fiscal engines. In 1929 customs yielded $602,000,000; miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes (tobacco) $480,000,000; the corporation income tax, $1,236,000,000; individual income tax, $1,095,000,000; and estate tax (inheritance) $65,000,000. Taxes on consumption, customs, tobacco, and corporation income taxes, thus yield two-thirds of the Federal revenue. Mr. David Lawrence figures that the present tax on tobacco, cigars, and cigarettes will bring in $500,000,000, which is three-fourths of the $678,000,000 ordinary cost of running the Government. The customs duties are bringing in another $290,000,000. The real trouble lies in three things: (1) The enormous interest and sinking-fund charges on Federal debt, which the Federal Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, states will be $1,136,700,000; (2) the cost of past wars; and (3) the preparation for future wars. About three billion of our four billion Budget for 1933 goes to pay for past wars and to prepare for future wars.

INCOMES TIED UP IN TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

In 1929, 504 individuals reported incomes of a million and over and 967 individuals reported incomes of between $500,000 and $1,000,000. In 1930 the former group had shrunk to 149 and the latter 311, as compared with 206 and 576, respectively, in 1916. Individuals returning incomes from $5,000 to $10,000 had grown from 150,000 in 1916 to 505,000 in 1930. Now, how many of the gentlemen reporting incomes of one million or $500,000 to $1,000,000 have their money tied up in tax-exempt securities, the interest of which is paid by the smaller taxpayer to these gentlemen who do not only fail to pay any income tax on their tax-exempt securities but who are sucking the lifeblood out of the Nation by having the poor pay the rich. This Government is not for the people but for the few who are protected and kept by the people. It is claimed that our long-term bonds are selling to-day at a discount, even those bearing as high an interest as 3¾ per cent.

Of the total interest-bearing debt, aggregating $17,040,000,000, $14,310,000,000 consists of long-term bonds, some of which were callable in 1932 and others this year. In November of this year $6,268,000,000 of fourth Liberty Loan 4½ per cent bonds become callable. They mature as early as 1938 and this immense issue must be retired or refunded over the comparatively short period of five years. If the increase in public debt can be arrested this year the Treasury's general debt retirement and refunding program might be managed. According to reliable sources an additional revenue in excess of $900,000,000 is required for the year 1933.

SURTAXES

The persons who gain most from exemption are those who pay the highest surtax rates, yet the bonds must be sold on such terms as to make them attractive to the lowest class of taxpayers which has to be appealed to in order to make sure of marketing the entire issue. It is to the advantage of this lowest class, not to the advantage of the highest class, which limits the gain to the Government from marketing tax-exempt securities on more advantageous terms. Tax exemption also destroys the personal character of the income tax and builds up a tax-exempt class of the wealthier citizens which makes them and the Government peculiarly liable to popular prejudice and demagogic attacks.

Our transportation systems and other essential industries of the first order complain that they can not attract surplus property income into the investments they are able to offer. They recognize that, in order to obtain fresh capital needed, they would require to offer a rate of interest which would provide, after deduction of income tax, a return equal to that offered by State and local governing bodies whom the law permits to issue stock free from taxation. The rate of interest necessary to make such a provision would be a rate that would make their undertakings too costly to return an adequate profit. A reduction in surtaxes to a maximum of 25 per cent would at once divert a huge amount of capital from tax-exempt securities to productive enterprises. The net result would not only be an actual increase in the aggregate tax collected but increased competition in productive lines would inevitably tend to lower the cost of living.

Andrew W. Mellon wrote Ernest Hamlin Abbott, editor of Outlook, in December, 1923, and his words are prophetic:

> It seems difficult for some to understand that high rates of tax do not necessarily mean large revenue to the Government and that more revenue may often be obtained by lower rates.
>
> With the open invitation to all men who have wealth to be relieved from taxation by the simple expedient of investing in the more than $11,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities now available and which would be unaffected by any constitutional amendment, the rich need not pay taxes. We violate Adam Smith's first maxim. Where these high surtaxes do bear is not on the man who has acquired and holds available wealth but on the man who through his own initiative is making wealth. The idle man is relieved; the producer is penalized. We violate the fourth maxim. We do not reach the people in proportion to their ability to pay, and we destroy the initiative which produces the wealth in which the whole country should share and which is the source of revenue to the Government.

WHY MILLS TAKES ACTION

What rates will bring in the maximum amount of revenue to the Government? The Treasury estimates that the highest surtax should not exceed 25 per cent, which, with a normal tax of 6 per cent, will impose a total tax of 31 per cent on incomes of $100,000 and over. It arrived at this conclusion in the following way: At the present time a man with an income of $200,000 pays a tax of 58 per cent. He can invest in tax-exempt securities paying 4½ per cent and receive as much net income as he would make in a business enterprise paying 11 per cent. Good investments paying 11 per cent are hard to find, so the man of large income is more and more tending to avoid the risks of business and to put his money into tax-free bonds. There is no dearth of such securities available for investment. At the present time more than $15,000,000,000 of tax-free securities are outstanding, and the loss of revenue to the Government over what it would receive if the income were taxable has been estimated at a very large amount. Surtaxes are rapidly failing as a source of revenue to the Government, as they not only encourage State and municipal extravagance and thereby increase local taxes but they also retard the natural growth of industrial enterprise.

This all brings us back to the original proposition that, while the Government may seem to have the power to fix its taxation rates at will, in reality it is bound by the same economic laws as any other business. If the Treasury is to be assured of a continuous source of income, our citizens must prosper and if they are to prosper, the appropriation by the State of their earnings and property must be based upon economically sound principles.

I do not say that it is within our power to fix with mathematical certainty the exact surtax rates which will yield the most revenue to the Treasury with the least disturbance to business. We can, however, demonstrate the upper brackets beyond which no rate can go and be economically sound. For instance, a man with a high income of a taxable and a tax-exempt investment to go into. Uusually the tax-exempt investment is a municipal bond and the risk of loss is small. On the other hand, a taxable investment can be instanced by a productive business which involves some risk for which the investor demands an additional income return. We may assume that the weight given by the average investor to this risk is about 2 per cent. Taxes aside, we should then treat a 4½ per cent investment, absolutely safe, as the equivalent of a 6½ per cent investment where there was an element of risk. Under our present maximum income-tax rates, the productive business must show a gross return of 12 per cent to be the equivalent, tax and normal risk considered of a 4½ per cent tax-exempt bond. Now, no business, however successful, can insure a gross return of 12 per cent on the investment. If the maximum rate of normal tax and surtax were cut to 20 per cent total a 4½ per cent tax-exempt security would stand on equality, tax and risk considered, with an 8 per cent productive investment. The difference between an 8 and 12 per cent gross return is the difference between reasonable assurance of safety and speculative risk; the first will attract a conservative investor, the latter repel him.

THE COST OF TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES TO THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

A few years ago William Rockefeller, who had borrowed $31,000,000 and whose estate consisted of $44,000,000 of tax-exempt securities, had two-thirds of his estate in tax-exempt bonds. Forty-four million dollars' worth of tax-exempt bonds consisting of two-thirds of his assets! As to that much he sat by and paid no tax, and to that extent the rest of his fellow countrymen were paying for the Government, and he was not.

Mr. Rockefeller borrowed $31,000,000. Now, at least $11,000,000 of that must have been spent for tax-exempt securities, because he only had $20,000,000 of taxable securities in his estate when he died. That much we have. Let me show how he worked it. His interest on $44,000,000 of tax-exempt securities was approximately $2,000,000 a year. All of that $2,000,000 was absolutely tax exempt. The interest that he paid his creditors, who happened in this case to be his children, if he paid 6 per cent, was $1,800,000 a year. Under the law as it stands, as we are trying to correct it, that $1,800,000 was deductible from his taxable income. He had about $20,000,000 of taxable securities. Now, let us suppose that he got a high rate of interest on the $20,000,000. Let us suppose that he got as much as 9 per cent upon all of his taxable income. It would absolutely be wiped out by the deduction of the $1,800,000 of interest that he was paying to his children. Therefore he got $2,000,000 of tax-exempt income and did not pay one penny of tax on it, and he got 9 per cent on his $20,000,000 of taxable securities and paid no tax on that.

Now, let me apply it to a simpler case. Suppose that I have a business that yields me $50,000 a year. If I let matters rest, I pay an income tax; but if I go to my banker and borrow $1,000,000 at 5 per cent and put it into municipal bonds and pay 5 per cent to the bank, what happens? The 5 per cent I get on the $1,000,000 of tax exempts comes into me, and I pay no tax on it—the $50,000 of nontaxable income—and I actually get the same amount net each year but pay no tax.

I pass my share of the burden of paying for the Government over to my fellow citizens.

SUMMARY

The first section of the resolution which I have introduced provides that the United States Government can assess taxes upon incomes from State securities issued after the ratification of this article, which it can not do at the present time; but the really important thing also in the first section is that it must be done without discrimination against income derived from other securities issued by the State, any other State, or the Federal Government itself.

The second section gives the State government the right to tax Federal securities that might be issued after the time this amendment is adopted the same as the Federal Government is protected in the first section. The two clauses are necessary in order to be sure that the tax-levying authority conferred on both the Federal Government and the individual States shall be reciprocal.

CONCLUSION

Wealth will go into tax-exempt securities as long as the surtax rate is higher than 25 per cent. There is no way to tax tax-exempt securities now outstanding unless these securities are called in and new securities issued; and this would be in any event trying to do indirectly what can not be done directly under the Constitution, as it would be in violation of the contract clause of the Constitution. If we ever want to get out of the rut and force wealth to pay its just cost of government then stop the issuance of tax-exempt securities, raise the surtax rates, or place a tax on tax-exempt securities to be issued in the future and raise the surtax rates. Unless one of these two policies are followed the well of wealth of the people will eventually be milked dry by the vested interests of the country who are now behind a wall of protection with tax-exempt securities and a good crop to draw from in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLADAY. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, Uncle Sam's money has been so sound in its value and so general in its distribution and so rapid in its velocity that we had come to think of our financial system as being well-nigh perfect. In our search for a cause or causes of the depression nothing is free from investigation and suspicion. Not many understand the money question. Not many understand the relation of finance to industry, commerce, and government. In these days we hear much discussion of the subject. From the platform, over the radio, and through the press we are constantly being advised with reference to the gold standard, inflation of the currency, and other kindred subjects. Because of the fact that heretofore we have considered our monetary system safe we have not given ourselves to a study of it, and consequently we find it difficult to follow these discussions.

It shall not be my purpose to enter into the intricacies of these subjects, but rather to present some facts concerning our money. I shall not dwell with theories or with the depression, but with facts concerning the various kinds of money which Uncle Sam issues. The facts that I shall give have been verified by the office of the Treasurer of the United States, Maj. Walter O. Wood. He is an authority on American finance and is the author of an instructive and interesting work on the various money issues of the United States.

Uncle Sam's money can be put into two classes—metal money and paper money. The former is basically the more important, but the latter circulates more rapidly. The latter has no intrinsic value but is valuable because of the fact that gold or silver or other securities are held in the United States Treasury to secure it. Uncle Sam's paper money will be good so long as he can be permitted to keep this security in his vaults. Gold and silver receive value because of their scarcity. Gold is more valuable than silver because of its greater scarcity. Gold is our standard money, hence the term "gold standard." An ounce of gold is of fixed value at $20.67183. An ounce of silver is now worth $0.25625 in the world competitive market. It is estimated that the available monetary gold in the world is worth $12,000,000,000 and that the available silver is worth $4,000,000,000. The gold dollar contains 25.8 grains of gold, which is nine-tenths fine in gold and one-tenth alloy. Hence it contains 23.22 grains of pure gold. The silver dollar contains 412½ grains of silver, nine-tenths fine, or 371.25 grains of pure silver, which is intrinsically worth $0.1982. One ounce of gold is therefore now worth approximately 80 ounces of silver. The quantity of gold and silver in the world varies from year to year for the reason that both of these metals wear out by usage and also because the production of each varies each year. We have in the United States 37 per cent of the gold reserve of the world. Uncle Sam has much gold that is not coined as yet. It is in gold bars, or bullion. At the present time the Government has 112,000,000 ounces of gold bars of the value of $2,300,000,000. The value of the gold coins now outstanding is $1,840,000,000.

The Government now has $17,981,624 in silver bars. The value of the silver coins now outstanding is as follows:

Five hundred and forty million dollars in silver dollars.

Three hundred and six million dollars in subsidiary silver coin which includes half dollars, quarters, and dimes. There is not much coining of silver being done now. The silver dollar is not in demand for usage for it is cumbersome compared with the splendidly designed currency. There are 540,000,000 silver dollars in existence but only about 29,000,000 are in use. The difference is represented by the silver certificates issued by the Government. The latter are used as money. The silver represented by the certificate is kept in the Treasury, as a trust fund for the certificate holder and will be paid to him on demand.

Minor coins such as nickels and pennies do not represent much in value but enough to consider. The minor coin outstanding amounts to $126,000,000.

The United States Government purchases practically all the gold produced in the United States. It is provided by law that the Government buy all that is presented. The amount paid for the gold is $20.67183 per ounce. The Government also purchases much silver. This is purchased at the market price, which fluctuates. The price now is about $0.25 per ounce.

The Government at this time owns about 162,000,000 ounces of gold valued at $3,300,000,000. It has about 400,- 000,000 ounces of silver which is valued at $100,000,000 at the current market price.

About two-thirds of the Government's gold is in gold bars. Each of these bars is worth about $8,000. It is estimated that at this time there is in the United States $9,700,000,000 in money. This includes the gold and silver bullion and the coined gold and silver, and the paper money not represented by the bullion deposited. To count both the paper money against which trust-fund gold and trust-fund silver is held and also the latter obviously would be counting the same thing twice. The amount of gold in circulation is about $470,000,000. The balance is held as security or tied up in one of many various ways.

Uncle Sam's paper money is of no intrinsic value in itself. It is as valuable though in commerce and trade and in the everyday walks of life as gold or silver. The reason for this is that it is secured in whole or in a large part by valuable gold or silver or other securities deposited as a guarantee for it, and it is guaranteed by the honor and the wealth of the Nation. So long as it is accepted without question the Republic is safe.

There are five kinds of paper money now in circulation: Gold certificates, silver certificates, United States notes commonly called greenbacks, national-bank notes, and Federal reserve notes. Each is easily distinguished by the inscriptions thereon. Each carries printed upon its face the contract it makes between the Government and the person who holds it.

A gold certificate states on its face that the Government will pay the holder the amount of its face in gold at any time that the certificate is presented by him to the Government Treasury. The certificate is therefore "as good as gold" and is much easier to carry and pass around. There is about $1,320,000,000 in gold certificates outstanding at this time.

A silver certificate certifies that there has been deposited in the Treasury of the United States silver dollars equal in number to the denomination of the certificates which are payable to the holder of the certificate at any time he presents that certificate. The silver certificates pass as readily as gold certificates, for they have back of them the honor of the Government. Although the silver dollar is a legal tender everywhere, still the silver certificate that calls for that dollar is not a legal tender except as to the payment for "all public dues." This fact makes no apparent difference for the silver certificate circulates with the same velocity as any other paper money.

There are $484,000,000 in outstanding silver certificates. There is deposited in the United States Treasury that amount of silver dollars ready to secure the silver certificates. Uncle Sam would be glad if the holders of all these silver certificates would demand the silver dollars, for he would save the price of the manufacture of the paper money. The paper dollar only lasts on an average of eight months, while the silver dollar lasts almost indefinitely. There are about 470,000,000 one dollar silver certificates outstanding. It costs about 1 penny to manufacture a $1 silver certificate. To manufacture 470,000,000 certificates every eight months it would cost the Government about $4,000,000. This is sufficient reason why Uncle Sam would be glad if the holders of silver certificates would demand the silver dollars which secure them. This $4,000,000 is the price that we pay for the convenience of paper money. In the eastern part of the United States silver dollars are seldom used in business, but in the western parts silver dollars are used very generally. Why this difference Treasury officials are at a loss to know unless it is a prejudice in favor of silver in sections where silver is mined.

United States notes commonly known as "greenbacks" were first issued during the Civil War. These were not secured by a deposit of silver or gold, but were issued purely upon the honor of the Government. A law was passed making them a legal tender. This was a new principle in Government finance. The law said in effect that a piece of paper was as good as gold. This plan was the subject of much public discussion for years after the Civil War. Under the pressure of this discussion the "greenbacks" depreciated in value to 38 cents on the dollar. When it became evident that the Union forces would win the Civil War greenbacks rose in value, but the matter continued to be a subject for nation-wide discussion until Congress passed a law known as the resumption of specie payment law, which provided that the Government should secure the value of greenbacks by the deposit of a sufficient amount of gold with the Treasury of the United States. Since then the greenbacks have been held to be as valuable as any other kind of money.

There is back of the $346,680,000 of greenbacks now in circulation $156,000,000 in gold and the promise of the Government to pay them. The difference between $346,680,000 and $156,000,000 is $190,680,000. This amount of greenbacks is secured only by the good credit of the Government. This is purely fiat money. This saves the Government from tying up that amount in its vaults to be idle. In other words the Government uses $190,680,000 upon which it pays no interest. This shows the strength of our country. How much more of such "fiat" money our country could issue without some dire consequences is uncertain. There is a sure limit somewhere. To permit that limit to be reached might bring disastrous consequences.

Another kind of paper money is that kind known as national bank notes. These were first issued in Civil War times to help the Government meet its obligations. They grew from the custom of State banks issuing their own paper money. This State bank's money being different in each State, became a nuisance. The Government, therefore, decided to issue national bank notes. Legislation was passed in 1863 providing for the establishment of national banks. In the same year Congress passed a law providing that national banks might issue bank notes up to 33⅓ per cent of their capital stock, providing further that said bank had deposited a certain amount of its capital stock in United States Government bonds. When a national bank had complied with these preliminary conditions, the Government would supply the bank with bank notes and would superintend the issuing thereof. The Government required the depositing with it of the Government bonds owned by the bank in order to secure the issuance of that money. Thus gradually the national bank notes reached the same position as other paper money and passed through the channels of commerce with the same velocity as any other money. The amount that any bank might issue is controlled by the Government and does not exceed the value of the Government bonds deposited with the Government to secure the issuance of such bank notes. These notes are primarily an obligation of the bank that issues them and is not an obligation of the Government. But the Government would honor such notes if the bank failed to do so, and would honor them from the bonds which the bank had deposited with the Government for the purpose of guaranteeing the value of said notes. If the bank at any time wishes to take up its outstanding bank notes it can arrange to deposit with the Government Treasury an amount equal in value to the face value of the outstanding notes, and the Government will release to the bank the bonds that it has been holding as security and will redeem the bank notes from the money deposited as fast as they come into the bank for redemption. National banks are not required to issue bank notes. It is a privilege but is not compulsory. Only certain Government bonds are permitted to be accepted as security upon which national banks can issue national bank notes. Up to last July only 2 per cent Consols and 2 per cent Panama Canal bonds were eligible, but under the act of July 22, 1932, all United States bonds bearing not in excess of 3⅜ per cent interest were also made eligible for a period of three years. There are now $880,000,000 in national bank notes in circulation.

Federal reserve notes represent another class of paper currency. The name implies their source of issue. This class of paper money was designed to furnish to our financial system an elasticity that was generally thought to be necessary. Before the Federal reserve act was passed business experienced difficulty in securing adequate money at certain intervals and at times when business conditions were abnormal. To keep in circulation at all times sufficient currency to meet all conditions would result in an excessive supply most of the time and thereby might result in price inflations that would be a constant invitation to reckless speculation. To reach this situation legislation was enacted establishing the Federal reserve system. A Federal Reserve Board was established and the country divided into 12 Federal reserve districts, each district having one Federal reserve bank. Every national bank was required to subscribe to stock in that district reserve bank. The reserve banks are not permitted to accept deposits or to make commercial loans. They accept for rediscount short-time commercial and agricultural paper of satisfactory value. This bankable paper, when supported by a deposit of gold in certain required percentage, is the basis upon which the Federal Reserve Board will issue Federal reserve notes to a member bank. The amount of Federal reserve notes issuable to such member bank is dependent upon the amount and value of the bankable paper and gold deposited by that member bank. When a member bank finds it desirable to put out a quantity of paper currency in its community it may make application for the same to the Federal reserve bank. This bank has the authority to issue Federal reserve notes to the member bank. The amount that will be issued will, as heretofore stated, depend upon the amount and value of bankable paper and gold which that member bank has on deposit with the reserve bank.

The Reserve Board must have in its possession an amount of gold equal to $40 on each $100 of Federal reserve notes issued. In other words, before the board issued a Federal reserve note for $100 it must have adequate security for the full value of the note and $40 in gold in reserve, all of which is to stand behind that reserve note and guarantee its redemption. The Government is behind these reserve notes, for according to the language printed on these notes the United States promises to redeem them.

When a bank has received a quantity of these Federal reserve notes and has put them into circulation and wishes to take up the bankable paper and other security left with the Federal reserve bank, it must return to the reserve bank a sufficient amount of reserve bank notes to accomplish this purpose. When this is done the reserve bank retires this amount of currency so as to keep in circulation only the amount required.

There is now $2,390,000,000 of Federal reserve notes in circulation. This amount varies daily, as does the amount of all other kinds and classes of money.

The inflationists claim, in justification of their position, that because of the failure of money to circulate with its former velocity more money should be printed and circulated. But those opposed to inflation show that there is more money available for circulation now than in the prosperous times of five years ago, and that inflation is not necessary and would be a great deterrent to the return of prosperity. If steps are taken to inflate through the revaluation of the gold dollar, there is danger of undermining the corner stone of our financial system in an effort to try a questionable experiment. Attempts on our part to match or checkmate the fluctuating currencies of foreign nations will only result in putting our currency system into a fluctuating race with them, thereby endangering them all. The strength of a financial system is not in its capacity to reach great heights and great depths but in its capacity to withstand influences that tend to drive it to great heights and great depths. Its strength is in its ability to remain at a standard. The American dollar is the nearest to a standard of any money in the world. A program that would tend to bring the currencies of all the other nations to our standard should prove more beneficial to us and to the world than a program that would tend to unstabilize all currencies. I think a final settlement of the debts due to the United States by foreign nations, together with a stable currency and with a balanced Budget as proof that we intend to operate the Government within its income, will do more to restore national confidence than anything else that we can do. With national confidence restored we will be able to remedy our own domestic troubles ourselves, as we have always done.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that such a large number have remained to hear me tell you once again about silver. The Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures has had under consideration a number of bills, all of them looking toward finding a remedy in the coinage of silver. It is most interesting to those of us who come from the Western States to see the make-up of the committee. The chairman is from New York. The ranking Republican member is from New Jersey. Two come from Southern States. There are two, one each from Kansas and Nebraska, and the rest come from intermediate Eastern States.

When the hearings upon this subject first commenced over a year ago, it was difficult to determine what attitude the members of this committee would take. Most of them seemed to be afraid of the subject of silver. They wanted to know the meaning of remonetization, free coinage, 16 to 1, and some of the other expressions that have been used to put silver in disgrace. Since that time the Members of this Congress have begun to think, not merely about silver, but to think about money. They have given it serious thought. Some of them have looked back into their old books on money and banking, and their old books on economics, and some of them have refreshed their recollections and begun to apply the old rules to present conditions to determine what is the matter with the money and the credit of the country.

I attended one meeting where one of the high officials of the Government, representing the Federal reserve bank, stated as I thought, unequivocally, that there was no money panic; that there is plenty of money, and that the Federal reserve bank has enough gold in its possession to issue all the money that is necessary to carry on the business of the Government. At the same meeting a plan was outlined which was then being put into effect of the Federal reserve bank pushing money out, "pumping money into the banks," he said, and buying back United States bonds. Now, we come to the month of February, 1933. Let me just quote to you from a few newspaper clippings that have been collected within the last week to show whether or not there is any kind of a money shortage. I might first take to-day's newspaper and read two sentences from the Washington Times:

DETROIT, February 14.—Wielding the power of a dictator to save the State from financial chaos, Gov. William A. Comstock closed every bank and trust company in Michigan for an 8-day period. The State legislature was to be asked later to approve the action.

Those are the first two sentences of the story. Do you suppose those banks were closed because there was plenty of money? Of course not. There is a money panic on, and it is at the height now. It is fear. The bankers are afraid. People in Congress are afraid. People throughout the country are afraid.

Here is a newspaper article from the Rocky Mountain News of February 8:

Business men of Golden last night moved to inaugurate a scrip money system for the benefit of needy Golden families who are now being aided through the Golden Welfare League.

From the Washington Star of February 10 a question was asked in their question department:

Where is wooden money being used in this country?

Will you believe me when I tell you the writer lists 29 different States where some kind of medium is used other than gold and silver to furnish the necessary tokens for the business to be done in those communities? Here are the States and the answer:

It is said that there are 144 organizations throughout the country using so-called wooden money. The States where this movement is under way in some form are: Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. One of the strongest organizations is the Natural Development Association at Salt Lake City, Utah.

In 144 different towns and places in these United States on February 10, 1933—that is right now—they have had to find something to use instead of gold or silver or paper money, by using some kind of scrip, something for a token to use in the ordinary transaction of daily business.

Before proceeding, let me read you another clipping from an editorial by Mr. Albert E. Hayes, recently printed in the Denver Post:

A general mistake of writers is to confuse inflation of paper currency with the remonetization of silver. There is no connection between the two. Enemies of silver talk about a flood of unsound money. What a fallacy. After years of intensive research our Department of Commerce says the world's total silver production since 1492 to date is 15,478,000,000 ounces. Not counting the tremendous losses through the centuries, if all this could be collected in the United States Treasury at the present price for silver bullion, it would represent only $3,869,000,000 in gold dollars. If it were all coined into silver dollars and fractions, it would not entail a penny of tax burden on the people of the United States. An official graph also shows that for 70 years commodity prices have risen and fallen with the rise and fall in silver. Our statesmen and college professors might well ponder these figures.

The holders of gold securities, including bonds and mortgages, should remember they have nothing to fear from the stabilization or remonetization of silver. It will support our monetary structure and restore trade with half the world that knows only silver as money. Our Treasury can hold silver as a reserve to back up silver certificates exactly as it holds gold reserves. That is in no sense inflation in the sense that Germany used inflation.

All this gold and silver that has been the subject of speeches to-day, and editorials and other recent writings, is now in existence. It is here. Our wealth used to be composed of land and gold and silver and precious stones. In the one hundred and forty-odd years of the existence of this country we have helped change all wealth. Some men have tried to change the basis of wealth. The basis of wealth could not be changed. It is tangible. It is in existence; but we have built up what they call credit; and while there are a certain amount of gold and a certain amount of silver, different obligations are written, and we believe that a promise to pay interest and principal at a future time is wealth. It is a state of mind. It is confidence. In this Congress many of you believe that is wealth. Most of the people back home believe that is wealth. You in the Congress to-day hear talks of repudiation of all promises to pay. Not only the interest but the principal. You hear talk to-day of the amounts being cut down. It is called repudiation or discount, and other descriptive words may be used; different schemes are suggested to bring a change of the promise to pay into existence.

I never thought I would hear spoken by men in authority a challenge to the Congress to cut down the quantity of gold in the gold dollar. Let us call it demonetization of gold. It was in 1834 that the current gold coins of the United States were demonetized in part, and in 1837 the present weight and fineness were decreed by Congress for United States gold coins. They have not been changed since then.

It was in 1873 that silver was demonetized, but the proposition made here to-day, and the subject of several bills, the demonetization of gold, I never thought I would hear seriously presented, but I did hear it presented to-day. I asked the speaker while he was speaking how he was going to equalize the intrinsic value of the gold in the possession of those who had gold. I do not know the answer to that question. I have asked it of different ones, and none have told me.

Of course, if the Government is going to call back all the gold that is out—and of the $4,500,000,000 of gold we have in the United States to-day, about $2,000,000,000 is out—if some scheme was made to bring back to the Treasury this $2,000,000,000 and then to reissue it, that might be done. But will it come back? I can only answer by making a prophecy, because it is all in the future, but the logical conclusion would be that the man who has the gold is not going to give it up. The situation will be just as it is in India and China where wealth is still measured by the actual metal and lands and jewels a person may have in his possession. When the value of the gold is changed downward, they buy it in. When the value of the gold is changed upwards, they continue to accumulate. No matter which way the market goes they lay their wealth aside. They do it on a low market, they do it on a high market.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. McGUGIN. Assuming you reduced the gold content of the dollar one-half, would not the man who has the gold want to exchange his gold for the new dollars to receive the benefit of the appreciation?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Of course, if he looked at it in that way, yes; but the man who has the gold, the man who has the wealth, does not look at it that way. Why? Whether he is in the United States, in England, in India, or China, gold is gold, and no legislative body in the world has changed the intrinsic value of gold. When France cut the value of the franc to 4 cents, all she did was to cut down the pocket-money value of some silver coins and other coins. The value of the gold franc has not been changed. In their international transactions, in their world-wide transactions, the gold is weighed, gold for gold, ounce for ounce, and in that way those who are busy in the dealings in exchange figure the values one against the other and continue to make their profits, but the gold continues in existence as a mass.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. There is approximately $4,500,000,000 of gold in this country to-day.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. BUSBY. I may suggest to the gentleman that in 1834 Congress reduced the value of the gold dollar about 6½ per cent by legislative act. The gentleman uses as an illustration the franc and its worth in the exchange market. It is the gold weight and not the denominative weight, according to the statements of a statute enacted by the French body, which evaluates gold, which controls.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I agree with the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BUSBY. That is true of the currencies of all countries, whether they are on the gold standard or not. The only way our dollar is evaluated by foreign countries is by the amount of gold it contains when weighed. If we cut down the weight of gold in our dollar, the foreign trader coming into America and securing our dollar would get less gold and, therefore, be able to get less of his depreciated money when he returned home with our currency and made the exchange.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. May I suggest to the gentleman that the only trouble with his statement is in his use of the phrase "less gold." When you trade a cargo of wheat for gold the gold is marked in pounds, in francs, or in dollars. A computation is made of the intrinsic value of the metal, and in the last analysis it takes the same quantity of gold, whether it is in the form of dollars, pounds, or francs, to make the trade for the cargo of wheat; and if you are in the banking business, in the exchange business, you will weigh one item of gold against the other. You would take a quantity of gold in weight, evaluate it, and then translate the dollars, or francs, or pounds into wheat. You would use exactly the same weight of gold of any country less the exchange charges. Now, that is the principle of the use of gold in barter. So when you change the quantity of gold from 23.22 grains in a dollar to something less or something more, you are then either giving the owners of the gold a value they did not have before or you are taking it away from them, but those who have the actual gold are going to keep that gold; they are going to hoard it. One of the troubles with the country is that not merely is gold being hoarded but paper currency representing it and everything that we believe has value and substance is being hoarded, hidden, and held tight, and not allowed to go out.

Until we can start the circulation going, until we can begin to make it move, this condition is going to continue.

Mr. BUSBY. May I suggest to the gentleman in this connection that nine-tenths of our circulating medium is bank checks, representing bank credits.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BUSBY. Having reduced the bank credits to where they have less than three-tenths of their normal efficiency, the one-tenth of the circulating medium that is in the form of currency can not perform the functions of exchange that have normally been performed by currency in the form of bank credits, and that is why wooden money and other mediums of exchange have come into being. When bank credits shrink, go into hiding, or become inactive, then the man who has the cash naturally becomes less free to spend his cash. Alluding to a statement made by the gentleman a little while ago, all the banks in the United States do not have more than $700,000,000 of currency while they have $16,000,000,000 of checking accounts. It would take but a very short time for those people having the $16,000,000,000 in checking accounts and $24,000,000,000 of time deposits to draw out the $700,000,000 of coined and issued currency from circulation, and coined and issued currency is what you pay to them; it is not bank credits; it is not notes. So they could not draw to-day one-eighth of their checking accounts without robbing the banks of every dollar of cash, or twice as many dollars in cash as there are in all the banks. That is the trouble now.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I thank the gentleman, and to supplement the gentleman's statement there is in circulation not several hundred million dollars but $5,647,000,000 in and out of the banks, which is not in the possession of the United States Government right now, and with this money the busines of the country is carried on.

Mr. BUSBY. May I offer the suggestion at this point that the Federal Reserve Bulletin for December says there is not more than 40 per cent of that amount, which would reduce it to $2,000,000,000.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The statement of the Federal reserve bulletin is, of course, just as accurate as this circulation statement of United States money from which I am reading, but this comment is at least pertinent. It may be prophetic rather than a statement of fact, but the money that is not in the possession of the United States Government, as such, is out of the Government, out of the Treasury and in the Federal reserve and other banks and in your pocket and in mine, and is the subject of circulation. How much of it is hoarded may be computed by the Federal Reserve Board and they may be able to tell you accurately that $2,000,000,000 is hoarded and that only $2,000,000,000 is available for circulation.

This brings me to my reason for speaking to-day. I want to say once more in this Congress that I can see the progress in the minds of those who have been studying the money question toward the use of something more in money that is recognized as money, which is a natural part of money, and as I said the first time I spoke of it, this is the use of silver dollars in our currency. I have been laughed at for continuing to harp upon this, but it is not a laughing matter.

The circulation of money is dammed. It is stopped and something has got to break this dam. By the organization of the reconstruction finance scheme it was sought to increase circulation, and this caused some circulation, but all it did was to circulate what it had and this did not begin to break down the dam, and I submit to you that the dam has not yet been broken. What I am trying to get in your minds, and I do not care whether you believe it to-day or not, because if you do not believe it to-day you will believe it to-morrow—when you take the available silver of this country, just as you take the available gold of this country and monopolize it for this country, for its money purposes and do not let it get away, and create our own wealth and have the people use it as our own wealth, then you will begin to erode this dam a little bit, and pretty soon natural circulation will result and, perhaps, in two years or four years we will get back to somewhere near normal; but until you use your production of silver, a natural money metal, you have not anything else to use that people will recognize and believe in as a money metal.

Silver is a complement of gold. Its purpose is parallel to if not an extension of gold for money purposes. It has weight, it has value, and it is recognized not alone by our people but by the people of all the world as a money metal.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa and Mr. MAY rose.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Before I yield for another question I want to say that the debasement of gold proposed to-day ought to be considered by you gentlemen in connection with the debasement of silver in the European countries during the last decade that began to bring about a reduction in the price of commodity silver. Commodity silver has its function. It has its place and it has its price. This country may just as well say that our silver and our gold are our money. We can even go as far as to monopolize it and say you may not use silver for all purposes or for certain purposes and that it shall only be used for money. When you do this you do not violate the views of any collector of wealth in any country of the world, no matter how civilized or uncivilized. You are following the natural function of these two metals that has been followed for more than 4,000 years.

I yield now to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. The question has been asked here of several of the speakers, Where is the gold? I think the gentleman has a record here of the amount of gold that is held in reserve by the Federal reserve system and I think if you will take the amount of gold in the Federal reserve system and the amount owed by the Treasury itself, you can tell where a large percentage of the gold is to-day. If the gentleman has that record, will he please put it in his remarks?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The circulation statement which I have with me to-day is of November 30, 1932. It is prepared monthly by the Treasury Department. I could not get the one for January 31, 1933; it is not yet ready, and I did not notice that this was the November statement until this moment. Suffice it to say that there is little difference. For example, by inquiry to-day of the director of the division of research and statistics of the Federal Reserve Board, I am informed that the total amount of gold in round figures of February 8, 1933, was $4,535,000,000, while this statement shows $4,339,545,395. The total gold held in the Treasury on the same date was, in round figures, $3,303,000,000, instead of the $3,073,316,291 shown in the statement as of November 30, 1932. This makes the total money outside the Treasury practically the same amount then and now. I will give the statement to the reporter to have printed at the end of my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, during the hearings of the past few weeks before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, practically all the existing facts and opinions have been again presented on the subject of silver. It is only necessary for those who have the wisdom to arrange the facts and draw therefrom the logical conclusions. Until that is done, there will always be a "silver" question.

Therefore, I have not gone over the whole field, but have confined my remarks to one feature only, namely, the actual use of silver money in the United States. On January 5, 1932, I directed the attention of this House to the subject and stated "that one correction in the present monetary crisis to be made is the use of actual metal silver dollars as money of the United States instead of the paper substitute."

Since that date, I have had a voluminous correspondence from people all over the country from which these facts stand forth:

First. Bank tellers do not like to handle the silver dollars.

Second. Most cashiers and money handlers of mercantile institutions do not like to handle silver dollars.

Third. Many individuals in the East resist taking silver dollars as money.

Fourth. An incredible number of people have never seen a silver dollar.

I also stated:

I am trying to point out that the battle is between those who now have possession of the gold, the notes, and the bonds, and those who have not. They have designated the amount of credit thereon, and with every turn of the financial wheel they exact and pyramid more interest.

I submit that in so far as the United States Government is concerned that when we begin to get the interest charge cut down will be the first day for the beginning of the substantial upturn in business and commodity prices.

Most of what has been said and published as a means of overcoming the depression seems to suggest that the only way money can be put into circulation is to borrow and keep on borrowing. Nothing is said about payment. The only other subject is how to increase taxes. The trouble with us and with the whole world is that we want to keep on borrowing and merely continue the discussion of the date of our own payment.

We are not paying. We are not economizing. We are merely increasing our obligations and promising to pay more usury for the privilege.

That statement was true then. It is true now. When the United States demonetized silver what it did was to stop the coinage of silver dollars. When coinage was resumed, it was also provided that the silver should not be used as pocket money by the simple device of issuing paper dollar bills therefor and causing the silver dollars to be stored in the Treasury of the United States. The result is that practically half a billion dollars is so stored, takes up a lot of room, and, if I may use the hackneyed adjective "psychological," I will say that the psychological effect of the storing in the Treasury and banks has been to cause those to whom we have been accustomed to look for our money advice to tell us there is already too much silver. I will say to you that if that silver were put into circulation in place of half or some other part of the paper bills, under the present circumstances there would be an insistent demand for the coinage and circulation of more silver to replace that which is in storage.

I have been told that the Director of the Mint is not willing to recommend the distribution of silver dollars for use in actual circulation as pocket money on account of an experiment made by him some time ago. It appears that he ordered silver dollars to be paid out in coin on certain weekly payments for all dollar amounts less than five, and continued the experiment for several weeks; that the bank reports showed that most of the silver dollars were back in the banks by Thursday of the following week, and for that reason he believes that the people do not want to use them. If I were to make a suggestion to him—and he is one of the most efficient and best informed men in the Government in charge of a department—I would state that the period of time used for the experiment was not long enough; that the return to the banks of the coins was the natural result of circulation, and if it were possible to conduct a similar experiment with dollar bills that the same result would have been reported by the banks. When an individual receives change for a $5 paper bill, the pocket money so received is spent in various amounts until it is all gone and another bill changed to provide the same money facility. If silver dollars are to be recognized as an actual part of our daily trading, they must be kept in circulation. Bank tellers and cashiers of business houses will pass them back and forth as other money is exchanged, and the use of silver dollars will loosen the hoard now in the vaults of the United States Treasury and the banks. Circulation having been started again, then the other incidents to the use of silver dollars will follow and the psychological effect of the quantities on hand will be changed; a demand for more silver dollars for use in the ordinary daily transactions will be naturally created, and circulation continue.

May I remind you of the history of the use of silver dollars in the United States. From the year of the first United States coinage of silver dollars, 1793, up to the year 1932, the Government had coined 848,586,596 silver dollars, and in 1932 there appeared to be only 540,007,911 accounted for by the Treasury. What has become of the $308,578,685? No one in authority gives a sufficient answer. You may call it profit to the Government. You may say that that $300,000,000 was melted up and put into the silver products. Or you may say they have been abstracted from our currency by China and India and hoarded. Or perhaps you have your own individual guess.

No matter what your opinion may be, the fact is that of the total coinage, $300,000,000 in silver dollars has been coined, the Government has issued them and received full value therefor, and they have never returned. Call it for want of a better phrase, the consumptive use of $800,000,000 in silver dollars during a period of 138 years. If we divide the shortage by 138, we find that the annual consumptive use of silver dollars in our currency is approximately two and a quarter million dollars per year.

By the failure to continue the use of that type of money, the consumptive use has been relatively stopped, but the production of silver has continued.

In conclusion, I believe that the committee will report a bill authorizing the coinage of silver dollars from the present production of the United States. If you and I, by legislative action or otherwise, can also obtain the actual circulation of this new money, as well as the silver now in the vaults, we will begin the little stream of circulation which will start a disintegration of the dam which has stopped, not money circulation alone, but circulation of its auxiliary credit, and once the flow commences the natural result will be a start toward the return of normal conditions.

[1] Includes money held by the Cuban agency of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta.

[2] The money in circulation includes any paper currency held outside the continental limits of the United States.

[3] Does not include gold bullion or foreign coin other than that held by the Treasury, Federal reserve banks, and Federal reserve agents. Gold held by Federal reserve banks under earmark for foreign account is excluded, and gold held abroad for Federal reserve banks is included.

[4] These amounts are not included in the total since the money held in trust against gold and silver certificates and Treasury notes of 1890 is included under gold coin and bullion and standard silver dollars, respectively.

[5] The amount of money held in trust against gold and silver certificates and Treasury notes of 1890 should be deducted from this total before combining it with total money outside of the Treasury to arrive at the stock of money in the United States.

[6] This total includes $39,825,496 gold deposited for the redemption of Federal reserve notes ($1,194,210 in process of redemption), $36,714,651 lawful money deposited for the redemption of national-bank notes ($15,986,387 in process of redemption, including notes chargeable to the retirement fund), $1,350 lawful money deposited for the retirement of additional circulation (act of May 30, 1908), and $23,036,077 lawful money deposited as a reserve for postal savings deposits.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain citations.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to clarify the record. This afternoon my esteemed colleague from Texas made a very interesting speech in which he analyzed the salaries and the work of various employees.

In the course of his remarks he made allusion to one of the finest, ablest, and best men we have in the employ of the Government. I have the highest respect for my colleague; he is earnest, sincere, and enthusiastic, but, as often happens where a man is enthusiastic, he may sometimes say things that are capable of misconstruction. Personally, he assures me that he had no intention of reflecting on this officer of the Government, but I think we can make the record clear if I refer specifically to this man—who he is, what he is, and what he has been doing and the degree to which he is entitled to our respect.

It is Theodore L. Cogswell, the register of wills, a man who has served the Government 20 years, and raised himself practically from boyhood to this important office in the District.

In 1917, when came the call to arms, he went to the other side and served a year and a half, was wounded in battle so severely, in fact, that he was hospitalized for over 12 months. He received the distinguished-service cross and two citations for bravery in action.

I will give the official citation:

Theodore L. Cogswell, first lieutenant, Three hundred and nineteenth Infantry, Eightieth Division, American Expeditionary Forces, received the distinguished-service cross for extraordinary heroism in action with the enemy at Landres-et-St. Georges, France, November 1, 1918. In the advance of that day his company was halted by intense machine-gun fire while passing through the barbed-wire entanglements. In the face of this fire Lieutenant Cogswell voluntarily crawled down a slope in front of the enemy's position and, in full view thereof, discovered a sunken road at the foot of the slope, crawled back to his company, and led them to the advanced position. Immediately upon reaching the new position he again voluntarily sought a favorable forward position for his command, crawling a distance of 75 yards toward the enemy, during which exploit he was seriously wounded. The outstanding bravery and devotion to duty of Lieutenant Cogswell served to incite the men of his company to heroic endeavors, enabling them to assist in the capture of Landres-et-St. Georges, together with 209 prisoners, 9 field pieces, and 15 machine guns.

This brave soldier is an emergency officer under the laws which we have enacted. He is entitled to the pay of an emergency officer, and I fear my colleague gave the impression that he was drawing such pay. I want to make it clear to my colleagues that he is not drawing such pay as an emergency officer but only his pay as register of wills.

Mr. HOLADAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. HOLADAY. I would like to add that his office is now collecting almost $100,000 a year. While there has been such an increase in the receipts of the office, the cost of the operation of the office has not increased in proportion to the receipts of the office, indicating that he is giving a very good administration.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the gentleman. It shows the efficiency of this man, that he is as efficient in civil life as he was in war. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. I think there is no greater or more reliable newspaper in all the land than the Dallas News, and I have clipped from to-day's front page of that paper the following, which I shall read:

MEXICAN BANDITS MAKE NIGHT RAID ON BORDER RANCH—FOURTH INCURSION SINCE REMOVAL OF TROOPS AT MARFA IS REPORTED

MARFA, TEX., February 9.—Texas Rangers and a sheriff's posse left here Thursday to investigate a raid by Mexican border bandits made Wednesday night on the Jake Baldwin ranch, 14 miles south of Presidio.

The raid was the fourth since United States cavalrymen were withdrawn from Fort D. A. Russell here early in January. Rumors were persistent along the border that bandits are concentrating for a foray on the Terlingua quicksilver mine.

Five raiders were in the band which crossed the Rio Grande from Mexico, held occupants of the Baldwin house at guns' point, looted the house, and robbed the men. When the bandits started to loot the commissary they became frightened and fled back across the river.

This newspaper report may be exaggerated; I do not know; but I do claim that I know the fear that American citizens along that long stretch of border feel about this matter.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Is it not also true that a number of men on the border patrol have been given furloughs and that they have to alternate with one another?

Mr. THOMASON. That is my understanding. In addition to that, there are only about 60 Texas Rangers in all Texas.

I still contend that the removal of those troops from the Mexican border was absolutely unwarranted, and I am becoming more and more convinced every day that it was done in a spirit of spite and was prompted very largely by politics. Fort Clark at Brackettville, Fort McIntyre at Laredo, and Fort Brown at Brownsville, all on the Mexican border, were on the original list for abandonment. In the final wind-up, through some unknown influence, Fort Russell was the only one abandoned. Here is a long stretch of border, from El Paso east for 500 miles, the river meandering along the so-called Big Bend country, that has had these raids for years; but now, according to the Dallas News, they have had four of them in the last 40 days. I repeat what I have said several times before. If soldiers are needed anywhere, it is along the Mexican border.

Whether the raids have been large or small, whether they have been exaggerated or not, I hope this does not mean that worse trouble is to come to American citizens along that long line of the Rio Grande. Frankly, I fear trouble if troops are not sent back there. After Fort Russell was established there were no more raids until the post was abandoned. Those soldiers were a stabilizing influence along that whole border line of Texas. I hope my people will not suffer as did those at Columbus, N. Mex., after the Villa raid. Those soldiers ought to be sent back there. It is just as I predicted. This story may be exaggerated but I do know how those people feel about it. They are entitled to protection, and I hope justice will yet be done about the matter. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the question of the inflation of the currency, and to include an article written by the late Senator Watson, of Georgia, on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, during these awful times, when everyone should be endeavoring to find the cause of the depression and endeavoring to find a way of escape from its devastating effects in order that our people might live, I thought it proper to see what was said about our monetary system by men who have given special study to this question and who expressed their views long before the present depression. I was anxious to see how those views as to the advantages and dangers of the system coincide with the views of many of us who believe that the present monetary system is largely to blame for the depression and that there can be no return of real prosperity until the control of the issuance of our currency is taken from the bankers and exercised by Congress or some fair and impartial agency acting for Congress and disconnected with the big banking interest and using a much broader currency base.

Knowing that the late Senator Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia, was an untiring student of this subject, I took occasion to look up some of the things he said about money and its deflation and inflation, nearly two decades ago, and found that his writings on this subject are most prophetic of the very condition we now have, and that he believed that the proper cure for such a condition can only be effected by a properly controlled inflation of the currency. I wish that every student of this important subject would read all his writings on the subject of money.

Under unanimous consent of the committee, I am glad to extend in the RECORD an article on the subject of money, written by Senator Watson before the World War, as follows:

Mankind travels slowly from one stage of evolution to another, and nobody knows how long it was before the crude exchange of one commodity for another was discarded, in order that some common measure of value should be substituted and thus obviate the necessity of taking the commodity from one country to another, in many cases involving a long journey through the deserts and over mountains, in other cases involving long and dangerous voyages on deep seas.

In the Old Testament we read of Abraham buying the field of Macpelah, and weighing out the silver that paid for it—silver being, as the Bible says, "the money of the merchant." It was not coined; it bore no stamp; it was simply sold by weight, as we would now sell cotton or butter, or any other of the necessaries of life which are offered to us in the market.

The only places in the Bible, so far as I can recall, where mention is made of coin, are when Christ pays his tribute to Cæsar, and when he assaults and strikes the money changers who were plying their trade in the temple.

Aristotle, the greatest of all the thinkers of ancient times, stated, in his masterly work on government, that money was not the creation of God or of nature, but was something which the state had agreed upon to take the place of barter and exchange, and to act as a universal measure of value. In other words, Aristotle laid down the doctrine that the sovereign power to create money was inherent in the state, or was a matter of convention among the people of any particular society.

Lycurgus, the Spartan legislator, forbade the incoming of gold and silver; he restricted the coinage to iron, his purpose being that no man should accumulate too much money. He knew that iron was so heavy that no one would be tempted to heap it up, to hoard it, and to keep it out of circulation. This simple system was the basis of the great power of Sparta; and it was not until ages afterwards that a king by the name of Aegis changed this law and allowed gold and silver to come into the country. After that began the reign of luxury and self-indulgence, of indolent pleasure, of effeminacy, of elegant vices, and these finally brought about the downfall of Sparta.

In the annals of great statesmen, the name of Solon will always shine as a star of the first magnitude, and it was Solon who relieved the debtor class in Athens by expanding the currency.

By doing this, he made it much easier for the debtors to pay their creditors, and these creditors were not at all hurt, because with the money in which they had been paid they could buy relatively as much as they could have done before.

Solon proudly said: "I found my country a slave, and I left it free."

He found the finance in the control of the few. These greedy seekers of gain had so fixed the laws that, in the race of life, the poor man had no chance against the rich. The laws all favored the creditor class. The debtor class was kept under the wheels. The situation had become so bad that a revolution was about to break out.

The masses of the people will endure a great deal—are wonderfully patient under tyranny and robbery when the tyrant and the robber can give to his crimes the sanction of a written statute.

But there is a limit. Man is an animal after all, and when driven too far, he breaks through the shell which civilization has molded round him and he becomes again the fierce brute he used to be, when he lived in the woods and ate raw meat.

At Athens, the creditor class had almost got to the dead line.

Solon with one sweep of his pen relieved the tension and saved his country.

How?

By cheapening money.

The historian says he depreciated the currency.

What he did was this: He found that the existing supply of money had been gathered into the hands of the few. Therefore, money was hard to get. Therefore, the demand for money was constantly increased. Therefore, the price of money constantly rose. Therefore, debts were harder to pay at maturity than they had been when contracted. The poor debtor had to buy money to pay his debts with; and the amount of labor or of property required to buy enough money to pay the debts grew greater and greater all the time.

This was unjust. Solon expanded the currency; that is, he increased the supply of money. In the language of to-day, money sharks had "cornered" the market, and Solon smashed the "corner."

He also lowered the rate of interest on loans, and abolished imprisonment for debt. The result of these reforms was most happy. Debtors found that more money meant cheaper money, and were thus saved from ruin; whereas the creditors lost nothing but an unfair advantage which they had been harshly using to oppress their fellow men.

The money system of Athens was established by Solon. The coins were the drachma, worth about 15 cents in our money; the mina, one hundred times as much, or $15; and the talent, $900. The obolus was worth about 2½ cents.

According to the German scholar Boeckh, the purchasing power of Grecian money in ancient times was three times greater than it is now. Others contend that it was ten times greater.

Both gold and silver were coined, the ratio varying from 10 to 1 to 14 to 1, according to the difference in time and place.

In Dr. J. P. Mahaffy's Survey of Grecian Civilization we find a statement which seems to show that in addition to gold and silver coin there was a species of fiat money used.

Says the learned Doctor Mahaffy:

"The practice of the Phœnicians was to seal up small bags, professing to have within them a certain sum which was stamped on the outside with the seal of the State. Though it was notorious that the coin was not there, such a bag, so long as it carried the seal guaranteeing its value in exchange, passed as actual money."

Hence it appears that the Greeks and Phœnicians used a currency based upon Government fiat. The credit system was in its infancy at Athens, and therefore they knew nothing of financial panics. There were no booms and no crashes, no bulls and no bears, no shearers and no lambs, no flotation of watered stocks and no organization of thievery such as we see in our stock exchanges.

The Romans used copper as their money for hundreds of years. When they overcame the Samnites, the war indemnity was paid in millions of pounds of copper. It was not until Julius Cæsar established the imperialism which yet bears his name that gold coin was introduced. Gold is preeminently the money of imperialism. It was so then, and it is so now.

Let me remind you of the Bank of Venice, established in the twelfth century, when the Venetian Republic held possession of the principal trade routes to the east, and when her ships of commerce dotted almost every sea. It became inconvenient for her to deal in metallic money, because her trade was so vast that her outgoing vessels, reaching for eastern markets, would have been almost laden down with gold or silver, or both.

To meet this need of her ocean-going commerce she established the Bank of Venice, in which merchants could deposit their coin and could take a certificate of deposit. These certificates could be transferred as you would indorse a check or a promissory note, and these transfers would be noted on the books of the bank just as you would now have transfers of bank stock noted on the books of a bank.

By the use of this simple method all of the physical trouble of handling great sums of silver and gold was eliminated, and the certificates of credit were accepted as so much cash throughout the mercantile world.

It came to pass that men preferred these slips of paper to the possession of the gold and silver; and for hundreds of years no gold or silver was used in the mercantile transactions of the Venetian Republic.

It was not until 1798 that the bank went out of existence, and it only did so in the downfall of the Republic itself, during Napoleon's great campaign in Italy. It had financed the Crusades; it had financed some of the greatest campaigns of the Roman Empire; it had stood the test of every foreign storm and every domestic convulsion; it lived as long as its country lived, and it died only when the independence of its country perished.

During the chaotic centuries which we now call the Dark or the Middle Ages, each great feudal lord arrogated to himself the right to make war upon other feudal lords and the right to make peace when he saw fit.

In those ages were built great stone fortresses upon the highest accessible ground, and those feudal castles are yet to be seen (in their ruins, at least) throughout England and continental Europe.

Each lord had his army, each lord had his system of taxation, each lord had his serfs, each lord controlled the markets, each lord coined the money that circulated throughout his domains. It was a time when there was scarcely any such thing as personal rights for a man or a woman who did not belong to the nobility.

The very first step that was taken towards centralization, both in England and on the Continent, was to take away from the feudal lords the right to maintain troops, the right to administer justice (the high, the middle, and the low), the right to wage private war, the right to fix prices, and the right to coin money. In England this great work of consolidation was done by William the Conqueror; in France it was done by Richelieu.

Let us speak of England, since that is our mother country, and our institutions are based upon hers. After William the Conqueror had subdued the feudal lords and established a universal authority throughout the realm it was the King who made the laws, who made the wars, and who coined the money.

No private citizen was allowed to coin money any more than he was allowed to declare war or to maintain troops. It was not until Charles II had come back to the throne, which his father had lost during the Cromwellian days, that the King allowed private citizens to exercise the sovereign function of creating money.

One of the scarlet women who thronged around the dissolute Stuart King was named Barbara Villiers, and she was bribed by the goldsmiths of London—the money lenders of that day—to wheedle her royal lover into signing an act which gave to them the right to coin money for use in Hindustan.

The act of 1666, which gave these London bankers the right to coin money for use in India, carried on its face the evidence that a very bad woman was used to persuade a very bad king into granting this very bad concession to a lot of very bad men.

From the use of this special privilege in India the London money changers soon saw the vast power which it bestowed upon them, and therefore the coinage of money for the use of the East India Co. soon came back to the homeland, and the practice was incorporated and perpetuated when a canny Scotchman induced the Government to establish the Bank of England.

In this country the money power was first enthroned by Alexander Hamilton, who in 1791 convinced President Washington that a national bank was necessary to fiscal operations of the Federal Government. Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Randolph strongly opposed Mr. Hamilton, but President Washington took the side of Hamilton, as he usually did.

This first national Bank of America expired, by limitation of its charter, in 1811. In 1816 another bank was chartered, because the War of 1812, which did not end until 1815, had changed the mind of Mr. Madison, and caused him to think that a national bank was a national necessity. He therefore signed the act creating this second national bank, which was to run for 20 years.

When Andrew Jackson became President he soon found fault with the way in which Nicholas Biddle was managing the bank, and he called the attention of Congress to it in his annual message.

Mr. Clay and Mr. Webster took sides with the bank, but Mr. Thomas H. Benton, the Senator from Missouri, took sides with Jackson. The fight was long and bitter, but in the end Jackson was triumphant.

The bank had offered to pay off the national debt for a renewal of its charter, but Jackson was determined to crush it, and he did. The bank used every sort of intimidation, bribery, and corruption to turn the country against the President, but his popularity was so great that it overrode all obstacles.

After this second national bank was put out of commission we had no more national banks until 1864, when President Lincoln approved the national bank system now in operation through successive renewals of charter.

In the early days of the reign of Queen Victoria there came on to be heard before her Lord Chancellor a very unusual case.

The Emperor of Austria had brought process against Louis Kossuth, the Hungarian patriot, to restrain him from issuing certain bits of paper which he had caused to be printed in England for the purpose of circulation in Hungary.

Translated into our language, the wording of these strips of paper was as follows:

"One florin. This monetary note will be received in every Hungarian state and public pay office as 1 florin in silver. Its nominal value is guaranteed by the state. In the name of the nation.

"KOSSUTH, LOUIS."

It was shown that more than 100,000,000 of these florin notes had been prepared and were intended to be used in Hungary as money.

The Emperor contended that "the introduction of said notes into Hungary will create a spurious circulation and thereby cause great detriment to the state and to the subjects of the plaintiff."

It further appeared in evidence that the Emperor had surrendered to the National Bank of Austria the privilege of supplying the Empire with paper money, and doubtless this bank was the instigator of the bill in equity brought against Kossuth. The National Bank of Austria had the same feeling against Kossuth that our Whisky Trust has against the moonshiner. In each case the name and power and money of the Government is used by a monopoly to stamp out competition.

In delivering his opinion, the Lord Chancellor uttered this truism: "The right of issuing notes for the payment of money, as a part of the circulating medium in Hungary seems to follow from the right to create money belonging to the supreme power in every state. This right is not confined to the issue of portions of the precious metals of intrinsic value according to their weight and fineness, but under it portions of the coarser metals, or of other substances, may be made to represent varying amounts in gold and silver, for which they may pass current."

Kossuth was enjoined from issuing the notes upon the sole ground that he was an exile in England with no de facto authority in Hungary. He, himself, had admitted that the Emperor Francis Joseph reigned over Hungary, and was in fact its Emperor. For this reason the Chancellor held, properly, that the Emperor alone had the right to supply Hungary with notes to be used as money.

In the history of the world there never was a period when a strong, orderly government allowed a subject to coin money. The state invariably held on to this mighty lever as one of the indispensable prerogatives of sovereign power. To make laws, to appoint public functionaries, to levy taxes, to control navigable streams, to police the public highways, to control the army and navy, to hold the national purse and sword, to negotiate treaties with other nations, to regulate foreign commerce, to establish courts, to declare war or make peace, and to create money, were among the universal, inseparable attributes of royalty.

When the state was weak, powerful vassals waged private war, robbers infested the highways, pirates roamed the seas, and private citizens created money. When the state recovered its strength it invariably swept the pirate off the sea, the lord, and took back with stern admonitions the exclusive right to create money.

Historians, writing of the Dark Ages, never fail to tell us how the anarchy of the times revealed itself in the disintegration of sovereign power. Private citizens encroached upon the state; the lords usurped the prerogatives of the king; the security of the rights of the individual disappeared. Each man held what he or his order was strong enough to hold, and no more. Even in the Middle Ages it required all the resolute courage of the strongest kings to redeem the sovereign prerogative which the feudal lords had arrogantly usurped.

As chaos gave way to systematic government the state was seen to have reconquered the sovereign attributes which the haughty nobles had usurped, and thereafter no lord had courts of his own, dungeons of his own, gibbets of his own, warfare of his own, or money coinage of his own. The king's law, the king's courts, the king's money, were supreme and exclusive.

Was gold usable as money before the king placed his stamp upon it and declared by law that a certain amount of gold thus stamped should be a guinea? Did God make pounds, shillings, and pence, or did the king do it? Was silver usable as money until similarly favored by the law and the royal stamp? Could one take a silver cup and go into the market and pass it about as money? Could the king himself take gold plate off his table and go into the market and circulate the gold plate as money?

Before the passage of the law making the stamped gold legal tender money does not exist. The law and the stamp make the money out of the gold. God made the pine trees but the sawmill makes the lumber. God made the chicken, but the cook makes the fricassee. God made the swine, but man made the sausage.

Ricardo declared that the universal adoption of gold and silver as money metals had been an immense benefit to the world for they drove out such clumsy currency as the wooden stick of England ("tally rod" of the British Exchequer), the tobacco of Maryland and Virginia, the peltries of the Western States, wampum of New England, leather of France and Spain, bark in China, lead of Burma, etc., but he said that the time had come when a still greater benefit to the world would result from the abandonment of metallic money, altogether, and the adoption of a scientific paper currency.

Upon this all independent thinkers who understand the subject have long been agreed. Those who really know how completely the Money Trust dominates the world and how that remorseless tyranny is based upon metallic money can not but denounce with "divine indignation" the horrible greed of the comparatively few money changers who use the coin fetish to hypnotize and plunder the nations of earth. When gold threatens to be plentiful (as was the case after the discoveries in California) the money changer loses his affection for gold and pays his court to silver; when silver becomes too common and gold scarce silver loses favor and gold is again the money king's favorite.

Why does the Money Trust want to limit the supply of real money? For the same reason that any other trust wants to limit the supply. The bankers seek control, and the smaller the volume of real money the more easily they can control it. If the bankers control the money, they rule. Even the Emperor of Germany, with all of his imperious arbitrariness, would never dare to go to war until he had consulted the Rothschilds, Bleichroders, and other monarchs of the realm of money. This tyranny of the banker is world-wide. Come war or peace, come famine and pestilence, come seven fat years or seven lean years, the banker rules, and he does it with "coin." He first chains the nations to the word "coin," then he gets his grip on the supply of "coin"; thus he holds the chain which fetters the globe.

How simple it would be to shatter the chain and escape this odious servitude by precisely what Louis Kossuth proposed to do for Hungary. By the exercise of that right which the Chancellor of Great Britain declared to be a part of the supreme power of every state a scientific system of paper currency could be created, based on the strength of the state, answering the needs of every citizen of the state, and absolutely independent of the bankers. To smash the Money Trust, whose monstrous rapacity preys upon every nation, it is but necessary that the state shall assert its inherent power to create its own currency. A dollar, whether in metal or paper, should be inscribed, "This is a dollar." That declaration and the law which makes the dollar a legal tender for debts are sufficient. There should be simply the sovereign mandate, "This is a dollar." Absolutely nothing more is necessary to make that currency as good and as strong as the government which creates it.

All governments, being composed of human beings, may perish. Of course, when the government is overturned its currency is lost. But that is true of its bonds also.

The editors of our daily papers are dreadfully uneasy lest the small notes issued by the Government should go the way of Confederate money. But why are they not nervous about the bonds?

If the Union should go to pieces, as the Southern Confederacy did, the bonds would fare no better than the notes.

The East India Co., acting through the King's mistress, decoyed Charles II into sanctioning a scheme which gave to the company and to the goldsmith class control over the royal mint. The law by which this was done is known as the mint act of 1666, and the bribe to the Villiers woman is named in the act. The joker clause of this act was so framed that the goldsmith class and the East India Co. obtained almost absolute control of the supply of money. Moreover, these same intriguers secured a fourth charter for the East India Co. in 1677, which authorized the corporation to coin in India with its own stamp gold, silver, copper, and lead.

The Constitution of the United States expressly invests the Federal Government with every sovereign prerogative necessary to its performance of those functions for which it was created. To make peace and war, to collect and disburse taxes, to control national and foreign commerce, to make laws and enforce them, to create offices and fill them, to control the Army and Navy, to create money are among the necessary sovereign powers conferred upon the General Government. To surrender any one of these royal prerogatives in whole or in part is to maim the Government. Who would not protest if it was proposed to delegate to private individuals or corporations the power to control the Army, or the navigable waters, or to operate our postal system? Yet in abdicating in favor of 6,000 national banks the sovereign prerogative of creating money, the Government has surrendered a power infinitely more precious than that of regulating foreign commerce.

The very lifeblood of the commercial and industrial world is money; the artificial creation by which we have agreed to take the measure of value of all commodities in exchange. And we have surrendered to a rapacious 6,000 the terribly dangerous power of saying how much lifeblood shall flow into the veins of the body politic!

With their unconstitutional and calamitous gold standard, their absorption of all the surplus cash of the National Treasury, and their usurpation of the right to stamp their own notes as money, the 6,000 national bankers have as complete a trust as the Standard Oil or the Steel Trust.

What a shameful spectacle, that of a government of 95,000,000 people chained to a fetish by a handful of Wall Street rascals! Oh, for one year of Andrew Jackson, to smite these infamous scoundrels and to assert the power of the Government!

Listen to the Supreme Court of the United States (39 Barb. 427), announcing its decision in Hague v. Powers:

"Money is the medium of exchange—the standard or representative of all commercial values. It is that which men receive in exchange and in satisfaction of labor and its various products; and whether it is intrinsically valuable or otherwise, it is the standard of value by which alone they are all measured. Gold and silver are not naturally money, any more than any other metal product or fabric. They are made so by law only.

"These metals become money by the force and operation of law alone.

"The power [to crèate paper money] is clearly one of the attributes of governmental sovereignty and may be exercised wherever it is deemed necessary or proper by the sovereign power."

Thus the highest court of the United States has done, as the highest court of Great Britain did—made a clear statement of a fact that is as old as government itself, and which was never disputed until the money-changers, using the libertine king's harlot as their tool, took possession of the irresistible and sovereign power to control the money supply of the world.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, in looking over some files of the Columbia Sentinel (Senator WATSON'S paper) I found where the Senator completed an editorial in the issue of February 13, 1922—11 years ago yesterday—by saying:

It is the same old national bank principle which was fought by Benton, by Jackson, and by Jefferson, and no mere jumble of words can long hide the facts.

The power vested in the seven members of the Federal Reserve Board here in Washington is the despotic power of life and death over every bank and business in these United States, and the horrible sufferings through which our people have gone for the last year or more, are due to W. P. G. Harding, Governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

He has retired from circulation nearly $1,800,000,000 of the money which was stimulating enterprise throughout the Union. The only way to restore prosperity is to put that money back in circulation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak about a matter that is, to my mind, of transcendant importance to us. It is something that does not affect the valuation of the gold dollar, nor is it again a tax matter, but it is something that affects our very life and limb.

Like all of you, I use the taxicabs and the street cars of the District of Columbia. Conditions have reached such a stage that every time you use a taxicab, you do it at the peril of your life. Coming up from the Union Station a week or so ago, only that we landed on the front stoop of a dwelling house, we would have been in a serious collision. There is absolutely no regulation in the District of the taxicabs. You who have known me during the time I have served here know that I have always taken the side of the underdog and tried to help those who needed help, tried to help those without friends and without influence, but I do say it is necessary for our own preservation and for the safety of life and limb that we have some regulation of taxicabs in the District of Columbia.

There is a provision in this bill which precludes the Public Utilities Commission from using any money for the installation of meters in taxicabs operating within the District of Columbia. The commission has stated it can not exercise their authority in the regulation of these vehicles unless it can compel them to install meters and to prescribe the hours of labor of the drivers.

The condition has come to this pass: A large percentage of the taxicabs in the District of Columbia are ostensibly purchased but really rented from the big companies and owners of cabs. There is no way the owner can rent out a cab and keep track of the mileage without a meter. So how do they do it? A driver goes to one of these companies and they will sell him a cab and give him a conditional bill of sale at the rate of $2.50 or $3 a day. He has the use of the cab and must furnish the gas and oil and keep the car running. On account of this conditional bill of sale the company is not responsible. The real owner of the vehicle escapes all responsibility, and the responsibility is solely on the shoulders of the operator of the cab. What happens? If there is a collision, if you are injured or are incapacitated from your work or your business, you have no redress other than to sue this poor fellow who pays $3 or $2.50 a day for the use of the cab. I am credibly informed there are judgments to-day exceeding a half million dollars in the courts of the District of Columbia; judgments secured on account of personal injuries caused through the reckless operation of these taxicabs.

Again, a man who hires a cab, in order to make $3, which he must pay for the rental, and pay for the gas and oil, must work about 16 or 18 or 20 hours a day in order to get anything out of the operation of the cab as a return for his labor.

Surely you will agree with me that this is absolutely unfair. It is unfair to the people living in the District of Columbia. It is unfair to us who have to live here during the session of Congress, it is unfair to visitors who come to the city, and it is unfair to the drivers. Five or six times I have heard statements made here about four girls getting into a taxicab and riding to their office, costing them each 5 cents. That would be 20 cents for the cost of the cab, but if they did not reach their destination in a condition to be able to go to work, if they were injured or maimed during this trip, how much would it cost them? I know and you know the result of automobile accidents, where fractures and other injuries are received, where there may be thousands of dollars expense before you are able to get back to work. There is absolutely no redress under the existing chaotic conditions. Why? Because the ostensible owner of the cab is the poor fellow who has paid $2.50 or $3 for the use of the cab for that day in order to try to eke out a living.

I do not believe there is a city or town of any size in the country where there is not some regulation of taxicabs. It is only fair that they should be so regulated and bonded. Some people say, "Well, it will make the rates higher and people can not afford to patronize them." Under the proposed regulation of the Utilities Commission, they could ride 2 miles for 25 cents. One drop of the meter 25 cents, and you could ride 2 miles. That is about coincident with what is now known as the first zone. You can ride anywhere in Washington in the first zone for 25 cents; in the second zone for 40 cents, and in the third zone for 60 cents.

Under the proposed regulation of the Utilities Commission, with the installation of meters, you can ride 2 miles for 25 cents. Then you pay 5 cents for each additional one-third of a mile. So that would be 15 cents more for 3 miles, which is approximately the same as the second zone now in operation, and the total amount would be 40 cents. That would be 3 miles for 40 cents, and 2 miles for 25 cents. This would afford not only regulation of the taxicab situation by the Utilities Commission and provide protection against injury, but it would also regulate the hours of labor of the drivers, the maximum being 12 hours. So you would not only help the public by having the drivers work a reasonable time, so that they could have a chance to get a little rest and recuperate for the next day, but you would be saved the possibility of injury during the trip.

While I like to see taxi service as cheap as possible in order to keep down expenses in these days when economy must be practiced, at the same time I would like to have a reasonable degree of certainty that when I entered a cab I would arrive at my destination whole. I had a little experience in a taxicab about three years ago. I had my leg fractured. By the time I got through it cost me quite a little money. So it is with all of us. We take a chance when we take a cab which the driver must operate at high speed in order to get anything as a day's wages, and not only at top speed, but, as I say, for a very long day of 16, 18, or perhaps 20 hours.

So I think, in all fairness to the people of the District and to the traveling public in Washington, there should be proper regulation of the taxicab situation in the District. We have tried here for the last two years to bring this about, but up to now we have not been successful. Of course, Congress, sitting and acting as the board of aldermen for the District, is responsible for this condition; but I think that we, realizing the responsibility as ours, should discharge it in the proper manner. It means much, because if we should be injured in traveling to and from the House, see what the country would lose. It would lose our services; and you can not tell but, perhaps, that very day your vote on an important subject would mean much to our distressed country. So I think we ought to preclude the possibility of an accident of this kind occurring by properly regulating the operation of taxicabs in the District of Columbia.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by inserting some data that I have here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not think we should cumber the RECORD with a large volume of details. It is very voluminous.

Mr. BOYLAN. I will not go into very great detail but only far enough to show the approximate cost of taxi service under the present zoning system, and what it would be under a meter system. These are outstanding facts, and we should have them for our information.

Mr. STAFFORD. Still further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is still seeking the graces of the House, and he always is gracious in seeking the graces of the House. It is necessary that we have legislation to correct these intolerable conditions in the District. I made a few remarks yesterday calling attention to the need of having some corrective legislation, but my purpose in rising now is to prevent a cumbering of the RECORD.

Mr. BOYLAN. I assure the gentleman I will boil it down very much.

THE EFFECT OF THE METER RATES AS PRESCRIBED BY THE UTILITIES COMMISSION

As to the public: The public will receive a vastly improved service, and a service that will be infinitely safer. Fast and reckless driving on the part of the driver will not be necessary, since every trip, regardless of its length, will be a paying trip. The profit from operations will be sufficient to enable the owners to carry public liability insurance, to keep their cabs in better condition, and generally to improve their entire service.

As to the drivers: The drivers will be enabled to earn a fair living wage in 12 hours of work. Since meters automatically register the total fare receipts, owners can determine these receipts and take their proper share of the same. This will eliminate all renting.

The meter rates will not cause unemployment among the drivers and independent owners. If the 12-hour working law is enforced, every driver and owner-driver working to-day would find employment in taxicab driving, even if there should be a 30 per cent reduction in the number of cabs operated.

Greatly increase the cost to the public: The new meter rates will represent a very slight increase in fares for the average trip, and these rates are far below the rates prevailing in other cities of comparable size.

Put the independent owner out of business: The cost of the meter installation will be only $35, with only $10 down payment. The meter will pay for itself in 30 days in increased profits. The independent owners to-day represent 70 per cent of the total number of cabs on the streets, and even under the meter rates they will remain the predominant factor in the local cab situation.

Congress created the Public Utilities Commission for the purpose of regulating public utilities and fixing rates. The public utilities act provides for review of rate decisions by the District of Columbia Supreme Court and the District of Columbia Court of Appeals.

The taxicab industry in Washington does an annual business of $8,000,000; it directly gives employment to nearly 5,000 people, with an annual "pay roll" of some $3,500,000; it pays some $650,000 annually in local and Government taxes.

Congress having created the Public Utilities Commission for the purpose of regulating local utilities, should either give the commission a free hand subject only to review by the courts as provided in the utilities act or abolish the Utilities Commission and take unto itself the complete handling of local utility matters.

WILL ENFORCEMENT OF THE METER ORDER CAUSE UNEMPLOYMENT IN THE CAB INDUSTRY?

The opponents of the meter order have attempted to uphold their position by advancing the theory that the enforcement of the order will cause great unemployment among the cab drivers and independent cab owners. The fallacy of such a theory is easily demonstrated. As of February 4, 1933, there were 3,746 licensed taxicabs in Washington. On that day there was a total of 4,518 drivers (including owner-drivers) engaged in driving cabs, of which number slightly over 50 per cent had the exclusive use of their cab for 24 hours. (These figures are based on an actual survey made by the Public Utilities Commission.)

The day in question, being a snowy Saturday, was a peak day for driver employment. Yet there were several hundred cabs that did not go out on the streets due to lack of drivers. It is well known that on the average week day there is a very pronounced surplus of cabs over drivers. So it can be accepted as a fact that the maximum number of men making all or a part of their livelihood from cab driving is 4,518.

The Public Utilities Commission has issued a regulation prohibiting any driver from operating a cab more than 12 hours out of any 24 hours. This regulation is not now enforced; but is enforceable. If this regulation were enforced, the above 4,518 men could be given employment by 2,600 cabs, allowing for the fact that some independent owner-drivers will not permit other men to drive their cabs.

Therefore, even if the meter order would cause 1,145 cabs to go off the streets, which is decidedly not the case, as hereinbelow set forth, every man who is driving to-day would still have employment, and under better working conditions, and the opportunity of earning a more decent and livable wage than at present.

Of course a certain number of cabs would go off the streets if the meter order is enforced. These would be worn-out and dilapidated cabs not worth spending additional money on; cabs of some independent owners who would prefer to drive for some other owner rather than continue as independent owners, retaining their present cabs as private pleasure cars. But at the very highest estimate these cabs going off the streets would not number more than 800. So that there would still be available some 2,950 cabs, enough to give employment to 750 more men than are driving to-day.

Of the present 3,746 cabs, 2,556 of them, or 70 per cent, are owned by independent owners; while of the remaining 1,190 company-owned cabs, 706 belong to rental companies and only 484 belong to the seven different companies that might be classed as taxicab companies. Among the latter, the Black and White and Yellow Co. has only 200 cabs operating, and at its all-time peak had only 500 cabs, while of the remaining six taxicab companies not a single one now has, or has ever had, more than 50 cabs.

The Independent Taxi Owners Association—Diamond cabs—includes 550 independent owners operating 1,045 cabs, the largest fleet in the city and one of the largest in the United States. They have been well established here for many years, and are to-day doing some 70 per cent to 80 per cent of the white telephone-call business. If anything, the enforcement of the meter order would add to their fleet and their membership, through other independent owners joining the association and present members buying additional cabs. But certainly the meter order will not put the independent members of this strong cooperative association out of business.

The Bell Cab Association—298 cabs—the Premier Cab Association—175 cabs—and other cooperative associations of independent owners will certainly not be put out of business by enforcement of the meter order. These various independent owner associations will always remain the predominant factor in the Washington cab situation.

The independent owner who is not a member of one of these associations is also not going to be put out of business. He may join one of the associations in order to get the benefit of call service, gas discounts, extra drivers, and so forth, or he may voluntarily give up his own cab in order to drive for some other owner on commission. But we have always had, and always will have, the fully independent owner-driver. The enforcement of the meter order will give him a "break" that he is not getting to-day and can not get under a low-rate zone system.

THE TRUE EFFECT OF THE METER ORDER ON DRIVERS AND OWNERS

Drivers will have their working conditions improved, their hours of work reduced, and will be able to earn the fair, living wage to which they are entitled. They will not be forced to "rent" a cab but will work on a commission basis, the only fair method of compensating them. Owners will be able to keep their cabs in better condition and the drivers will not continually lose time through breakdowns as at present. Under meter rates a driver may expect fewer trips but more money for each trip. He will not be handicapped by a succession of long hauls at 20 cents or 25 cents each as now happens should he have an "unlucky" streak. When he does have a long haul at the meter rates, it will be profitable, and he will not be forced to risk his own and his passengers' lives in the attempt to "fight against time."

Cab owners, under the meter rates, will have cab mileage—and consequently depreciation and repairs—greatly reduced. Their drivers will not be forced to drive at high speed in order to complete their long 20-cent runs in the fastest possible time—that will reduce the owner's accident risk. Their drivers will take better care of the cab, reducing repair bills. The owner will have an income per mile of operation that will give him a reasonable profit, enable him to purchase better equipment, enable him to pay for liability insurance or set up a reserve fund—all of which are impossible under present conditions.

The attitude taken by the meter opponents that the public will not ride in sufficient numbers at meter rates to enable the drivers and owners to make money is thoroughly unsound. If the new meter rates were as high as those of most other cities there might be some ground for the fear that cab business will tremendously fall off. But the meter rates set by the Public Utilities Commission are so extremely reasonable and will represent so slight an increase for the average cab rider that it is ridiculous to assume that the public will not continue to use cabs in great numbers. Where the added cost is only a matter of 5 cents, 10 cents, or even 20 cents above the present low zone fares, that slight additional cost is not going to throw the vast majority of the present riders back to the use of other forms of transportation. That there are many of the present riders who take 4 to 6 mile trips for 20 cents who will not use cabs for such a trip at meter rates is unquestionably true. But if such losing trips are eliminated, are not both the driver and the owner better off? Especially so when meter rates will insure that every trip, regardless of its length, will be a paying trip.

One of the greatest single advantages of the meter rates from the driver's angle is that it will end the present pernicious "rental system." And in no other way will this "rental system" be eliminated. As long as we have any zone system, there will be the "rental system" as the prevailing relation between owner and driver. The simple reason for this is that where cabs are operating on a flat-rate zone system, there is no way in which the cab owner can determine the correct amount of fares taken in by the driver; therefore the owner is going to require a fixed "rent" from the driver. This is the owner's method of protecting himself; but it is unfair to the driver, since it forces the latter to pay the owner first and then take for himself whatever is left; and it often happens that there is little or sometimes even nothing left for the driver. This system was so scored by Justice Adkins in his lengthy opinion and has been so universally denounced that no further comment is necessary.

Meters automatically register the total fare receipts, and the owner's share—usually 60 per cent, with the owner furnishing gasoline and all other expenses—is easily determinable. Therefore "renting" will cease and the driver will receive his fair share of the receipts.

It is obvious that so long as we have a zone system there will be certain losing trips for the driver and owner. To attempt to lay out a zone system in which there were no conceivable trips on which the driver and owner would lose money would mean setting the initial zone fare so high that it would kill off the short-haul business. That was tried here at the very beginning of the zone system of operation, when the first zone rate was set at 35 cents. That rate was a failure because it did not attract the short-haul riders in sufficient numbers to offset the long hauls on which there was little or no profit.

And just so long as we have a rate system which permits losing trips, we will have the evils which go with it—speeding, discourtesy, refusal to accept passengers for long hauls, and the other evils that are so loudly complained of to-day.

Meter rates will bring to the public a vastly improved taxicab service—better equipment, better call service, safer service, courtesy and consideration from the drivers, and what is most important of all from the standpoint of the public—a financially responsible service that will protect the passenger and the general public in the matter of accident and damage claims. Is not this worth the few cents additional cost of the meter rates?

LIABILITY INSURANCE

This subject is of such importance that no discussion of the rate question would be complete without including it, for there is a very definite relation between the two.

Liability insurance is a matter of vital interest to every citizen and every cab patron. The situation existing in Washington to-day has been so thoroughly condemned that it needs no comment here. It is universally agreed that cab operators should be required to carry some form of public liability protection, at least in so far as their passengers are concerned. It is also agreed by all who have inquired into the matter that the present cab rates are too low to permit cab owners to pay the cost of any liability insurance.

Therefore, if the public wishes to be protected by liability insurance, it must submit to an increase in cab fares. The present rate for taxicab public liability insurance in Washington is $365 per year per cab—and though the insurance companies will quote this rate, they decline to write the policy under existing conditions.

The majority of the cab owners would not oppose this compulsory insurance if they are given a rate of fare that will enable them to pay for it. But to impose this insurance on the cab owners without giving them the meter rates, their only possibility of paying for it, will simply result in driving the independent owner out of business and leaving the taxicab field to the well-financed taxicab companies who can get this insurance by blanket coverage at lower cost and who, with the bulk of the independents out of the way, can then set their own zone rates.

Even though the legislation prohibiting the enforcement of the meter order does not prohibit any taxicab operators from voluntarily adopting the meter rates, nevertheless such an action would be economic suicide for any operator or operators trying it. Even though several groups of operators took this action in unison the ultimate result would be the same—the cutthroat competition from the lower zone rates would make it impossible for the meter groups to operate at a profit. The cab industry will therefore stand or fall as a whole on this rate question.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself three minutes.

I yield myself this time to reply to the remarks of the gentleman. I think he is somewhat mistaken with reference to the facts. The Public Utilities Commission have not tried very hard to regulate the taxis. They can regulate them without putting in meters. Moreover, the evidence before the committee was that the number of accidents caused by taxis was not any higher than the number of accidents caused by privately owned vehicles.

But a small percentage of the taxicabs are rented. The larger percentage of them are owned by individuals, and the fight in Washington is simply between the big companies and the independent operators. I presume the gentleman was in a cab belonging to one of the big companies if he got on at the Union Station, because the big companies have exclusive rights there. If cabs are required to be equipped with meters, it will mean that a thousand or so independent operators, for the most part ex-service men, will be put out of business.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Has the Public Utilities Commission power to require cab operators to carry insurance?

Mr. HOLADAY. I believe they have.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I pay $175 a year for insurance on my car. If I damage a taxicab, the operator is going to be paid. On the other hand, if one of these 20-cent cabs run into me or hurt some one riding in my car, they can not be made to pay.

Mr. HOLADAY. Let me say to the gentleman, I think it has been estimated that insurance on taxicabs in Washington would cost something like $300 a year.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That does not sound reasonable. My car is larger than the ordinary taxicab, and insurance costs me $175.

Mr. HOLADAY. But there is a difference in rates for insurance on private cars as compared with taxicabs. There is no other way in which the big companies could so quickly or so effectively put a large number of these independent operators out of business than to have all cabs required to be equipped with meters and the operators required to carry liability insurance.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman stated that there is existing law for placing these taxicabs under surety insurance. On yesterday when this subject was under consideration on District day, I referred to a bill which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REID], from the Committee on the District of Columbia, in the last Congress reported providing for surety insurance. That bill naturally was predicated upon the idea that there was no authority in the District commissioners or in the Public Utilities Commission to exact liability insurance from these taxicab drivers.

Mr. HOLADAY. There is no such regulation in effect. I have not looked into it, but I am rather of the opinion that the commission has the authority if it wanted to exercise it. If the commission has not the authority, then I am hopeful they will never be granted this right; because I am not in favor of putting these 1,000 independent operators out of business and turning it all over to a monopoly of two large companies.

Mr. STAFFORD. Only yesterday, after the conclusion of the session, I was almost mowed down by a reckless taxicab driver. I consider my life, as well as the lives of others here, somewhat of consequence to the people of the country and of the District.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. I yield.

Mr. PARKER of New York. I want to ask the gentleman if he believes anybody should operate a public utility without liability insurance? I do not think anybody in interstate or intrastate commerce should operate a vehicle one foot without liability insurance.

Mr. HOLADAY. I do not know that I can agree with the gentleman.

Mr. PARKER of New York. I do not see how the gentleman can fail to agree with me.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. I yield; yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman has made the statement that such a regulation would put the independents out of business. This would not be the case. The gentleman speaks about the renting of cabs, and the men who rent the cabs are the ones who have to work 16 or 18 or even 20 hours a day in order to make a living.

Mr. HOLADAY. Only a small percentage of the taxicab drivers are renting their cabs.

Mr. BOYLAN. It is a very large percentage, as the gentleman will find out if he reads the figures which I have put in the RECORD.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, any revenue (not including the proportionate share of the United States in any revenue arising as the result of the expenditure of appropriations made for the fiscal year 1924 and prior fiscal years) now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia, and, in addition, $6,500,000 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be advanced July 1, 1933, and all the remainder out of the combined revenues of the District of Columbia, and the tax rate in effect in the fiscal year 1933 on real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia shall not be decreased for the fiscal year 1934, namely:

Mr. CANNON and Mr. SMITH of Virginia rose.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet to make a point of order against certain portions of the paragraph just read. I wish it understood that I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may reserve the point of order.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PRALL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 14643, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

THE PANAMA CANAL ZONE

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7518) to amend an act entitled "An act extending certain privileges of canal employees to other officials on the Canal Zone and authorizing the President to make rules and regulations affecting health, sanitation, quarantine, taxation, public roads, self-propelled vehicles, and police powers on the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, including provision as to certain fees, money orders, and interest deposits," approved August 21, 1916, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Senate amendment is as follows:

Page 2, line 5, strike out "public health board" and insert "board of health."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7519) to amend the Penal Code of the Canal Zone, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Senate amendments are as follows:

Page 26, strike out lines 6 to 20, inclusive.
Page 57, after line 16, insert:
"SEC. 115. Nothing contained in this act shall apply to an offense committed prior to the time when this act takes effect. Such an offense shall be punished according to the provisions of law existing when it was committed in the same manner as if this act had not been passed."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. LEA. All the amendments are routine amendments except one that strikes out the section relating to the crime of abortion. The effect of this amendment will be to leave the law in the Canal Zone the same as it is at present.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7520) to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure for the Canal Zone, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Senate amendments are as follows:

Page 36, line 24, strike out "a" and insert "the."
Page 61, after line 23, insert:
"SEC. 120. This act shall apply to criminal actions and proceedings from the time it takes effect, except that all such actions and proceedings theretofore commenced shall be conducted in the same manner as if this act had not been passed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7521) to provide a new Code of Civil Procedure for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing Code of Civil Procedure, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Senate amendments are as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out "the — day of —, 19—" and insert "1st day of October, 1933."
Page 128, line 11, strike out "actions" and insert "action."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

PRINTING REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE GOVERNMENT COMPETITION WITH PRIVATE ENTERPRISES

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up privileged resolution, House Resolution 376.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 376

Resolved, That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the report (H. Rept. No. 1985) of the special committee of the House of Representatives appointed to investigate Government competition with private enterprises, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the House document room and 3,000 copies for the use of the special committee.

With the following amendment:

In line 5, after the word "which," strike out "two" and insert "three," and in line 6, after the word "and," strike out "three" and insert "two."

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the resolution asks for 3,000 copies for the House document room for 435 Members, and 2,000 for the special committee of 5 members; 1 member, Mr. STAFFORD, says he does not desire copies. I already have requests for 15 copies of this report. I can not recall a resolution that has been so liberal with a special committee. I think it should be amended so as to provide 1,000 for the special committee, which is very liberal, and 4,000 copies for Members of the House.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, the resolution as originally introduced provided for 2,000 copies for the document room and 3,000 for the special committee. I was approached by the gentleman from Missouri to change that, and I did change it to 1,000 for the committee and 4,000 for the House generally. After I did so, five minutes ago the gentleman from Wisconsin had a conference with the gentleman from Missouri, and they agreed on this other proposition. I do not care whether it is passed or not, but I stand on what I agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is in error, it was the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], a member of the special committee, who asked for the change. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the figures "2,000" and inserting "1,000."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Missouri for that purpose?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not yield for that purpose. I understood the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Wisconsin to suggest these amendments, and I acted in good faith, and I stand by it. I move the previous question.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am sorry the gentleman misunderstood me. He always acts in good faith.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE GARAGE AT BOSTON, MASS.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 88) to authorize the Postmaster General to investigate the conditions of the lease of the post-office garage at Boston, Mass., and to readjust the terms thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was under consideration under the unanimous-consent call, it barely escaped defeat because one Member did not rise in time. The amendments were prepared by me after consultation with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Foss]. If I had thought for one minute that these amendments were not going to be adopted, I would have done all in my power to defeat the bill. I had doubt whether we should delegate the right to the Postmaster General to increase rentals, when all other rentals are coming down.

My amendments proposed "not in excess of" the amounts stated, while the gentleman's bill as reported from the committee is mandatory, and it is not supported by the Postmaster General. I can not understand the Senate of the United States in not accepting these reasonable amendments. I serve notice now that if the Senate does not recede, I shall use every parliamentary advantage under my control to defeat the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. HAINES, Mr. PATTERSON, Mr. FOSS.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KLEBERG, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. MONTAGUE, for to-day, on account of illness.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on the agricultural appropriation bill have until midnight to-night to file a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT IN BUSINESS AND THE TAXPAYER'S BURDEN

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend I append a brief radio address which I gave on September 21, 1932, over the blue network of the National Broadcasting Co.

The address is as follows:

The cost of government, Federal, State, and municipal, has been running about $15,000,000,000 a year. This cost is collected by taxes of all sorts—general property, excise, income, inheritance, sales tax, customs duties, etc. Unless taxes are paid out of capital, which, of course, if continued means bankruptcy, the only source out of which they can be collected is the earnings of the people. The gross earnings of the American people from 1921 to 1929 amounted to about $90,000,000,000 per annum. On this basis, the cost of government at $15,000,000,000 means that one dollar out of every six has been absorbed by taxes.

TAX SUPERSTITIONS MUST BE EXPLODED

Generally speaking, this dollar out of every six came out of every pocketbook in America. It is one of the superstitions of the age that only the rich, only the property-owning or income-earning citizens pay taxes. This superstition is believed in the most incredible places, not only by the "butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker" who read the baseball scores and say, "Let some one else balance the Budget," but even in State and National legislatures. This superstition must be exploded if public waste of the people's money is to be stopped. We must become tax conscious or unconscious. If people generally were keenly aware that one dollar in every six goes to support government, they would be in revolt against subsidy grabbers and Treasury raiders. Waste and duplication and the nonessential services of bureaucracy would cease.

Because people generally are not aware of this elementary fact, the dance goes on, and will go on until the fact is realized or repudiation begins. The fact is, however, as demonstrable as a proposition in mathematics. The railroads, for example, pay about $1,000,000 a day in taxes—State, Federal, and municipal. Where do they get the money to pay this million dollars every 24 hours? Out of their revenues; out of what you and I pay for their passenger and freight service, and from no other source. The railroads simply do not manufacture money. Everybody who eats and wears anything that moves by railroad pays their tax. The railroads are essentially tax collectors rather than taxpayers.

Who pays the tobacco excise tax? You do. No one else. Look at the Government stamp on your pack of cigarettes. It tells you that you paid 6 cents to Uncle Sam when you bought a 15-cent package. The sales tax is added to the thing sold. Customs duties are paid by the consumer, not the importer. The property tax is largely paid by the renter. The corporation income tax is added to the price of what is made and sold. With the possible exception of the inheritance tax, which is a capital levy, the tax on the site value of land, and to some extent individual income taxes, it is doubtful if the tax collector does not reach in and take in almost equal degree $1 out of every $6 in every home in this country. "Jones pays the freight." People are worried and anxious. They can't "get ahead." They can't make "both ends meet." They know "something is wrong." For part of the answer look at that dollar in every six.

TAXES ABSORB ONE-THIRD OF EARNINGS

But I was speaking of the days before the bubble burst in 1929. To-day the earnings of the American people have shrunk from $90,000,000,000 to less than $60,000,000,000, some say $45,000,000,000. If the tax burden of $15,000,000,000 remains the same, this means that it absorbs one dollar not in every six but in every four or three. In other words, measured by our ability to pay, there has been an invisible increment in the burden or weight of taxation of 50 to 100 per cent—since 1929.

For example, if a farmer's tax is $100 a year, and he raises 200 bushels of wheat which brings him $1.50 a bushel, he can pay his taxes with one-third of his wheat, and from the proceeds of the other two-thirds buy at the store. But when wheat goes to 50 cents a bushel it takes all of his wheat to pay his taxes and he has nothing to spend at the store, which in turn orders nothing from the factory, which in turn does not employ men, and men in the cities go hungry because they can not afford to pay enough for the farmer's wheat so that he can pay his tax and still have something left with which to buy of them. The circle of stagnation is thus completed, and in this process no small part is played by the item of taxes.

So far as the farmer is concerned it is the same as if his taxes had been increased from one to three hundred dollars. If debts and taxes shrank as rapidly as earnings or the commodity price index shrinks, the burden or weight of taxes would be no greater in hard times than in good times. But they do not so shrink. They are almost inflexible obligations, and a first lien or charge upon property and earnings. In times of business depression the tax question emerges as does a reef of rock when the tide goes out. Taxes then become a vampire that sucks up 25 per cent or more of the economic blood stream. In many instances their invisible increment becomes the last straw, followed by tax sale or foreclosure and then by heartache and despair and homeless Americans.

DANGERS OF NARROW TAX BASE

Next to the realization that every consumer is a taxpayer must come the recognition that every extension of the processes of government narrows the tax base which supports government. This concentrates the load still more heavily upon those upon which the burden still rests. To make a simple illustration. Here is a steel column in a brick building. It rests upon a plate which distributes the load upon every brick in the foundation wall. Whenever Government takes over an enterprise formerly conducted by private industry it amounts to a transfer of so much of the total national wealth from the taxpaying to the tax-eating class. It is the same as taking bricks from the foundation wall and adding them to the wall above which the column supports. Continue this process long enough and a collapse is certain. Looked at from this angle we realize the profound wisdom of the founders of the Republic who so constantly urged "a wise and frugal Government."

Every dollar that goes into unnecessary Government buildings or works, or unnecessary Government pay rolls, or unnecessary tax-exempt Government bonds subtracts a dollar from the hoard of taxable wealth, narrows the tax base, and intensifies the burden. Times of depression are greatly deepened and lengthened by the tax burden because it can not be made to shrink as fast as wages and prices go down, and thus consumes a greater share of the little store that is left. Of all the remedies for agricultural distress, for example, none is quite so simple and so certain as a radical reduction of taxes. As in Bible times so to-day, "the hand of the collector of taxes fell heavy on the land." Every new governmental bureau means less new bureaus back home.

Many services of government are absolutely essential to civilization. But a double wrong is done whenever government—I am speaking now of the Federal Government—invades the field of private enterprise. When it does so, in a double sense it takes from "the mouth of labor the bread that it has earned." To-day we find Uncle Sam without authority under the Constitution invading at least 100 fields of industry. It takes business away from business and taxes the business so deprived to sustain its competition.

It is this which is now being investigated by a congressional committee composed of Mr. SHANNON, of Kansas City, Mo.; Mr. STAFFORD, of Milwaukee, Wis.; Mr. RICH, of Woolrich, Pa.; Mr. Cox, of Camilla, Ga.; and myself. Hearings have been held in Washington, New York, Kansas City, St. Louis, Memphis, New Orleans, Fort Sill, and South Bend, Ind. In November hearings will be held in Chicago. We have heard intense, almost bitter complaints from farmers, commission men, architects, printers, blue printers, doctors, restaurant men, warehousemen, express clerks, dairymen, clothing and shoe manufacturers, railroad men, musicians, school-furniture men, and dozens of other callings who, in these desperate times, watch Government competing with them and taxing them in order to compete.

ASTONISHING EXAMPLES OF BUREAUCRACY

Every day we hear of some new and astonishing example of far-reaching bureaucracy. At New York the head of a great ship-salvaging concern appeared. His company operates on both the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard. It is paid for its services by marine underwriting companies—many if not most of whom are English concerns. This gentleman tells us that the United States Coast Guard has gone into the business—not of saving life, as to which there is no objection, but of salvaging ships and cargoes—and does so free of charge, the only nation in the world engaged in salvaging. The result is that the American taxpayer is taxed to relieve a British insurance company of the cost of salvage, and in addition an old American firm is gradually being driven to the wall.

Then there was brought to our attention the Federal Barge Line on the Mississippi River—a Government-owned corporation. To it the Government has turned over $12,000,000 of property and $12,000,000 of cash. It has been operating since 1924. Its water craft pay no taxes whatever and not a single cent of return to Uncle Sam on his investment. After eight years a $24,000,000 concern shows no profits whatever, to say nothing of taxes. It fails each year to even earn 5 per cent on its investment by $1,200,000. It, in fact, earns nothing. Meantime $100,000,000 of tax money has been spent on providing it with a navigable right of way for which it, of course, pays nothing. It has a fleet of some three hundred water craft competing with the railroads for freight.

Meantime the Government, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is pouring millions of dollars into the railroads to save them from receivership, and at the same time taxes them to finance an unprofitable water competitor. This is Government in business. If the Government keeps on subsidizing railroad competition, there is a real danger it will wind up with the Government taking over the railroads—and in so doing, taking not millions but billions of dollars from the tax duplicates of the towns, counties, and cities of America. What will the tax burden then be on those of you who are not on the Government pay roll?

HIGH TAXES IS CITIZEN'S PROBLEM

In his first inaugural address Thomas Jefferson urged a "wise and frugal government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another but shall leave them otherwise free to follow their own pursuits of industry and employment and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread that it has earned." Does not this state the whole case against high taxes and Government competing with its own citizens?

In the last analysis, unnecessary taxes and Government competition do not take the citizen's dollars. They take his life. They shorten his economic chance to earn comforts during his working years and to provide a nest egg for old age and his dependents when he is gone.

And now, but one emphatic word. Industrial and banking ownership and management must not use tax relief to hog the economies and savings of the machine age as they did in the jazz decade, when dividends went up and real wages went down. If they continue to sop up purchasing power, they will ruin their own market and make State control inevitable. The supreme problem facing our economic and political survival is to provide work at a saving wage for the millions of workless workers.

Ladies and gentlemen, Government competition is your problem—not that of the Shannon committee. Unless you support us, we are helpless. Public opinion alone will deflate bureaucracy. Nothing else will. The battle is lost unless you elect men to Congress who will say "No." And then back them up. It will be a long, hard fight. But if you wait before you take an interest in this subject until your own ox is gored, you may wake up some morning and find you haven't any ox.

THE DEBT SETTLEMENT

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing a speech I made before the Washington College of Law on Saturday night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by me at the banquet of the Washington College of Law at the Mayflower Hotel on Saturday, February 11, 1933, I herewith print said speech, as follows:

In discussing the debt settlements of foreign nations, perhaps we had better commence with France.

In the settlements we have made with our debtor nations we have accepted their own propositions and we have canceled a large part of the amount they owe us. Our cancellations range from 19.7 per cent in the case of Great Britain to 75.4 per cent in the case of Italy. When we settled with France we canceled 52.8 per cent of her indebtedness to us.

They are nearly all of them now demanding additional cancellations, and France is threatening to completely repudiate her debt to us. The debt of France is probably the most appealing. It was at the demand of France that we inaugurated the policy of loans to our allied nations after we entered the war. Our position then was this: We were without an army properly equipped, although we had at that time the largest standing Army we ever had in peace time, but they had as many musicians in the Russian Army as we had of men and officers in the American Army. It was apparently necessary for us to finance our Allies until we were ready to assemble and train our own armies for the World War, and we commenced to assemble an army and to assemble war material and to build ships upon a scale never before attempted in the history of the world.

I recall that the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives assembled in its committee room behind closed doors two days after our declaration of war to consider the subject of financing the war, and we had just determined to prepare for a war that might last 11 years, and we had just determined that we might be compelled to expend in the first year of the war a sum of money four times bigger than we had of money in existence at that time, and I might mention in passing that we accomplished that miracle of finance through the instrumentalities of the income tax and our Federal reserve system.

Just at this point there came a knock at the door of the committee room and I, myself, admitted Viviani, an ex-Premier of France, and I can see him now as he stood at the head of the long committee table, accompanied by two French gentlemen, holding their silk hats in their hands, and I recall his speech. He said, "Gentlemen, I have received a message in code this morning from my government. I have just had it translated and by that message I am commanded to say to you that France can remain in this war only six weeks longer unless you can loan us at once $50,000,000 and send us a division of men." I said to him, "We can loan you the money and we will, but we can not send you a division of men. We have no arms with which to arm 20,000 men." He turned sadly to the door and just before he left he said, "Gentlemen, you do not understand the psychology of the French. It will do no good to loan us money unless you send us also men. Send us then unarmed men and we will arm them with the arms of the dead soldiers of France." He left the room.

I will never forget his speech. I have quoted it exactly. It burned its way into my very soul. His speech proved conclusively to all of us that French participation in the war was practically over, that we must finance the armies of our allies until our soldiers could get to France, or we must be prepared to carry on the war in the future ourselves.

Arrangements were immediately perfected to loan money, not only to France, but to our other allied nations, and on the 8th day of May, 1917, we made the first loan to France. The loan amounted to $50,000,000. On the 12th day of June, 1917, the first detachment of the First Division of the American Army sailed for France from the port of New York. It arrived at St. Nazaire, France, on June 26 and 27, 1917. It consisted of 92 officers and 2,606 enlisted men. Other detachments of the First Division were quickly sent to France. The very first unit to sail was Base Hospital No. 4, which consisted of 34 officers, 156 enlisted men, 98 nurses, and 4 civilians. It sailed from New York on May 8, 1917, and arrived at Liverpool on May 17, 1917.

The first detachment of the First Division was quickly carried by special trains from St. Nazaire to Paris and 2,600 unarmed khaki-clad soldiers marched through the streets of Paris, each American soldier accompanied by a French soldier who had lost an arm or a leg on the battlefields of France, while millions of French people lined the pavements and wildly cheered. It brought back courage to the French. Our armies were arriving and down the long concrete entrenchments at Verdun the news was passed that the Americans were in France and the response was, and it rang through the world, "They shall not pass."

And then we commenced making these loans until they aggregated the present enormous total, and now we hear that the French propose to repudiate their obligations to us and practically all of our debtors are demanding still further cancellations of the amount they have agreed to pay us.

The amounts the various nations owe us now are a small percentage, indeed, of their total national debts. The amount France owes us is only 3.75 per cent of her national debt. The amount England owes us is only 2.65 per cent; Italy, 1.41 per cent; and Belgium, 2.45 per cent. I am wondering why they single us out for further reductions. Why not repudiate part of their debts to other holders of their bonds? They seem to forget the fact that we borrowed from our nationals the money we loaned them and we must pay it back. Further reductions will mean the saddling of the debts they owe us on our own taxpayers.

The amounts they owe us each year, under their agreements with us, are only a small percentage of the amounts our debtor nations are expending for armaments. If they could get together and reduce their armaments by as much as they owe us each year they would be conferring a favor upon their own nationals and they might be further postponing into the future years the next war.

And now comes the proposition that we accept from one of our debtor nations in one lump sum 10 per cent of the amount that nation owes us.

I have just called attention to the French position, expressed through their representatives in this country in April, 1917. If the statement he made to us is correct, we are in the position of having kept France on the map, and it is particularly unfortunate, to say the least, on her part that she should now be demanding further reductions and threatening a complete repudiation.

I recall a time when we borrowed money from France. We were in the throes of our own war for independence. During the revolutionary period we negotiated a number of loans in Europe, and the proceeds of these loans were for the most part used in paying for supplies purchased abroad. From 1777 until 1783 we borrowed from France a total of $6,352,500. We paid every dollar of it back, with interest at from 4½ per cent to 5½ per cent. The last payment was made in 1815. There was no demand on our part for any reductions, no threat of repudiation.

France was in this situation when she made the loans—she had lost her American colonies; she had been defeated in every struggle with a united Britain; at that time her empire was divided. The French Premier saw clearly the depths to which his country had fallen, and he felt her degradation. Great Britain had gained most from the misfortunes of France. She had conquered Canada and other possessions of the Bourbons. This was the opportunity for France to restore French prestige through loans to the Colonies, and this was the policy of the French Premier. This led France, in 1778, to recognize the independence of the United States and this led to the active participation of France in our war for independence. For a long time the French Premier took the position that it was not in accord with the dignity of the King of France to ally himself with insurgents. In making these loans France never was animated by any feeling of sympathy for our cause. Loans were made to us in order that France, through us, might strike at Britain and recover some of her lost prestige, but we paid it all back, every dollar of it, including a considerable part which never reached us but which was embezzled by the dishonest intermediary selected to act for France in these transactions.

When we made our settlements with France we bought her bonds. We bought them under the provisions of the First Liberty loan act, the act of April 24, 1917. Section 3 of this act authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury "to receive on or before maturity payment for any obligations of" any of our debtor nations "purchased on behalf of the United States, and to sell at not less than the purchase price of any such obligations and to apply the proceeds thereof" to any of our bonds that might be subject to redemption and payment. The provisions of the Liberty loan act were carried into every contract we made with any of our debtor nations, including France, and we are in the position of being purchasers of their bonds. The bonds are now deposited here in Washington in the Treasury Department, amounting to $11,000,000,000 in all. The amount of the French bonds is considerably over $3,000,000,000. These bonds are expressed in the language of the debtor nations issuing them. We have agreed that they shall pay in annual installments for 63 years, but that does not prevent us at any time under our contracts with them from selling on their own markets or on the markets of any other nation their own bonds so purchased by us whether they are due or not, provided we obtain for the bonds so sold the purchase price. We can forget about the interest so far as we are concerned, but the purchaser will hold them subject to the payment of the interest coupons. If they can not pay us now, all we have to do is to wait until we can sell these bonds on the markets of the countries issuing them or any other country at the price we paid for them. This makes it difficult indeed for any debtor nation to escape permanently its obligations to us. The time will come when we can sell these bonds at the purchase price on their own markets. It is unthinkable that any of our debtor nations will at any time in the future repudiate these contracts. It would be an unfriendly act, and we could and would adopt adequate measures of retaliation.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 2508. An act for the relief of Maj. O. S. McCleary, United States Army, retired; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2582. An act for the relief of Leo James McCoy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 2583. An act for the relief of Albert Lawrence Sliney; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 2862. An act for the relief of W. H. Hendrickson; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4589. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make payment of part of the expenses incurred in securing improvements in drainage project of drainage district No. 1, Richardson County, Nebr., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 4590. An act for the relief of Juan Apodaca; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 5052. An act to empower the health officer of the District of Columbia to authorize the opening of graves, and the disinterment and reinterment of dead bodies, in cases where death has been caused by certain contagious diseases; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 5214. An act for the relief of Michael J. Budzinski; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 5433. An act for the relief of certain settlers on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 5503. An act authorizing the Chesapeake Bay Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Chesapeake Bay from a point in Baltimore County to a point in Kent County in the State of Maryland; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5539. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant a perpetual easement to Pacific Gas & Electric Co., a California utility corporation, over, across, in, and upon the site of the lighter-than-air base, near Sunnyvale, in the county of Santa Clara, in the State of California, for an existing 20-inch gas main; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 5581. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to dispose of certain lighthouse reservations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5588. An act authorizing the acceptance of title to sites for public-building projects subject to the reservation of ore and mineral rights; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. J. Res. 237. Joint resolution authorizing the erection in the Department of State Building of a memorial to the American diplomatic and consular officers who while on active duty lost their lives under heroic or tragic circumstances; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and an enrolled joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 220. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Van Camp Sea Food Co. (Inc.);

S. 3438. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of Lindley Nurseries (Inc.);

S. 4673. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the trustees of the Female Orphan Asylum in Georgetown and the Washington City Orphan Asylum in the District of Columbia," approved May 24, 1828, as amended by act of June 23, 1874;

S. 4694. An act to amend section 812 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia;

S. 5289. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to reappoint George N. Nicholson in the police department of said District; and

S. J. Res. 248. Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 14, 1933.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 11461. An act for the relief of C. N. Hildreth, jr.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 15, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Wednesday, February 15, 1933, as reported to the floor leader:

WAYS AND MEANS SUBCOMMITTEE

(10 a. m.)

Hearings on the establishment of foreign-trade zones.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

(10.30 a. m.)

H. R. 14461. To provide for placing the jurisdiction, custody, and control of the Washington city post office in the Secretary of the Treasury.

H. R. 14582. Authorizing the acceptance of title to sites for public buildings.

H. J. Res. 585. Authorizing erection of memorial to American diplomatic and consular officers.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

938. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting estimates of appropriations, submitted by the several executive departments, to pay claims for damages to privately owned property in the sum of $8,282.61 (H. Doc. No. 554); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

939. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting draft of proposed provision pertaining to an existing appropriation for the Treasury Department (H. Doc. No. 555); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

940. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting estimates of appropriations, submitted by the Navy Department, to pay claims for damages by collision with naval vessels in the sum of $637.99 (H. Doc. No. 556); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

941. A letter from the Director of the United States Shipping Board, transmitting the following reports: No. 275, Imports and Exports of Commodities, July to September, 1932; No. 300, Employment of American Merchant Vessels as of December 31, 1932; No. 1100, Ocean Going Merchant Fleets of Principal Maritime Nations as of September 30, 1932; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. POU: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 378. A resolution providing for the consideration of S. 417, an act to provide a Government for American Samoa; without amendment (Rept. No. 2017). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MALONEY: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 14378. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La.; with amendment (Rept. No. 2019). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CROSSER: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 14462. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Sistersville, Tyler County, W. Va.; without amendment (Rept. No. 2020). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Committee on Naval Affairs. House Joint Resolution 526. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to sell surplus coal at nominal prices for distribution to the needy; with amendment (Rept. No. 2021). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CHAPMAN: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 14303. A bill authorizing the George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge Corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Dahlgren, Va.; with amendment (Rept. ## PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Governor of Arizona, transmitting copy of House Joint Memorial No. 1 of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which, with the accompanying memorial, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Phoenix, Ariz., February 9, 1933.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit House Joint Memorial No. 1, in which the eleventh Arizona Legislature, now in session, respectfully prays that Congress enact legislation providing for the universal adoption of the 30-hour week throughout the United States.

Very truly yours,

B. B. MOEUR, Governor.

STATE OF ARIZONA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Arizona, ss:

I, James H. Kerby, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within is a true, correct, and complete copy of House Joint Memorial 1, regular session, eleventh legislature, State of Arizona, all of which is shown by the original engrossed copy on file in this department.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Arizona. Done at Phoenix, the capital, this 9th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.]

JAMES H. KERBY,
Secretary of State.

House Joint Memorial 1

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the eleventh State legislature, in regular session convened, respectfully represents:

Unemployment among all classes of people in the United States has reached alarming proportions, until at present there are, by conservative estimate, 11,000,000 unemployed persons, a large percentage of whom are wholly or partially dependent upon public and private charity for a bare subsistence.

In modern industrial life there has been added to seasonal and cyclical unemployment a technological displacement of men by the increase in labor-saving machinery, which makes it impossible for all to secure gainful employment if the present working hours are retained, as shown by the fact that the number of productive workers decreased over 2,000,000 between 1919 and 1929, while the general population and the volume of manufactured goods increased enormously.

This unemployment has gone hand in hand with decreased wages and a rapidly falling standard of living, which in turn has resulted in diminishing the purchasing power of the masses, thereby intensifying the depression and precluding the return of general confidence in the stability and soundness of our institutions.

The American Federation of Labor, progressive economists and sociologists, and students of political science have indorsed the 30-hour week as a means of creating further employment, raising the standard of living, and causing a return of confidence.

Wherefore your memorialist respectfully prays that the Congress enact legislation providing for the universal adoption of the 30-hour week throughout the United States.

And your memorialist will every pray.

Adopted by the senate February, 1933.

Adopted by the house January 25, 1933.

Approved by the governor February 8, 1933.

Received in the office of the secretary of state February 8, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Franklin Girard, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, and legal custodian of the original enrolled copies of all acts passed at the various sessions of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed constitutes a full, true, and complete transcript of the original enrolled copy of Senate Joint Memorial No. 5, enacted by the twenty-second session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, and filed in this office on the 10th day of February, 1933.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise, the capital of Idaho, this 10th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.]

FRANKLIN GIRARD,
Secretary of State.

IN THE SENATE.

Senate Joint Memorial 5 (by Yost)

A joint memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America.

Received and filed February 10, 1933.

FRANKLIN GIRARD,
Secretary of State.

IN THE SENATE.

Senate Joint Memorial 5 (by Yost)

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Idaho, in legislative session duly and regularly assembled, most respectfully present the following petition, preamble, and resolution, to wit:

Whereas there is now pending before the Seventy-second Congress, second session, H. R. 413, by Mr. FRENCH, as amended, a bill to enlarge the Boise National Forest by adding thereto certain areas in Idaho; and

Whereas the purpose of said H. R. 413, as amended, is the placement of certain areas within the boundaries of the Boise National Forest, and thus placing the same under the control and regulation of the Forest Service; and

Whereas the rules and regulations of said Forest Service and the control of lands within the area of national forest reserves are such as to give great protective regulation of our watersheds; and

Whereas the area proposed to be included within the Boise National Forest contains an area of the watersheds contributing water supply to the Boise River; and

Whereas approximately 400,000 acres of land now under irrigation, extending from the city of Boise to the Snake River, are dependent upon this water supply for irrigation purposes: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Idaho (the House of Representatives concurring), That the prompt passage of H. R. 413, by Mr. FRENCH, as amended, now pending before Congress, be, and the same is, recommended and urged.

This senate joint memorial passed the senate on the 2d day of February, 1933.

GEO. E. HILL,
President of the Senate.

This senate joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 6th day of February, 1933.

ROBERT COULTER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the within Senate Joint Memorial No. 5 originated in the senate during the twenty-second session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

[SEAL.]

M. J. HAMMOND,
Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter from G. J. Brown, of Sterling, Kans., making certain suggestions relative to farm relief through setting minimum prices for cotton, corn, and wheat, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, Calif., favoring the passage of legislation setting aside February 15 for national observance of the birthday of Susan B. Anthony, "the pioneer who blazed the trail leading to woman suffrage in the United States," which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the City Council of Minneapolis, Minn., favoring the passage of legislation to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen in 1783 and appointment as brevet brigadier general of Thaddeus Kosciuszko, a hero of the Revolutionary War, by issuing a special series of postage stamps in honor of such anniversary, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

From 164 citizens of McAllen, Alamo, Weslaco, Edcouch, Edinburg, San Juan, and Pharr: 167 citizens of Dalhart; 89 citizens of Waxahachie; 284 citizens of Fort Worth; 17 citizens of San Antonio; 45 citizens of Buffalo Gap; 26 citizens and members of the First Christian Church of Coleman; 123 citizens of Beeville; 67 citizens of Commerce; and 150 citizens of Palmer and Ennis, all of the State of Texas.

Mr. ASHURST presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Joint Resolution 2, urging State legislatures to petition Congress to pass United States Senate bill 1197, known as the Frazier bill, and to amend said bill to include ranchers and livestock owners

Be it resolved by the eleventh Legislature of the State of Arizona, That a crisis exists, and hundreds of thousands of once prosperous farmers, ranchers, and livestock owners in this Nation have already lost their homes and their all by mortgage foreclosures because of the fact that the price of agricultural products and livestock have for years been below the cost of production, a condition that affects all of the people of this Nation, and is largely responsible for the continuance of the depression; and

There is no adequate way of refinancing existing agricultural indebtedness, and the farmers, ranchers, and livestock owners are at the mercy of their mortgagees and creditors; and

Unless immediate relief is given, thousands and hundreds of thousands of additional farmers, ranchers, and livestock owners will lose their farms, ranches, and livestock, and their homes, and millions more will be forced into our cities and villages, and the army of unemployed will necessarily increase to alarming proportions, precipitating a condition that threatens the very life of this Nation; and

The State Legislatures of Montana, North Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Nevada, and Illinois have each and all petitioned Congress to pass Senate bill 1197, known as the Frazier bill, without delay; which bill provides that existing farm indebtedness shall be refinanced by the Government of the United States at 1½ per cent interest and 1½ per cent principal on the amortization plan, and through mortgages on livestock at 3 per cent per annum, not by issuing bonds and plunging the Nation further into debt, but by issuing Federal reserve notes the same as the Government now does for the banks through the Federal reserve bank: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Arizona respectfully requests and petitions the legislatures of the other States that have not already done so to petition Congress to pass Senate bill 1197 without delay, and amend same to include ranches, ranges, and livestock, in order that the agricultural and ranch indebtedness of this Nation may be speedily liquidated and refinanced, and agriculture and livestock saved from utter ruin and destruction, and this depression brought to an intelligent and speedy end; and respectfully requests that the State legislatures cause copies of such resolution, after same has been passed, to be sent to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House, to Senator FRAZIER at Washington, D. C., and to WILLIAM LEMKE, Congressman elect, at Fargo, N. Dak.; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state cause sufficient copies of this resolution to be printed, and that he mail a copy to the president of the senate and the speaker of the house of each of the States that have not as yet petitioned Congress to pass Senate bill 1197, requesting that said resolution be read before each of said bodies; and be it further

Resolved, That Arizona's Representatives in Congress—Senator HENRY F. ASHURST, Senator CARL HAYDEN, and Hon. LEWIS DOUGLAS—be sent copies of said resolution.

Mr. HALE presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Maine, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF MAINE, 1933.

Joint memorial

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine, in eighty-sixth legislative session assembled, most respectfully present and petition your honorable body as follows:

Whereas the immediate and greatest need of this Nation is to establish a fully employed citizenship and normally functioning private industry offers the most desirable employment opportunities and the primary and largest market for American produce and manufactures is found in meeting the wants of the American people and the necessary employment in supplying these wants belongs first to American workmen; and

Whereas without the free flow of gold, the common medium of international values, the exchange rates of many nations' currencies have by application of the law of supply and demand become divorced from the actual values of those currencies as measured in buying power within the bounds of the nation issuing the currency; and

Whereas depreciated currency is seriously handicapping American industry and our foreign markets are stifled and our domestic industries face destruction by increased imports from depreciated-currency nations; and

Whereas the economic life of the State of Maine is derived from basic industries, such as lumber, fish, pulp, wheat, fruits, coal, cement, and their allied industries, and the very existence of capital, industry, employment, wages, and our standards of living are based on the profitable operation of these basic industries; and

Whereas the Nation faces an emergency and the differences in money levels have existed for a long period and have not become adjusted; and

Whereas nations whose currencies are depreciated are able to ship merchandise into the United States, pay the existing tariffs, accept American currency in payment, and to make a greater profit on their merchandise than if sold in their own markets; and

Whereas such importations from more than 40 nations of the world into the United States under the existing depreciated-currency conditions has the effect of not only eliminating all tariff structures but of enabling such merchandise to be sold at such a low price in the markets of the United States as to handicap and paralyze American industry and increase unemployment, and the industries of the United States are facing bankruptcy and destruction; and

Whereas we believe that unless this legislation is immediately passed chaos and ruin threaten the financial and governmental structure of the United States; and

Whereas Congressman SAMUEL B. HILL, of the State of Washington, has introduced in the present session of Congress a bill, the official title of which is a bill "to prevent loss of revenue, to provide employment for American labor, and to maintain the industries and agriculture of the United States against the effects of depreciation in foreign currencies"; and

Whereas the delay in enacting this bill into law at the present session of Congress is causing continued and alarming increase in unemployment in our industries, America industry and agriculture are being seriously harmed, and in many instances ruined, by this disastrous new form of competition, which is forcing hundreds of thousands of workmen to sacrifice their jobs; and

Whereas the Government of the United States is being deprived of vast customs revenue under existing conditions; and

Whereas equalization measures must be adopted to preserve American jobs for American workmen: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine respectfully urge the present Congress, now in session, and the President of the United States to promptly enact into law H. R. 13999; and be it further

Resolved, That this memorial be immediately transmitted by the secretary of state to the proper officers and committees of the United States Senate and House of Representatives and a copy sent to each of the Representatives and Senators representing the State of Maine in the United States Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That this memorial be immediately forwarded by the secretary of state to the legislatures of all the States of the United States, requesting that they pass and present similar memorials to Congress; and

Your memorialists will ever pray.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.
Read and adopted. Sent up for concurrence January 31, 1933.

STATE OF MAINE,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Robinson C. Tobey, secretary of state of the State of Maine and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of the memorial to the Congress of the United States of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in legislature assembled with the original thereof, and that it is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Given under my hand at Augusta this 8th day of February, A. D. 1933, and in the one hundred and fifty-seventh year of the independence of the United States of America.

[SEAL.] ROBINSON C. TOBEY,
Secretary of State.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, R. A. Sneed, secretary of state of the State of Oklahoma, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true copy of enrolled House Concurrent Resolution No. 7 (by Hogg and Beaman), a resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to enact legislation whereby a moratorium of foreclosures on homesteads may be declared, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of State. Done at the city of Oklahoma City, this 9th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.] R. A. SNEED, Secretary of State.

A resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to enact legislation whereby a moratorium of foreclosures on homesteads may be declared

Whereas it is a well-known fact that thousands of homesteads in the State of Oklahoma and throughout the United States are now facing foreclosure; and

Whereas such action will place the owners of said homesteads without home or shelter and that thousands of home owners are daily being ejected from their homes through foreclosure and thrown upon charity and are fast becoming public charges; and

Whereas the loss of their homes has created a state of discontent among these unfortunates and they are fast becoming transients, roaming from place to place, and unless something is done to curb the wholesale foreclosures on small homes we shall face a national crisis such as the world has never known; and

Whereas we are daily being called upon by our constituents to enact legislation whereby this condition may be relieved, and realizing that the people of the State of Oklahoma and the United States in general are entitled to remedial legislation having for its purposes the relief of said condition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma (the Senate of the State of Oklahoma concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be and is hereby requested to enact laws which will provide for the immediate relief from foreclosure on homes in the State of Oklahoma and in the United States in general; be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be requested to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States giving it the power immediately to provide such remedial legislation; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to each of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress.

Adopted by the house of representatives this the 17th day of January, 1933.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, R. A. Sneed, secretary of state of the State of Oklahoma, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true copy of enrolled Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 8, by Curnutt and Thomas of the senate and Johnson of the house; a resolution memorializing Congress to repeal the law levying an excise tax of 1 cent per gallon of gasoline for Federal purposes, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of state.

Done at the city of Oklahoma City, this 11th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.] R. A. SNEED, Secretary of State.

A resolution memorializing Congress to repeal the law levying an excise tax of 1 cent per gallon of gasoline for Federal purposes

Whereas the recent session of the United States Congress enacted a law establishing an excise tax of 1 cent per gallon on gasoline sold in the United States for the purpose of raising revenue for the expenses of the Federal Government; and

Whereas in this State and many other States of the United States there exist laws levying an excise tax on gasoline from 1 cent to 7 cents per gallon; and

Whereas such taxes are out of all proportion in comparison with other forms of taxes on other commodities; and

Whereas the same should be by the Federal Congress repealed: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oklahoma (the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to repeal the act which levies an excise tax of 1 cent per gallon on gasoline sold in the United States as it is believed the same is an undue burden on said commodity and upon the citizens of the United States: And be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to each Representative and Senator from the State of Oklahoma in the National Congress calling their attention to the desire of the people of Oklahoma as herein expressed: Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the secretary of state of each State in the United States to be transmitted to the legislatures of their respective States.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of State. Done at the city of Oklahoma City, this 9th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.] R. A. SNEED, Secretary of State.

A resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact a law reducing first-class postage to 2 cents base rate

Whereas for revenue-raising purposes only a recent session of our United States Congress caused an increase in first-class postage to 3 cents domestic; and

Whereas such increase in the postage rate is an added burden to the classes of people unable to carry it, and was not an incident to meeting the cost of or improvement in the Postal Service: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oklahoma (the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to enact a law reducing the first-class postage rate from 3 cents to 2 cents; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to each Representative and Senator from the State of Oklahoma in our National Congress calling their attention to the desires of the people of Oklahoma as herein expressed.

SURVEY OF SHIPPING BOARD, SEA-SERVICE SECTION

Mr. GRAMMER. Mr. President, there has been brought to my attention a statement from Hon. T. V. O'Connor, chairman of the United States Shipping Board, giving considerable information on the activities of the sea-service section of the board. As this statement sets out the necessity of the section's being maintained, in the event we are going to have an American merchant marine, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred, in order that this side of the question may have the consideration of the Senate.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL SURVEY OF THE UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD, SEA-SERVICE SECTION

The sea-service section is a part of the Bureau of Marine Development of the United States Shipping Board.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, the sea-service section field offices, located at the ports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, Savannah, Mobile, Galveston, Houston, New Orleans, Portland (Oreg.), and Seattle placed 30,367 men in various ratings, from master to mess boy, and 95.4 per cent of these seamen were American citizens. This result has been brought about by the increasing Americanization work of the sea-service section since its establishment.

The American merchant marine prior to our entrance into the World War had been a declining institution for many years. It is unnecessary to go into the causes of the decline, but the effect may be summarized by the statement that for 10 years prior to the war American ships carried an average of but 10 per cent of our total foreign trade, as contrasted with 83 per cent in 1840. This was the significant result of our departure from shipping as a national industry and our growing interest in manufacturing and agricultural enterprises. Our once sea-minded people had turned away from the sea.

When the World War began it was obvious that we were under a tremendous handicap through lack of ships. Congress recognized the deplorable situation and a year before our entrance into the war gave us our shipping act, 1916, the stated purpose of which is of importance.

The title of the shipping act of 1916 reads:

"An act to establish a United States Shipping Board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States, and for other purposes." (Italics supplied.)

This act created the Shipping Board and charged it with carrying out its purposes and objects. The tremendous program of shipbuilding, ship manning, and operations ensued. One of the multitudinous activities of the board was the training and development of men to man the ships brought out in our reborn American merchant marine. This work was conducted by the war establishment of the sea-service section. In all 34,000 men and 16,000 officers were trained and placed. Such was the origin of our sea-service work. Then came the change from war to peacetime activity and the problem of rejuvenation of our merchant marine.

On June 5, 1920, the merchant marine act of 1920 became law. The first section thereof contains further mandates by Congress touching on the redevelopment of our shipping. Section 1 reads:

"Be it enacted, etc., That it is necessary for the national defense and for the proper growth of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine of the best equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater portion of its commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to do whatever may be necessary to develop and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine, and, in so far as may not be inconsistent with the express provisions of this act, the United States Shipping Board shall, in the disposition of vessels and shipping property as hereinafter provided, in the making of rules and regulations, and in the administration of the shipping laws keep always in view this purpose and object as the primary end to be obtained." (Italics supplied.)

The stress laid by Congress upon the development of our shipping placed upon the Shipping Board the responsibility of solving many problems relating to the merchant marine. The board found itself in possession of a great fleet of ships, which Congress decided should be put to peace-time uses. It proceeded with this great responsibility by establishing steamship services to all parts of the world, and, appreciating the vital necessity of manning the ships with competent American seamen, undertook through its sea-service section the task of carrying out the will of Congress in so far as providing an efficient personnel was concerned. This was a natural corollary to the major problem of having a marine of the best equipped ships, as declared in section 1 of the act of 1920.

The board is still engaged in its program of developing and encouraging a merchant marine adequate for the carriage of the greater portion of our commerce. Recovery from the low average of 10 per cent carried just prior to the war has been gradual. Modernization of the fleet is steadily going on and eventual success will in great part be accomplished by proper manning. The board, in other words, is still carrying out the mandates of the 1920 act.

The duty of accomplishing the permanent establishment of the American merchant marine lies with the Shipping Board. Part of the essential work embraces the activities of the sea-service section.

AMERICAN CREWS ON AMERICAN SHIPS

The Americanization program as carried on by the sea-service section is not open to criticism, as it is a well-known fact that if the section were discontinued the merchant service would have a very small percentage of native-born and naturalized citizens. The provision contained in the merchant marine act of 1928 to the effect that an increasing proportion of the crews of American ships holding mail contracts must be American citizens makes it necessary for the sea-service section to pay special attention to the placement of seamen.

Under date of January 4, 1932, Congressman DAVIS of Tennessee introduced a bill (H. R. 6710), as follows:

"To repeal certain laws providing that certain aliens who have filed declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States shall be considered citizens for the purpose of service and protection of American vessels."

This bill was reported out of committee on April 25, 1932, passed the House of Representatives on June 6, 1932, and was referred to the Senate Immigration Committee on June 7, 1932.

H. R. 6710 should be enacted into law. The bill is constructively American. It will have the effect of eliminating from our American merchant marine many aliens who through the mere act of securing first papers are for marine purposes counted as citizens and given the protection accorded full-fledged Americans. Under the law as now in effect, and as defined by the Attorney General in an opinion given under date of March 12, 1929, these so-called "first paper" men are regarded legally as citizens on mail contract and other American ships.

The merchant marine act of 1928 was the most constructive piece of merchant-marine legislation placed upon the statute books in recent years. By the provisions of this act ships engaged in the carrying of mail, in pursuance of contracts had with the Postmaster General, are required to have crews (exclusive of officers) at least two-thirds American. The Attorney General has ruled that these "first paper" men may be classified as citizens on mail-contract ships. If H. R. 6710 becomes a law, the ships in our American merchant marine will be required to have two-thirds of the crew (exclusive of officers) native-born or fully naturalized citizens.

We should ever bear in mind the lesson taught by the late war, when the greatest question before the country was how to get ships and men to man them; when the large number of alien seamen then employed on American ships refused to man our ships on voyages through the war zone, but instead sought safety on coastwise runs or retired entirely from the sea until the close of the war. This made it necessary to man our ships with inexperienced young Americans or, in a large number of cases, tying up the ships until American youths could be trained, thus crippling the country's resources because of its lack of experienced American seamen.

PHYSICAL EXAMINATION OF SEAMEN

A 1-man lobby, having as its object the doing away with the sea-service section, has been conducted annually by Mr. Andrew Furuseth, whose labor organization (the International Seaman's Union) would benefit greatly were this section abolished and the union left free to monopolize the employment of seamen. For several years he has succeeded in having an amendment inserted in the appropriation bill forbidding any expenditure of Federal funds for the maintenance of this important activity. He has repeatedly appeared before congressional committees and condemned the work of the sea-service section, but has never been able to substantiate his charges. On page 574 of the 1931 hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill, Mr. Furuseth made the following statement:

"I could say a lot of things about the sea-service bureau, but I can not prove it all, only a very little of it."

Mr. Furuseth is opposed to the physical examination which the section gives to each man. The savings to American shipowners through these examinations amount to many thousands of dollars yearly. Before the examinations were instituted it was possible, for example, for a seaman suffering, say, from hernia, to claim that the injury was incurred on board the ship and institute suit for damages. The section's medical examinations have practically done away with these bogus claims. If, on the basis of past experience, an estimate were made of potential claims, using a figure of $200 per claim (exclusive of the cost of litigation), it could be shown that the yearly savings on Shipping Board ships alone would amount to well over $200,000. This figure by no means represents the total savings to the merchant marine and the country at large through the elimination of persons suffering from loathsome diseases. In the close contact with other men aboard ship it is imperative that the seaman's health be safeguarded in every way. Watchful supervision and voyage reports made by the shipmaster to the sea-service section covering health conditions, especially conditions with respect to venereal diseases, indicate that the precautions taken have borne excellent results. It is almost platitudinous to say that an incapacitated seaman is a loss to the ship in time, money, and efficiency.

The sea-service section maintains its own medical department in New York City, Baltimore, Houston, and New Orleans, where the physical examination of seamen is conducted prior to their assignment to a vessel. These medical examinations have a dual purpose. They acquaint the seaman with his physical condition and at the same time assure a personnel that is physically fit. It has been computed that the savings on bogus claims for personal injuries more than offset the expense of operating the whole sea-service section. In ports where the service does not maintain its own medical staff arrangements have been made with the United States Public Health Service to conduct the examinations when so requested by the master of the vessel. Physical examinations are opposed only by the seamen's union and by those who because of loathsome disease or other bodily disqualification find difficulty in securing employment.

During the past two years the United States Shipping Board, through its sea-service section, has worked in close cooperation with the United States Public Health Service in carrying on a campaign to combat venereal diseases among seamen. Arrangements have been made whereby every Shipping Board vessel carries materials for prophylaxis, together with complete instructions as to use. At the end of each voyage the master of each ship is required to make a report to the head of the sea-service section as to conditions aboard his ship with respect to venereal disease. Reports thus far received indicate that excellent results have been obtained through this campaign of education and prevention.

CHARGES AGAINST SEA-SERVICE SECTION—BLACKLIST, ETC.

Charges have been made by the seamen's union that the sea-service section is not Americanizing the crews of our merchant ships; that it is discriminating against American labor; that it maintains a "blacklist" to the great detriment of the seamen; that it duplicates the work of the United States shipping commissioners; and that it is a continuation of the crimping system. The latest effort to destroy its constructive work takes the form of a proposal that the service be transferred from the Shipping Board to the Department of Labor.

The charge that the section is not engaged in Americanization work is without foundation and is apparently brought forward to confuse the issue. The fact is that in each and every placement made American citizens are given preference, and no foreigner is given a position when Americans are available. Not only is this the case, but it may be stated without fear of contradiction that the sea-service section is the only Federal agency that encourages the youth of America to follow the sea as a means of livelihood. Inasmuch as it is everywhere recognized that an American deep-sea merchant fleet can not attain maximum efficiency, or be depended on in time of national emergency, unless it is manned by American citizens, the importance of this work in the building up of our merchant marine must be fully apparent. Local managers of the sea-service offices in various ports of the country are instructed to give every legitimate aid and encouragement to able-bodied young Americans who seriously desire to follow the sea.

The unprecedented depression in international trade and shipping has recently had a retarding effect on this program of the sea-service section to interest the youth of the land in sea-faring careers—a program by virtue of which thousands of American lads have been persuaded to enroll in the merchant service. On December 4, 1930, this phase of the sea-service section's work was temporarily curtailed in order to provide additional positions for experienced men who were out of work. As a result the section during the past year was able to place only 412 boys in the lower ratings, as contrasted with fourteen or fifteen hundred in normal years. With the return of better conditions, the "deck boy" program, deemed to be of the utmost importance in the section's Americanization work, will be resumed along the lines originally mapped out.

The charge that the sea-service section is discriminating against American labor is unfounded. In making placements the local managers never inquire as to whether or not the applicant for a position belongs to a labor organization. Union and nonunion seamen are treated absolutely on a parity. The section takes the stand that American seamen should be entirely free to join organizations of any kind, but that membership in such organizations should not be considered a requisite in order to qualify for a rating in the American merchant marine.

The charge of maintaining a "black list" is also brought forward to becloud the issue. The charge arises out of the fact that masters and owners of vessels invariably request that undesirable seamen—men who have been found faithless, inefficient, or physically unfit, and are so reported by masters under whom they have served—be disciplined for specific periods. If the offense is of a minor nature, no action is taken by the sea-service section. In flagrant cases the offender is placed on a deferred list. Without this disciplinary action incompetency and disease would be prevalent, and it would become next to impossible to build up an efficient and loyal personnel in the merchant marine.

On a par with the gross misrepresentations circulated with respect to the so-called "black list," is the charge that the sea-service section places incompetents in the various ratings aboard ship. It is obviously unfair to the gallant American seamen employed in the merchant service to attempt to discredit their efficiency, after they have proved to the world that they are the peers of any seamen afloat. Even our foreign competitors have recognized their heroic conduct and devotion to duty under the most trying conditions, as disclosed by a long and unparalleled list of daring rescues at sea. The charge in this case is worse than puerile. It merits the severest censure and indicates sufficiently well the motives of those who make it.

NO DUPLICATION OF WORK OF UNITED STATES SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS

Nor is there any basis for the charge sometimes made that the sea-service section is doing the work assigned by law to the United States shipping commissioners of the Department of Commerce. There is not the slightest duplication of work.

United States shipping commissioners are appointed under act of Congress to supervise the engagement and proper treatment of seamen in the merchant service and to enforce laws for the seaman's protection. They attend to the signing of the "ship's articles," a legal instrument in writing, specifying the terms of the contract between owners and seamen. They also attend to the discharge of the seamen and the payment of their wages when the contract has been fulfilled.

The sea-service section does not infringe upon nor duplicate in any way the above duties of the United States shipping commissioners. It is the specific duty of the section to furnish American ships with competent and physically fit American seamen. In the various sea-service offices, maintained at the principal American ports, the men do not register, nor are they shipped mechanically in turn, but rather the American seamen holding the best discharges, and physically qualified, are given preference. As already indicated, physical qualifications are determined by medical examinations given before the actual placement.

The Appropriations Committee of the United States House of Representatives (72d Cong.) requested the Bureau of Efficiency to make a study of the sea-service section for the purpose of determining whether there is any duplication of the work now being performed by the shipping commissioners of the Department of Commerce. The report of the Bureau of Efficiency covering this matter appears in the printed hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill (1933), page 640, and shows conclusively that there is no duplication.

PROPOSED TRANSFER TO DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The suggestion to transfer the sea-service section to the Department of Labor is analogous to proposing the transfer of the recruiting services of the Army, Navy, and Coast Guard to this same department. It would be no more illogical to propose a like transfer of the Civil Service Commission. It is not clear just what advantage would follow from any of these transfers. Certainly there would be no benefit to American seamen, nor to the American merchant marine. The fact is that the opponents of the sea-service section, baffled in other directions, have devised this plan as a step in their fight for eventual abolishment. That their suggestion is conceived in bona fide regard for the good of the service is unthinkable. One has only to consider their past performances and their perennial tirades in the public press to evaluate their true motives in advancing this, their latest plan.

The Shipping Board in its contacts with the marine interests of the Nation is charged with responsibilities not inherent in any other governmental agency. The importance of the problems to be solved in the board's promotion of American shipping, especially during the present depression, when thousands of unemployed American seamen are haunting the sea-service offices, demands that the confidence reposed in the board by owners and operators be not disturbed by pointless and wholly indefensible changes of policy. To transfer the sea-service section to another department would be a move in a retrograde direction, in that it would break the intimate contact with collateral interests which now characterizes the section's devotion to the cause of the merchant marine.

The section also handles the board's study of officer training, a subject which in recent years has assumed major importance. With the growth of the merchant marine since the passage of the Jones-White Act, the availability of properly trained and experienced officers for our new and modern ships has become an increasingly vital problem. The subject is under consideration by the maritime interests of the country and any move to transfer the sea-service section to a comparatively unrelated field of activity would terminate this phase of the section's work.

The charge that the sea-service section is a continuance of the "crimping" system is entirely without foundation, and only illustrates the desperate lengths to which the section's opponents are willing to go in order to achieve their ends. One of the main reasons for the establishment of the sea-service section was the fact that crews of Shipping Board vessels were being furnished by shipping masters, or "crimps," whose practice was to charge from $5 to $100 per man, depending upon what they could collect from the ship under the particular circumstances and conditions at the respective ports. Payment for seamen furnished by crimps has long been one of the sources of graft in American shipping. It is well known that crimps will, during the period of employment, make the men pay for the positions and at the same time charge the vessel for furnishing them. The money so collected is often divided with dishonest officers, making it profitable for such officers to change crews often and employ crimps to replace those dismissed.

Members of Congress have been petitioned by various crimps to use their influence to stop the sea-service section from supplying crews, as it is considered an interference with their business to have seamen placed in the merchant marine free of charge. The United States Shipping Board has also received many letters of the same character. If there were any slackening of the work of the sea-service section, the steamship companies would have to resort to the old and discredited practice of securing crews from crimps, a practice that would cost more in one month than the Americanization and placement work of the sea-service section costs in a year.

Due to the business depression and the consequent large number of idle ships, unemployment has been unusually severe among sea personnel. This abnormal condition accounts for the fact that while the total number of placements has fallen off, the number of applicants for positions has increased so greatly that the resources of the various sea-service offices have been taxed to the utmost. Cooperating with charitable organizations and State employment offices, the section has succeeded in finding shore positions for many of the seamen who could not be placed aboard ship. Some have been given positions as riggers on construction work, others in engine rooms, hotels, restaurants, etc.

Opponents of the sea-service section claim that there is a large turnover in employment of seamen. In an effort to substantiate their claim they place in the record a table compiled by the United States shipping commissioners' office and compare it with the figures furnished by the sea-service section.

The United States shipping commissioners' report for the year ended June 30, 1932, shows that 268,427 seamen were shipped and reshipped in 1932. From these figures it must not be understood that every time a ship makes port an entirely new crew is taken aboard, but rather that most of the crew is reshipped for another voyage. In other words, the commissioner's report takes credit for each and every voyage of the ship, whereas the table submitted herewith by the sea-service section shows only the seamen actually placed.

For the record there is also shown herewith a table showing the yearly cost of operating the sea-service section from 1922 to the present time. In this connection it should be remembered that the abolishment or transfer of the section would effect no saving in appropriations, as a similar activity would have to be set up and the same amount of money would have to be expended if we are to continue the work at anything like its present high state of efficiency.

COST OF OPERATING SEA-SERVICE SECTION

The following is the total cost of operating the sea-service section from the time all other bureaus were discontinued that came under the recruiting service, with the exception of 1922 when the sea-service section still has some of the training bureau program charged to their account:

|---|---|
| June 30, 1922 | $200,067.64 |
| June 30, 1923 | 145,283.68 |
| June 30, 1924 | 135,918.50 |
| June 30, 1925 | 131,752.97 |
| June 30, 1926 | 117,965.65 |
| June 30, 1927 [1] | 121,159.38 |
| June 30, 1928 [1] | 126,529.49 |
| June 30, 1929 | 120,811.07 |
| June 30, 1930 | 114,149.90 |
| June 30, 1931 | 113,248.38 |
| June 30, 1932 | 108,496.25 |

There is also submitted the following statement showing reduction of expenses of the sea-service section as of July 1, 1932.

Statement of reduction of expenses of United States Shipping Board, sea-service section, as of July 1, 1932

| | 1,332.22 | 15,986.64 | 1,165.83 | 13,990.00 |

[1] At Houston the United States Shipping Commissioner occupies space in the sea-service office and pays $20 per month or $240 per annum. This amount has not been deducted in the above figures.

|---|---|
| Total reduction in salaries | $12,780.00 |
| Total reduction in rents | 1,996.64 |
| Total | 14,776.64 |

The above shows a saving of $1,996.64 per annum in rentals.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13534) authorizing the appropriation of funds for the payment of claims to the Mexican Government under the circumstances hereinafter enumerated, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1226) thereon.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2213) for the relief of Harvey Collins, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1227) thereon.

Mr. SCHUYLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9231) for the relief of George Occhionero, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1228) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DICKINSON (by request):

A bill (S. 5641) authorizing R. L. Metcalf, of Omaha, Nebr., and W. E. Wright, of Kansas City, Mo., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Mississippi River between the cities of Davenport, Iowa, and Rock Island, Ill.; to the Committee on Commerce.

(Mr. LEWIS introduced Senate bill 5642, which see under a separate heading.)

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 5643) granting a pension to Michael L. Walsh (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GLENN:

A bill (S. 5644) to authorize the placing of a bronze tablet bearing a replica of the congressional medal of honor upon the grave of the late Brig. Gen. Robert H. Dunlap, United States Marine Corps, in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

WIDENING THE POWERS OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION AS TO LOANS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I present an emergency matter and ask the privilege of introducing a bill to take the form of an amendment to the measure known as the Wagner bill, and that it may be referred to the same committee whence that bill came?

The bill (S. 5642) to provide for making loans to needy individuals, ex-service men, farmers, home owners, and business men, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION—REPEAL OF PROHIBITION

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 211. Therefore I submit a proposed amendment and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. CLARK to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 211) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 3, to strike out all after line 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission."

Mr. BARBOUR submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 211) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(In the committee amendment:)
On page 3, line 2, to strike out "the legislatures of" and insert in lieu thereof "conventions in."
On page 3 to strike out all of section 2.
On page 3 to strike out all of section 3.

PRODUCTION COSTS OF ULTRAMARINE BLUE

Mr. BARBOUR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 359), which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby directed to investigate, for the purposes of section 336 of the tariff act of 1930, the difference in the cost of production between domestic ultramarine blue and foreign ultramarine blue, and to report at the earliest date practicable.

PROPOSED LIMITATION OF DEBATE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the following resotion and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be reported for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 360), as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of the present Congress debate on the part of any Senator shall be limited to 1 hour on any measure, including conference reports and amendments between the Houses, and to 30 minutes on any amendment or motion relating thereto.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BORAH. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule it will go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to serve notice that I shall call up the resolution to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13710) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2148) for the relief of Clarence R. Killion, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. HILL of Alabama, Mr. MONTET, and Mr. CHIPERFIELD were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4368) for the relief of the widow of George W. McDonald.

REPORT OF NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION COMMITTEE

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, there is printed in the New York Times this morning a complete report on the National Railway Survey and recommendations for reform by the National Transportation Committee that was appointed some time ago, on which served the late President Coolidge. The report is a very informative body of facts. I think it ought to have a wider reading than the press will give it. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in full in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

[From the New York Times, Wednesday, February 15, 1933]

TEXT OF REPORT ON NATIONAL RAIL SURVEY AND RECOMMENDATIONS FOR REFORMS—SMITH SAYS RAILROADS' FUNDAMENTAL PROBLEM IS CONSOLIDATION ON NATIONAL SCALE

INTRODUCTORY

Herewith are presented:
A. The conclusions of the National Transportation Committee.
B. The report of the committee.
C. Supplemental report by former Gov. Alfred E. Smith, who prefaces it, "While I am in substantial agreement with the greater part of the committee report, this supplementary memorandum states my conclusions in my own language, placing the emphasis where I think it belongs."
D. Special studies by the research staff to be published shortly by the Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.

The committee associated itself at the request of certain business associations, savings banks, insurance companies, and fiduciary and philanthropic institutions interested in railroad securities (see Appendix 1) in response to an invitation in essential part as follows:

"We, the undersigned organizations, representing many of the interests concerned, believe that there is no more important present task than a thorough and satisfactory solution of the railroad problem, as an integral but the most urgent part of the entire transportation problem. We beg that you examine all phases of the problem and recommend a solution which, with due regard for the public interest, will insure an opportunity for the railroads of this country to be put on a business basis so that neither now nor in the future will they constitute a present threat to the invested savings of our citizens, to loss of employment to our wage earners, and to the stability of the insurance companies and savings banks; and so that the present burden on the Federal Treasury and the American taxpayer may be in a fair measure removed."

The committee met and organized on October 7, 1932. It was composed of Calvin Coolidge, chairman; Bernard M. Baruch, vice chairman; former Gov. Alfred E. Smith, Alexander Legge, and Clark Howell. John W. Power acted as secretary. The committee selected Dr. Harold G. Moulton, of the Brookings Institution, to organize a research staff.

Just as the committee's work was nearing a close it lost the distinguished director of its deliberations, who was giving his great talents unsparingly to this work. The report had not taken form at the time of his death, but the committee has tried to carry on in the spirit of his leadership.

The committee gathered its facts from three sources:
(1) Open hearings.
(2) Studies by other investigating bodies, memoranda, briefs, and specific suggestions.
(3) The work of Doctor Moulton and the staff.

This mass of material is too voluminous and varied to publish in full, but the work undertaken by the research staff will be published shortly by the Brookings Institution. Doctor Moulton's conclusions are his own.

The transport problem has been with man since the first rude trails of pre-history. It has shaped the destiny of humanity. The closing of the caravan routes to the East Indies discovered America. History is full of similar consequences. Just now, largely due to the recent rapid development of new forms of transportation, the railroad problem is acute in nearly all important countries, including our own. Commissions more or less similar to this committee have been at work in England, Canada, and the Argentine Republic, and we have considered their reports and analyses. There are railroad commissions in nearly every one of our 48 States and similar bodies in many other countries. These, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the very able congressional committees on these subjects have all been devoting themselves to the problems created by these rapid shifts. Much of this work and a great mass of other data have been assembled and given careful study by the committee. The problem is very complex, and while the committee is in substantial agreement as to conclusions, it is too much to expect that four men of independent mental processes would all arrive at decisions by identical paths, or with equal emphasis on various factors.

CONCLUSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE

I. The railroad system must be preserved. Changed conditions require new policies, but not abandonment of railroad regulation. The development of regulation and of new methods of transport make it unnecessary for Government further to create and foster competition with or among railroads as a defense against monopoly. That is an expensive and ineffective attempt to do indirectly what Government has shown its ability to do directly. Regulation is sufficient. Government policies should be freed of any purpose either to favor or to handicap any form of transporation with relation to any other form. We can not solve the problem on the theory upon which horses are handicapped in a race. In a fair field and no favor competition should be permitted to decide the result. Regulation should not attempt to "run the business" of transportation. It should concentrate on protecting the public against discrimination and extortion and on requiring the most efficient service at the lowest competitive cost.

(1) Parallel lines and systems are wasteful and unnecessary. Regional consolidations should be hastened and, where necessary, enforced, looking eventually to a single national system with regional divisions and the elimination of all excess and obsolete lines and equipment. Neither holding companies nor any other device should be permitted to hinder consolidation or evade the letter or the spirit of regulatory law.

(2) Unprofitable railroad services should be replaced by cheaper alternative transport methods.

(3) Railroads should be permitted to own and operate competing services, including water lines, but regulatory jurisdiction should be extended to water rates and practices in coastal, intercoastal, and lake shipping to relieve commerce of present chaotic conditions. Congress should promptly clarify its intention on the long-and-short-haul clause of the transportation act.

(4) Government assumption of all or part of the costs of inefficient competing transport as a defense against monopoly is no longer warranted and should be abandoned. As a general principle inland waterways should bear all costs of amortization, interest, maintenance, and operation of the facilities for their navigation. If they can not bear such charges and compete with other forms of transport, they should be abandoned. The St. Lawrence Waterway should be tested by this rule of self-support and if it fails in that test the pending treaty with Canada should not be ratified. Governmental commercial operation of the actual facilities of transportation, such as barge lines, should not be continued.

(5) Automotive transportation should be put under such regulation as is necessary for public protection. It should bear its fair burden of tax but only on a basis of compensation for public expenditure on its behalf, plus its share of the general tax load. Neither tax nor regulation should be applied for any purpose of handicapping the march of progress for the benefit of the railroads.

(6) Wages and working conditions of labor in transportation are determinable by established procedure in another forum and are not within the scope of this inquiry. There should be no heavier burdens on the railroads in employing labor to operate automobiles than on their competitors. In the railroads (as in other industries), rates, capitalization, salaries, and wages must all follow changing economic conditions, but none should be sacrificed for the benefit of others.

(7) Beacons, weather service, and similar auxiliaries to air traffic should be maintained at public expense, and air transport should be encouraged during its development stage, but we believe that every such service should ultimately pay its own way.

(8) The committee has no recommendation to make on pipe lines.

II. The policy of trying to appraise railroad properties on some selected basis of valuation and then saying that they are entitled to earn a fair return on this appraisal should be reconsidered. Where competition with trucks and other methods exists, it will determine rates. In other cases rates must be regulated, but the basis of costs of operation under efficient management is a better general guide than any attempt to preserve capital structures regardless of economic trends. We see no reason why the rate-making rule should not say in plain English that railroads are entitled to make a reasonable profit based upon costs of efficient operation and that they are not entitled to earnings merely to preserve present structures if overcapitalized.

III. The railroads should do much that they have not done to improve their condition without any Government help at all. They should promptly be freed of all unnecessary restrictions on the doing of it. It has been estimated that less than a 20 per cent increase in traffic would put most of them on an earning basis. In view of the narrowness of this margin of loss and of the very great savings possible in railroad operation, we regard their outlook as far from hopeless.

(a) Railroads should adopt the competing methods of which they complain.

(b) Railroads should cooperate to reduce competitive expenses.

(1) Unnecessary services should be abandoned.

(2) Metropolitan terminals should be consolidated and unnecessary facilities scrapped.

(3) Circuitous haulage should be eliminated.

(c) Financial management should be improved.

(d) Transport methods and equipment should be brought up to date.

(e) In view of what could be done by better management, the general outlook seems far from hopeless.

IV. Regulatory jurisdiction should be extended to the whole national transportation system, but applied only to the extent necessary for public protection. The existing regulatory mechanism of the Interstate Commerce Commission is inadequate and should be improved by reorganization without expansion or increased expense.

V. Emergency recommendations.

(1) Corporate reorganization can and should be facilitated by revision of the bankruptcy procedure.

(2) The recapture clause should be repealed retroactively.

(3) The statutory rule of ratemaking should be revised.

(4) "Adequate security" does not necessarily mean "marketable collateral."

THE REPORT

I. The railroad system must be preserved. Changed conditions require new policies but not abandonment of railroad regulation. The development of regulation and of new methods of transport make it unnecessary for government further to create and foster competition with or among railroads as a defense against monopoly. That is an expensive and ineffective attempt to do indirectly what the Government has shown its ability to do directly. Regulation is sufficient. Government policies should be freed of any purpose either to favor or to handicap any form of transportation with relation to any other form. We can not solve the problem on the theory upon which horses are handicapped in a race. In a fair field and no favor, competition should be permitted to decide the result. Regulation should not attempt to "run the business" of transportation. It should concentrate on protecting the public against discrimination and extortion and on requiring the most efficient service at the lowest competitive cost.

At the foundation of our system of communication is the railroad web. It is the most important single element in our social and economic life. Its rapid extension enabled us to cover the greater habitable part of a continent with a cohesive form of liberal government of 125,000,000 people united in a common language, purpose, and ideal and to maintain national solidarity through periods of stress. Both security and material welfare are involved in its continued efficient existence. The public interest is deeper than its investment or its need of good service. We are addressing a matter of national concern of the first magnitude. The railroad system must be continued and its efficiency preserved because of national necessity—economic, social, and defensive.

(a) Governmental fostering of competition is no longer necessary as a defense against monopoly

Above all other enterprises, railroads are, therefore, "affected with a public interest" and, under an ancient doctrine of our law, peculiarly subject to Government regulation. In earlier development the railroad franchise created an effective and complete monopoly against which industrial and social segments had no defense. Rigorous governmental control was inevitable. It took two forms: First, an effort to foster competition among different railroads and to create and maintain by Federal financial aid other forms of competing transportation, such as waterways; second, an intense regulatory control of the railroads themselves. The latter has been practiced long enough and sufficiently extended to prove that it dominates competition or any other influence as the governing law of railroad practice. To the extent that the monopoly inherent in the railroad franchise was a menace, it is of the utmost importance to recognize that current railroad regulation safely controls it. Other safeguards have appeared. With increasing effect new methods of transport are invading customary fields of railroad patronage. On a basis of economic efficiency, independent of Government aid, pipe lines, motor transport, and airways are all making bids for business which the railroads can retain only by offering equivalent service at competitive rates. In these areas of competition there is no longer complete monopoly. These two developments—perfection of regulation and appearance of competing methods—have created a new principle, viz:

In so far as Government policies have been designed by Federal intervention to create and maintain competition with or among railroads as a defense against monopoly, they should be abandoned as wasteful and unnecessary. Regulation is sufficient.

(b) Regulation should provide a fair field and no favor

The railroads complain that they are shackled by regulation while their competitors are free and unduly advantaged by various forms of discrimination in their favor. To the extent that this is true, it is unfair. But it must be equally clear that, notwithstanding the deep public interest in our railroads, the Government can not stand in the way of progress. Certain regulation of competitive methods is necessary. They can not be permitted to escape their just burdens. They ought not to be artificially advantaged by subsidy or otherwise. But regulation of them must arise from its own necessity, and burdens upon them must derive from justice. The Government can not, for the sake of the railroads, invent and apply to their competitors either regulation or burden on the theory upon which horses are handicapped in a race. A similar principle applies to railroads, and to the extent that they are handicapped by burdens for which the reason is obsolete or nonexistent, Government has a positive duty to remove them. The guiding rule of the whole matter seems to us quite clear:

With the danger of railroad monopoly going or gone and (whether going or gone) completely controlled by regulation, Government has a positive duty to see to it that neither the railroads nor their competitors are either unduly handicapped or unduly advantaged. Thereafter, in a fair field and no favor economic competition must decide the question of survival under private ownership and operation.

PUBLIC PROTECTION SOLE PRINCIPLE

(c) Regulation should not be abandoned. It should be put on the simple basis of public protection.

There is respectable opinion that the development of effective competitive methods argues for the abandonment of all railroad regulation. The committee can not concur. Competition of parallel methods is as yet limited and localized and, while it is a powerful and growing force against monopoly, it does not relieve the necessity for railroad regulation and, because of other aspects of public interest and dependence already mentioned, in our opinion, it never will. On the contrary, we regard regulation as necessary in the interest of both the railroads and the public and we think that it should be extended to other forms of transportation.

But, for the reasons stated hereinafter, more care must be taken to maintain managerial initiative. Regulation, whether of railroads or other forms, should not attempt to "run the business" of transportation. It should concentrate on protecting the public against discrimination, extortion, and other abuses of monopoly and on insuring the most efficient service at the lowest competitive cost.

If these conclusions on general principles are correct, several changes in policy flow inevitably therefrom, viz:

(1) Parallel lines and systems are wasteful and unnecessary. Regional consolidations should be hastened and, where necessary, enforced, looking eventually to a single national system with regional divisions and the elimination of all excess and obsolete lines and equipment. Neither holding companies nor any other device should be permitted to hinder consolidation or evade the letter or the spirit of regulatory law.

The policy of maintaining parallel and competing lines or systems on the theory that thus extortionate rates and discrimination may be restrained is wasteful and, of course, untenable under a system which controls rates and practices to the ultimate.

Duplication and unnecessary overheads, facilities, and services, inherent in the present multiplicity of railroads, are very expensive and consolidations should be hastened. In plans for this, consideration should be given to creating a single efficient system (rather than competing systems) for each natural trade area, even to the ultimate extent of a single national network with regional divisions. It has been estimated by good authority that several hundred million dollars, or enough to pay interest on a large part of the outstanding railroad bonds, can be saved. Consolidation is so vital to the public welfare that, unless it is voluntarily accomplished within a reasonable time, the Government should compel it. Neither holding companies nor any other device should be permitted to hinder consolidation or to evade the letter or spirit of regulatory laws.

(2) Unprofitable railroad services should be replaced by cheaper alternative transport methods.

In view of the rapid development of automotive and other transport, there is no justification for maintenance by railroads of losing services and lines, and there devolves upon regulatory bodies and controlling interests something more than a negative duty to hasten their replacement by alternative methods, such as motor transport, which can render adequate service on a profitable basis in cases where rail transportation can operate only at a loss.

(3) Railroads should be permitted to own and operate competing services, including water lines, but regulatory jurisdiction should be extended to water rates and practices in coastal, intercoastal, and lake shipping to relieve commerce of present chaotic conditions. Congress should promptly clarify its intention on the long-and-short-haul clause of the transportation act.

Restrictions on the ownership by railroads or water-borne, automotive, or other competing services seem anomalous in a régime which has demonstrated its effective control of both rates and practices.

There are certain competitive situations where railroad rates between two ports are fixed by regulation and unregulated water rates are in chaos. This is disturbing to commerce and unfair to railroads. For this and other reasons we believe that the jurisdiction of the regulating body should be extended to cover intercoastal, coastal, and lake commerce. We do not mean to recommend that water rates, based on actual lower costs, should be regulated upward to equalize traffic in favor of railroads. But we do believe that in such a situation some stabilizing influence should be applied in the interest of commerce generally as well as in fairness to railroads.

The law prohibits a railroad from charging less for a longer than for a shorter haul over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included in the longer, but permits the Interstate Commerce Commission a discretion to relieve this restriction.

The law is not altogether clear, and the commission's interpretation and decisions have been the subject of long and persistent controversy. Grave consequences affecting wide economic areas are involved, and the situation requires prompt clarification. Two pending suggestions by the Interstate Commerce Commission and one by the House committee might contribute thereto. If jurisdiction of the commission be extended to include intercoastal commerce, or if a new rule of rate making be adopted, the problem would be simplified. But if neither of these things is done, it is important that Congress act at once to declare its intention on this important application of the so-called long-and-short-haul controversy.

(4) Government assumption of all or part of the costs of inefficient competing transport as a defense against monopoly is no longer warranted and should be abandoned. As a general principle inland waterways should bear all costs of amortization, interest, maintenance, and operation of the facilities for their navigation. If they can not bear such charges and compete with other forms of transport, they should be abandoned. The St. Lawrence waterway should be tested by this rule of self-support; and if it fails in that test, the pending treaty with Canada should not be ratified. Governmental commercial operation of the actual facilities of transportation, such as barge lines, should not be continued.

Creation and maintenance by Government of competing methods of transport, where the result is not (as in the Panama Canal) to provide more efficient service at lower cost but only (as in some inland waterways) to maintain at the taxpayers' expense more costly and less efficient service, can no longer be justified as a defense against monopoly.

This Government has long been committed to the improvement and maintenance of shipways and of at least the outer harbors of ports accessible to great naturally navigable waterways. This involves expense defrayed by taxation of the whole Nation but applied at particular points in the development of the instrumentalities of interstate and international commerce. To an extent these waterways are the railroads' competitors, and as far as they go these expenditures favor them. But in respect of accessories to naturally navigable waterways, such as ocean harbors and their approaches and the harbors and channels of the Great Lakes, this is a recognized function of government the world over for naval as well as commercial purposes, and the railroads may be presumed to have been located, financed, and constructed with this in view. We have not heard it decried as an unjust handicap, and with these remarks it passes from our consideration.

But with inland waterways in general the case is otherwise. For the sake of illustration let us imagine a federally constructed canal between, for example, Topeka and Oklahoma City, a stark ditch. If that canal fairly bore the burdens of its cost of construction and operation and yet could furnish transportation at an advantage over rails, nobody could complain, regardless of the extent to which it diverted railroad traffic. But if such was not the case and the canal could compete only if the public paid enough of these charges to undercut the cost of rails, it seems too obvious for argument that its creation and maintenance would be a direct impairment of the railroad system by public subsidy and distinctly inimical to the national interest.

Exactly the same principle of self-support seems applicable to any natural waterway upon which improvement and engineering devices are necessary to provide effective navigation. We think it is the very touchstone of the whole vexed problem and that every existing or projected improvement should be tested by its application. Any project which fails to answer that test should be abandoned without hesitation as an unwarranted waste of public money.

(a) The Great Lakes waterway

The connecting channels of the Great Lakes were not navigable in the modern sense in their natural state, but the Great Lakes waterway now stands as a fully created, implemented, and efficient system of navigation which in many respects falls under the considerations governing Federal improvement of ocean ports, harbors, and shipways.

(b) The St. Lawrence seaway

There are obviously not at present any facilities for navigation by ocean-going vessels of the restricted waterways connecting the Great Lakes with each other and with the sea. The project to create such a shipway to the head of Lake Superior is a major engineering project of stupendous magnitude and very great cost. There is diversity of opinion as to whether the project is practicable. It is clear from our studies that the peculiar type of lake bulk carriers is far more efficient than any ocean freighter, and from this fact that the area of economy is restricted practically to savings in cost of transshipment. But our studies also show that in no reasonable probability could this minor saving be enough to approximate even the carrying charges on this project.

In conformity with one of the general principles already announced, if this seaway could be shown to be the march of progress and if cheaper and more efficient transportation can thus be achieved, no barrier should be imposed against such a development. But we think that, before ratification of the pending seaway treaty with Canada bargaining away valuable American rights, this project should be fairly tested on the rule of self-support and, if it fails, the treaty should not be ratified.

(c) Government barge lines

Argument for and against Government operation of barge lines was strongly pressed before us. In this case not only is the waterway itself provided and maintained at public expense but the actual business of transportation thereon is in part financed by Government. The claim is made, and in our judgment sustained, that, if the methods of accounting used by the Government in respect of the Panama Canal were applied, they would reveal operating losses which are charged to the taxpayer. We think that actual Government operation of the facilities of transportation, wholly or partly at public expense, is unjust to the vast majority of people and unwarranted by any argument that has come to our attention.

(d) Inland waterways in general

We recommend that the Congress give consideration to the formulation of a consistent policy on inland waterways. We think that the test of self-support should be applied to every existing or proposed inland waterway.

Unbearable tax burdens are generally recognized as a principal hindrance to economic recovery. Our waterway policy for the past few years has averaged a cost of about $100,000,000 annually, and tremendous projects involving hundreds of millions are being considered. Our studies show no commensurate economic benefit resulting from much of this spending. In such circumstances we think that a large part of this activity should be abandoned or at least suspended. It bears heavily on the taxpayer as a direct burden and even more heavily on the whole community in its contribution to the postponement of prosperity. At a time when the very stability of our system depends on the balancing of Federal expenditures with revenue and the sources of taxation seem almost dry, we find it difficult to justify this wasteful outpouring of hundreds of millions of dollars for results so barren of economic returns.

BASIS STATED FOR TRUCK CONTROL

(5) Automotive transportation should be put under such regulation as is necessary for public protection. It should bear its fair burden of tax but only on a basis of compensation for public expenditure on its behalf, plus its share of the general tax load. Neither tax nor regulation should be applied for any purpose of handicapping the march of progress for the benefit of the railroads.

The problem of the automobile is very difficult. Its roadbed is provided at public expense, and it requires few, if any, terminal or similar facilities. It need not—as must railroads—load any part of its cost of operation with a charge for this construction and maintenance. It can make rates which do not involve charges for depreciation and amortization. It can pay whatever scale of wages and exact whatever hours of labor it can make effective. It can bargain closely and instantly and can walk away with business while the railroads are involved in a prescribed process before their regulating overseers. It is not attached to rails and can furnish a swift door-to-door service which railroads as such can not even approximate. It may be a common carrier, a contract carrier, or a private operator. It moves intrastate and interstate and may change its character in these matters instantly. It need not maintain continuous schedules and service. It can pick its business and is prone to take the cream of the traffic and leave the rest for the railroads, which must receive whatever is tendered. It can be permanently or sporadically in business and competition. With these advantages it has made inroads into railroad business and the difficulties are only partly suggested by this short recitation of complexities.

The problem thus presented has been regarded as serious in every important country and commissions similar to this committee have been convened in several of them. The difficulty is not solely in the amount of tonnage diverted but resides also in the chaotic rate conditions presented to commerce in general and in many new necessities for public protection. It has been a matter of primary concern to our Interstate Commerce Commission, to State commissions everywhere, to the Congress, to the highway users themselves, and to all who have given great study to the transport problem.

One thing is certain. Automotive transportation is an advance in the march of progress. It is here to stay. We can not invent restrictions for the benefit of railroads. We can only apply such regulation and assess such taxes as would be necessary if there were no railroads, and let the effect be what it may.

On the question of whether public financing of roadbeds operates as a subsidy, there is a vast variety of circumstance. The automobile itself, its fuel, lubricants, and operations are all heavily taxed. Does the total of these assessments bear its share of the general tax load and also sufficiently reimburse the public expenditure on the roads it uses? If it does, the circumstance that the charge is not comparable in amount to railroad costs of construction and maintenance of terminals and roadbeds is immaterial. The purpose is not to handicap automotive competition, but only to do justice.

These questions are of mixed State and Federal bearing and very difficult of determination. Both taxes and regulation on motor transport vary among the States and, while it has been strongly urged as the only solution, the committee believes it impracticable to get uniformity by any plan for concert of State action. Our studies clearly indicate that in some States automotive vehicles do not bear their full burden of taxes. We think they should pay the carrying charges and cost of maintenance of the highways they use and also their share of the general tax load. The Interstate Commerce Commission recommends regulation of interstate busses and extension of their jurisdiction to include interstate trucks. The committee believes that the situation requires general Federal jurisdiction of motor transport. It recognizes that no such intricacy of regulations as characterizes railroad supervision can ever be extended to this field, but it is convinced that a broad measure of Federal and uniform State control can and should be applied.

A valuable advance is registered in the recent report of the joint committee of railroads and highway users on the regulation and taxation of highway transportation recommending principles governing the subject which have been agreed to by these diverse interests. This kind of public-spirited cooperation is one of the most hopeful aspects of this difficult problem.

WAGES OUTSIDE INQUIRY SCOPE

6. Wages and working conditions of labor in transportation are determinable by established procedure in another forum and are not within the scope of this inquiry. There should be no heavier burdens on the railroads in employing labor to operate automobiles than on their competitors. In the railroads, as in other industries, rates, capitalization, salaries, and wages must all follow changing economic conditions, but none should be sacrificed for the benefit of others.

It is asserted in behalf of the railroads that certain restrictions imposed on them in the matter of hiring labor for truck and bus operation which automotive transport escapes, unfairly prejudice the railroads, and that labor in this competing industry is not properly protected. The committee thinks that the railroads should be under no greater restrictions in employing labor for automotive operation than are other automotive users, but it would prefer to see equalization by improving conditions in automotive labor rather than by impairing conditions of employment in railroads.

The committee regards the particular wages and conditions of labor generally as beyond the scope of its inquiry. It merely offers the suggestion that, while governments can not and should not attempt to regulate the use by owners of their own automotive property, they might, in assessing taxes or issuing licenses, impose conditions of employment on vehicles not operated by owners.

The committee believes that a permanent and universal liquidation and downward adjustment of values and incomes of all kinds have occurred in this country and that railroad rates, capital structures, salaries, and wages must all respond to this generally changed condition, but that none should be sacrificed for the benefit of others.

A considerable number of obsolete rules governing overtime, hours constituting day's work, and restrictions on service survive in the railroad wage structure. The committee does not wish to see labor lose any of its hard-won improvement in conditions, but it believes that the just substance of them can be retained without adherence to obsolete forms, and that labor is as eager as railroads to modernize and simplify the structure of wages and working schedules.

We regret that the labor organizations did not see fit to avail themselves of the committee's invitation to submit their recommendations on the general subjects of our investigation. We had hoped to have the benefit of their wide knowledge concerning railroad labor conditions and also their views on the best methods of protecting labor in railroads from conditions in competing methods and of improving conditions in the latter field. It is only fair to call attention to the fact that our material does not include any presentation by the labor organizations of any facts that might have seemed pertinent from their point of view.

(7) Beacons, weather service, and similar auxiliaries to air traffic should be maintained at public expense, and air transport should be encouraged during its development stage, but we believe that every such service should ultimately pay its own way.

Air service is diverting some traffic from railroads and threatens greater inroads. Here again the railroads are confronted with a development of human progress. It can not be handicapped in their behalf. The most that they can ask is that it be not unfairly advantaged and, for reasons stated herein, we think that the real railroad remedy against this competition is to enter and help develop it.

Existing American airways are unquestionably subsidized at public expense. Various forms of flying aids are maintained. Mail contracts, paying much more than receipts from air postage, are in effect with a deliberate purpose of subsidy, and there is no doubt that lower rates on all air service are thus made possible at public expense.

The committee believes that beacons and flying aids are like lighthouses and navigation aids at sea and can not be abandoned or charged for. The railroads were themselves subsidized in their developemnt period. We can not condemn Government aids to the inauguration of this valuable service. But, however much subsidy may be justified in a development period, we feel that every established transport service should ultimately be self-sustaining, that air service has a definite place, that it will inexorably take that place without the continuing necessity for the subsidy granted in the early stages of development, and that the necessity for such aid is even now decreasing. It is of the utmost importance that such aid as is given should be fairly and economically distributed.

8. The committee has no recommendation to make on pipe lines. There are projects for a wider use of pipe lines as a transportation agency, but at present they do not constitute a problem. They are not subsidized, and they are effectively regulated. The subject has been ably and exhaustively studied by the House Committee on Commerce in a forthcoming report. From our own studies we do not recommend further present affirmative action.

VALUATION POLICY IS QUESTIONED

II. The policy of trying to appraise railroad properties on some selected basis of valuation and then saying that they are entitled to earn a fair return on this appraisal should be reconsidered. Where competition with trucks and other methods exists, it will determine rates. In other cases rates must be regulated, but the basis of costs of operation under efficient management is a better general guide than any attempt to preserve capital structures regardless of economic trends. We see no reason why the rate-making rule should not say in plain English that railroads are entitled to make a reasonable profit based upon costs of efficient operation and that they are not entitled to earnings merely to preserve present structures if overcapitalized.

Notwithstanding social and economic dependence on railroads—right or wrong—we have, since the beginning, relied on private initiative for their development and financial support. Profit is the only incentive to private investment. Unless the railroads are permitted reasonable earnings on the cost of efficient operation, there is no alternative to Government ownership and complete socialization of our railroad system. But that does not mean that railroads, any more than other industries, are entitled to a guaranty of earnings on their investments in property. In early periods of railroad development and unregulated monopoly, the profit incentive was overemphasized and resulted in unconscionable abuse. Extravagant profits, or the hope of them, contributed to the rapidity of the extension of the system, but they also got a sharp rebuke in certain instances of attempted confiscatory rate regulation. The courts intervened with an opinion that rate making must be limited by the right to a "fair return" on the value devoted to public service. Though originally probably intended as a protection against confiscation in individual cases, this principle, by a process of evolution, became a rule governing the general level of rates.

We think this rule should be abandoned. Nobody ever thinks of saying that the cost of bricks and mortar in an industrial plant should determine what it shall charge for its products. If it can keep its costs low enough to earn a profit on what its product is worth to the public in competition with other products, then it is worth ten to twenty times what it can earn. If it can not do that, it is as apt to be a liability as an asset.

In this sense, the present railroad rule puts the cart before the horse. It tends to ununiformity of results, perpetuation of debt and of obsolete and exaggerated capital structure, insufficiency of allowance for obsolescence and depreciation, inadequacy of surplus and reserves and maintenance of unnecessary properties and facilities. The results are unjustifiably high rates in some cases and low rates in others. It evolved on the theory that, if not so restricted, the railroad monopoly would earn inordinately. That theory is becoming obsolete. The day is not far distant, if, indeed, it has not already arrived, when, even if wholly unregulated, some of our railroads may have difficulty in earning a "fair return" on asset values, no matter by what rule such values are defined. These competitive developments are inexorable. The public is entitled to all benefits of the march of progress and nothing will prevent that consummation. We think that the right principle of rate-making is as follows:

Wherever there is fair economic competition it will decide the rate question and it should be permitted to do so freely. Where there is no such competition, the problem of rate regulation arises, but costs of service under efficient operation are a better general guide than some arbitrary determination of asset values.

If, on that basis, a railroad can not earn enough to support its capital structure, the remedy is not to raise rates. It is to revise the structure. And if on no reasonable revision can the capital structure be maintained, it is an economic misfit. Parts of it that can not live should be abandoned and the rest either set up in a new system or consolidated with other groupings.

Fixed railroad indebtedness is not commonly retired. It is refunded. It is a universal rule of financing that any debt for purchase of productive facilities should be amortized during the lives of those facilities out of returns from their use. Railroads are not exempt from this well-established principle and rates should be subject to no restriction which contravenes it. A cause contributing to the present crisis is the unwieldy proportion of interest-bearing debt in railroad capitalization, much of it representing facilities long ago scrapped. We distinctly do not believe that past mistakes as represented by present unwieldy debt structures should be salvaged by increased rates. The present debt structure must be revised and losses written off. But, as to the future, we do think that rate-making should look to the retirement of new debt incurred for purchase of productive facilities during their lives and out of returns from their use.

The Interstate Commerce Commission petitions for "A simple rule which shall make it clear that, in regulating the general level of rates, we shall always keep in mind and be guided by the need for producing, so far as possible, revenues which are sufficient for the maintenance of an adequate national railway transportation system and also recognize the principle that the railroads may justly earn a surplus in time of prosperity to offset deficiencies in time of depression."

The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives recommends the following: "In the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates the commission shall give due consideration, among other factors, to the effect of rates on the movement of traffic, to the need, in the public interest, of adequate and efficient railway transportation service at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service; and to the need of revenues sufficient to enable the carriers, under honest, economical, and efficient management, to provide such service."

It will thus be seen that those who have given the subject of rate making the closest attention have abandoned the theory of making rates on some basis of valuation. It is said that the principles just discussed are implicit in both of these suggested rules. If so, we approve them, but the committee sees no reason why a rule for rate making should not say in plain English that railroads are entitled to make a reasonable profit on costs of efficient operation and that they are not entitled to preserve overcapitalized corporate structures.

ROADS FAILING TO HELP THEMSELVES

III. The railroads should do much that they have not done to improve their condition without any Government help at all. They should promptly be freed of all unnecessary restrictions on the doing of it. It has been estimated that less than a 20 per cent increase in traffic would put most of them on an earning basis. In view of the narrowness of this margin of loss and of the very great savings possible in railroad operation, we regard their outlook as far from hopeless.

The effect of protracted depression is to reveal the underlying trends of an era. While part of our transport difficulties are, like other troubles, no more than reflections of depression, continued traffic stagnation has uncovered organic difficulties. It by no means follows, however, that this condition was either caused, or can be cured, by Government. In this time of extreme stress on everybody, the public has a right to expect the railroads to do what they can for themselves before they call on the rest of us and we are convinced that there is a great deal which the railroads have left undone. It has been said by experienced and informed observers that—because of enforced reduction in expense—a 20 per cent or even a lesser increase in traffic volume would put most of the railroads on an earning basis and that less than a 50 per cent increase would restore them to net earning levels of 1929. Passing the question of strict accuracy in these broad assertions, the fact is that, here as elsewhere, there has been such liquidation of the general extravagance of the 1929 delusion, that a very moderate movement on the upward business spiral would dissipate much of the seeming cloud on the solvency of many railroads.

The committee is not proceeding on conjectures of unwarranted optimism, but it does seem that, if the margin of loss is as scant as this, it is narrow enough to invite some robust action in railroad administration to improve earning statements, not by increased traffic or Government intervention, but by economies and improvements in operation, and perhaps by a reduction in rates to attract more business. That has been the universal action in sister industries and that is the view of some of the leading authorities in railroad management.

Against this view it is urged that railroads have been prevented by statutes and regulations from acting freely or that, where they have been permitted to act, restrictions legally imposed upon them as railroads have been extended to them in new fields. While we believe that this argument is too much emphasized, we have found some substance in this complaint. The committee believes that railroads should be permitted to act along the lines suggested herein subject to no more and no heavier restrictions than their competitors and that the Congress and regulatory bodies owe them a positive duty to relieve them promptly of any handicap whatever in this regard.

(a) Railroads should adopt the competing methods of which they complain.

Much of the difficulty which the railroads ascribe to automotive and potential air and pipe-line competition should and could have been relieved by an alert and aggressive railroad policy. We believe that if the railroads had regarded themselves more accurately as purveyors of transportation rather than as guardians of a monopoly, they would have been more alert to take advantage of every development in their field and that a more progressive policy might have turned to their own distinct advantage the very things they now regard as a burden and a threat.

Resort to government as an alternative to self-help is to be deplored. The early transport pioneers did not go to Washington to have their ferries and steamboats protected against rails. They developed the rail service and became controlling figures in the new field. We think it is quite clear that the railroads have been distinctly remiss in not getting the most out of the new methods. It seems to us that the truck, in local and terminal service, motor-drawn equipment on rails and highways in many cases, and the airplane, where rapid transit is required, afford a way to a beneficent transport revolution; that the railroads themselves owed a duty to the public to have led, and that the quicker they do so now the better it will be for all concerned. After they have taken this logical step, we wonder whether they will be so eager to restrict these other forms of transportation as they are now.

REDUCTION OF COMPETITIVE COSTS

(b) Railroads should cooperate to reduce competitive expense.

(1) Unnecessary services should be abandoned.

We think that there has not been sufficient cooperation among the railroads. As an example we quote from the Interstate Commerce Commission's 1932 report, p. 37:

"The expenses so chargeable to passenger and allied services for the year 1931 before taxes, rentals, and interest were 110.82 per cent of the revenues from those services. For the freight service the corresponding figure was only 68.62."

The public is familiar with the spectacle of "crack" passenger trains shuttling back and forth across the country empty or nearly so and perhaps, also, with the explanation that this "is necessary to retain the competitive reputation for service"—in other words, for sales promotion or advertising. The committee believes that agreements in good faith and within the law could relieve this expense. We think empty trains should either be filled by reduced rates or taken out of service. With our whole economic structure at stress, sympathy with such extravagance is difficult.

(2) Metropolitan terminals should be consolidated and unnecessary facilities scrapped.

Terminal expenses constitute an astonishing proportion of railway costs. Great economies and much improved service are possible through the use of trucks in terminal areas, and further large savings by unification of railway and other terminal facilities. Railroads have insisted on separate terminals in metropolitan areas for purely competitive advantage. The resulting multiplicity has imposed high costs, poor service, and great waste. This burden upon shippers in indefensible. Reform is as necessary to modern metropolitan convenience as to railroad economy. It is impossible to deal effectively with the manifold problem of a modern city without a unified plan of development for all forms of transportation. This problem differs in different cities, and there are legal and other difficulties involved, but much could be accomplished at once by cooperation among railroads, and a complete solution would be greatly facilitated if all forms of transportation were placed under a single regulatory agency and if railroad consolidation were worked out along regional lines.

These improvements would entail wholesale scrapping of some facilities. We can not follow the argument against the writing off of obsolete, nonearning and unnecessary properties. We think that there are thousands of miles of trackage and many other facilities, both in terminals and elsewhere, which serve no necessary purpose and which do not now earn and never can. They are handicaps on efficient operation and burdens on the public. Their elimination would reduce capital assets, but it would result in lower rates, better earnings, and improved service.

(3) Circuitous haulage should be eliminated.

Circuity in haulage to keep traffic on the rails of a single system entails great waste for which the committee can find no sufficient excuse. As in all attempts to apply general principles to the infinite variety of circumstance in a great nation, a flat rule requiring freight to be routed by the most direct route, letting the revenue fall where it may, would result in some hardship, but the present practice leads to grotesque results. It is not easy to reduce the effect to figures, but the unnecessary haulage of freight has been estimated at a large percentage of total ton-mileage. Until the railroads are willing, by cooperation, to eliminate this kind of waste, it is difficult to share their apprehension of competing methods.

(c) Financial management should be improved.

We have discussed our view of the contribution of existing rate-making rules to present financial distress, but we also question the policy of some railroads in applying too great a proportion of earnings to dividends and too little to the retirement of debt and the accumulation of surpluses and reserves—a practice which we regard as responsible, at least in part, for the existing unfortunate condition of some roads.

(d) Transport methods and equipment should be brought up to date.

We acknowledge the restrictions on railroad initiative through regulation of appliances and on railroad resources through rate regulation. We are also aware of the progress that has been made in speed, quality of service, and increase in the radius of use of material equipment. Nevertheless, it can not be fairly said that railroad advance in applied science is abreast of that in other industrial fields. For example, the improvements in Germany with streamline Diesel and electric trains of very light tonnage maintaining schedules of 96 miles per hour to offset motor transport have no counterpart here. The committee has not found it practicable to make exhaustive studies on this subject but offers the suggestion that the Interstate Commerce Commission authorize, and the railroads set up, one or more central research and engineering organizations to which all railroads in certain groups shall contribute—their products to be available to all contributors.

(e) In view of what could be done by better management, the general outlook seems far from hopeless.

Generally speaking, it must be recalled that, in railroads—almost alone among sister industries—rates remain at boom-time levels. Adjustment to new economic horizons lags. It is hard for us to believe that whole-hearted cooperation and vigorous application of contemporary principles of industrial management and control, within the various railroad companies themselves, along lines just discussed, would not do more than can Government or any other outside force to rehabilitate this most important of American industries.

In depths of depression, as at peaks of prosperity, fundamental values become distorted by the fog of gloom, on the one hand, and the rosy haze of hope on the other. These opportunities for aggressive policy and management, coupled with at least some of our suggestions in aid of the transportation situation as a whole, seem to us to indicate a distinctly hopeful (rather than a despairing) project for the railroads, and we think that both regulating agencies and others having interest and influence in the railroads should act promptly to overcome what seems to us a degree of inertia in this regard.

IMPROVEMENT IN I. C. C. MECHANISM

IV. Regulatory jurisdiction should be extended to the whole national transportation system but applied only to the extent necessary for public protection. The existing regulatory mechanism of the Interstate Commerce Commission is inadequate and should be improved by reorganization without expansion or increased expense.

The work of the Interstate Commerce Commission is a contribution to the advancing science of political economy. One has only to read its most recent report to realize the sympathy and intelligence with which it addresses the problems confronting it. It has pioneered a complex subject and, if it has recently operated on principles which this committee regards as in part obsolete, it is important to remember that they are statutory principles. We think that if critics would give more attention to the legal limitations upon the commission and its own repeated recommendations thereon, they would find less ground for complaint.

The studies of the committee clearly indicate the advisability of extension of regulatory jurisdiction to the whole transportation system. The committee feels that a judicial type of organization, such as the commission now has, is inappropriate to its present work and wholly inadequate to a wider jurisdiction. In extending its powers, it is not necessary to expand its personnel and expenditures. What is needed is to reorganize its functions, divide its work, and give it a form and method more appropriate to the tasks before it.

At present they include rate making, and that is at least a quasi legislative function; decisions in conflicting causes, and that is distinctly judicial; and supervision of administration, and that is certainly executive. From another angle of analysis we find it attempting to plan, and that is a staff duty, and to carry plans into execution, and that is purely operative. For all these inconsistent purposes it must finally act in a body on many questions, with no sufficient latitude for delegation, and that is utterly inconsistent with any modern theory of operation except for legislative and judicial action of the very highest order.

The data before us indicate that (whatever may be the limits to which actual regulation or administration is extended) the necessity for planning and for comprehensive information on the whole transport problem is absolute. A cogent railroad argument is to the effect that the Government has regulated the initiative out of the railroads and that by reason thereof they are in their present plight. While there is a tendency to overemphasize this, three facts remain: First, that the Government, principally through the agency of the commission, has for many years assumed to dominate railroad administration; second, that railroad policy and management are not abreast of sister industries; and, third, that some railroads are in a perilous condition. Nobody can assume authority without accepting responsibility. The existing railroad condition speaks for itself to say that regulation by the commission has left something to be desired.

The lack of incentive or authority in the commission to plan and to act affirmatively is evident throughout its most recent report. It hopes that "efforts have been or will be made to bring the rival transportation agencies into some measure of agreement." It thinks that "no rival transportation agency should be given unfair advantage," but complains that "there is no adequate information * * * nor do we know of any comprehensive and definite plan for a cure * * *." It believes that the public "safety and convenience" should be protected by regulation of automotive agencies, but asks for "a thorough investigation under authority of Congress." It says of regulation of port-to-port rates, "We have not investigated this subject, but are convinced that it merits serious consideration by Congress."

Speaking of restrictions on railroad ownership of water-carrier lines. "If the railroads wish this prohibition removed, they should so request the Congress without further delay. Until the reasons for such a change have been fully presented we have no opinion to express upon it." On the question of stifling of railroad initiative, there is the suggestion that the railroads "ask the appropriate authorities for definite relief." Without unduly extending these quotations, it is fair to say that the whole report is eloquent of a somewhat passive attitude toward acknowledged evils and also of grave difficulties that have arisen from drastic regulation verging on administration by an authority which sits and hears but has only a limited scope in which to inquire and plan and act.

If, as we think it should, the regulating body should pass on railroad corporate reorganization, there would be a new and expert function for which we think the commission is not now equipped or organized. There should be a separate department and an appropriate expert personnel for this work. This is an emergency matter.

The organization should be re-formed without expansion to act along wider and more affirmative lines with less attempt to run the business of transportation and with more concentration on protection of the public, and maintenance of a healthy national transport system. It should have inquisitorial powers and duties to keep constantly abreast of changing developments and should be required to report annually to Congress on the state of the Nation's whole transport system, with its recommendations for betterment.

Its activities should be reorganized with appropriate separate departments, with a chief at the head of each, for its legislative, executive, and judicial functions, and for each major special function such as control of corporate reorganization. It should have also a planning department with a research staff and such other departments as experience indicates. Except in the exercise of its more important legislative and judicial functions, departmental hearings and decisions should be sufficient and action as a body should not be required. While all heads of departments should sit in council on basic policies and important problems, the body should have a vote only on the most important legislative and judicial decisions. Either one man, or at least an executive committee of three, should have exclusive responsibility and authority in all executive functions, and final decision in all but the more important legislative and judicial functions of the separate departments.

This form of organization and method divides, decentralizes, and so speeds work, permits specialization, yet assembles special views on general policies. It retains the advantage of the committee form for counsel but secures the advantage of a compact responsible group for action. All these attributes will be needed in the tasks inevitably confronting future transport regulation and only a few of them are available now.

RECOMMENDATION FOR EMERGENCY

V. Emergency recommendations.

(1) Corporate reorganization can and should be facilitated by revision of the bankruptcy procedure.

Present railroad distress is sufficiently shown in the current report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that 122 Class I railways failed to earn fixed charges in the first three quarters of 1932. The financial structures of many railroads carry too much inflexible charges and too few liquid surplus assets to survive protracted nonearning periods. This condition can not be cured by increasing rates to salvage old mistakes or by lending Government money to preserve them. They require realistic reorganization in accordance with the facts. Some railroads can hope to survive only on drastic reorganization and scaling down on fixed obligations.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was created to tide over an emergency, in the hope of some recovery, but this use of Federal credit encountered a link between the emergent and the more permanent problems. The fixed charges of some roads are heavier than any fair prospect of restored traffic will bear. The corporation can not pour public treasure into situations where, instead of temporarily supporting operations and loaning to maintain prudent interest payments, there is a wasteful delta of outflowing streams of interest on unsupportable capital structures. That would postpone inevitable readjustments at public loss to no good purpose. There is need to reform these topheavy structures to make them available for emergency aid before it is too late and the present legal mechanism is too slow and cumbersome to serve.

We recommend revision of bankruptcy procedure to permit prompt and realistic reorganization of overcapitalized corporate structures without destructive receiverships and judicial sales on depressed markets, to the end that the railroads' justifiable borrowing requirements may be met with safety to the lender under adequate protection.

(2) The recapture clause should be repealed retroactively.

The so-called recapture clause of section 15–a of the transportation act is based on an economic misconception and has proved to be an element of uncertainty in railroad financing. We join the recommendation of the commission for its repeal "both for the future and retroactively."

(3) The statutory rule of rate making should be revised.

Reasons and suggestions for amending the present rate-making rule are discussed beginning at page 21. As was there stated, rate making can not be made to preserve unsound capital structures or to "attract capital" regardless of what the service is worth, but if the rule is put on a common sense and forthright basis we can approach the railroads' financial problem with more intelligence. While this is a permanent as well as an emergency reform, we think it is important to a prompt and sound solution of the railroad problem. We understand that both the Interstate Commerce Commission and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce recommend a change and regard its necessity as emergent. Indeed, the committee found no opposition to change in any of the evidence or representations before it.

(4) "Adequate security" does not necessarily mean "marketable collateral."

The reconstruction finance act requires "adequate security" for railroad loans. It should do so and we recommend no change in the law. As a matter of interpretation, however, if, upon reorganization of overcapitalized structures or on sound existing structures, a particular loan is sufficiently protected by priority of lien and reasonable prospects of earnings available to its priority of payment, we do not regard marketable collateral as a determining factor. In fact, we believe that, with prompt improvement of capital structures where necessary, private capital will be available for necessitous railroad loans.

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT OF ALFRED E. SMITH

While I am in substantial agreement with the greater part of the committee's report, this supplementary memorandum states my conclusions in my own language, placing the emphasis where I think it belongs.

EMERGENCY ACTION

As to emergency action, I recommend the following:

1. The recapture clause of the transportation act should be repealed retroactively.

2. A debtor relief act, with a special provision governing railroads, which will have for its object scaling down debts and composing differences without bankruptcy receiverships, should be passed, but its operation should be for the period of the emergency only, which for the purposes of this act should be declared to end on January 1, 1935.

After most careful consideration, I can not recommend as an emergency measure that there is immediate need of action by Congress to make a new statutory rule of rate making, nor that the present powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to railroads should be extended or materially changed. Specifically, I believe no useful purpose will be served at this time by an extension of the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with regard to railroads so that they can make additional loans without full collateral, upon the assumption that railroad rates will be adjusted in such a way that these loans are bound to be repaid.

Coming now to the basic troubles which afflict the railroads, I have considered carefully the diagnosis offered by numerous groups and individuals and the corresponding cures. No purpose would be served by extended analysis and comment because this subject is fully covered in the report of the staff. My conclusions are stated herein in summary form.

THE RAILROAD'S COMPETITORS

As to the subject of competition by air, water, pipe, and highway lines, I believe that the effect of competition of these lines upon the railroads has been exaggerated. Drastic regulation of competing services is not the solution of the railroad problem, and such regulation should be established only in the general public interest. Regulation is expensive. It is bureaucratic. Once established it expands and it paralyzes private initiative without offering constructive leadership. I believe that the air lines should be left as they are at the present, with no more regulation than is now provided for. This is a new field, and the less private initiative is interfered with, the better it will be in the long run. The railroads had their day of freedom from restriction coupled with enormous Government subsidies. That day is over and individual initiative in blazing trails and laying ties for railroad lines across the Rocky Mountains and the Sierras is no longer needed. Air lines are an infant industry and are entitled for the present to some Government help without undue regulation.

The pipe lines are built. They serve a very limited purpose. They present no serious menace to the railroads. I see no advantage in extending regulatory control over them.

As to water transportation, with particular reference to inland waterways, I believe that Government subsidies in this field should be curtailed, not primarily because they result in unfair competition with the railroads, but because these subsidies have not proved effective. Certainly the New York State Barge Canal can not be said to compete with the existing railroads, because in spite of construction and maintenance by the State and free tolls, the barge canal carries so little freight that it presents no problem to the railroads. The New York State Barge Canal is an heirloom. Sentiment rather than common sense makes us keep it up. I am opposed at this time to the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway because it would be a waste of public funds. Present rail facilities are more than adequate to provide for everything which the proposed canal can accomplish.

The cost of moving grain would not be lowered by this canal sufficiently to justify the enormous expenditures which it would involve; keeping in mind also that this waterway would be open only for a part of the year and that the railroads would have to be used anyway the rest of the year. I believe that a special investigation should be conducted into the Inland Waterways Corporation to discover exactly what it costs the War Department to operate this corporation and whether or not further expenditures for this purpose should cease.

As to competition by motor trucks and busses, the testimony given before us does not indicate to me that the competition is at this time as serious a menace to the railroads as they claim it to be. Interstate trucks and busses as yet carry only a comparatively small part of all freight and passengers. On the other hand, it is unquestionable that this form of transportation will soon be used more and more, because it is economical and efficient. In a number of cases busses and trucks have actually relieved the railroads of burdens on short hauls and have enabled them to cut down train service where these could not possibly pay.

Extravagant claims are made as to the penalizing of railroad as contrasted with highway transportation by taxes and by numerous regulations affecting service and labor. Trucks and busses are already substantially taxed through license, gasoline, and oil taxes, and these are being steadily raised so that within a short time, in the course of normal events, the users of highways for commercial purposes will be paying their full share of the cost of construction, reconstruction, and maintenance. The tendency in every State is to make them pay their way, and the Federal Government is already taxing them for gasoline. In fact, at the present time in many States of the Union, gasoline and license taxes are being diverted from highway maintenance and construction to other fields of government expenditure.

While there is much to be said for regulation of all common carriers on highways by the Interstate Commerce Commission or some other Federal agency, and by the appropriate State regulatory agencies, it should be noted, however, that such regulation can not reach the individual farmer, merchant, and owner who is not a contract or common carrier. I believe that such regulation should, for the present, be for the purpose of insuring responsibility, and fixing the physical standards for vehicles and for similar purposes, rather than for the fixing of rates. This is practically what the railroad and bus representatives themselves have recently agreed on. The plan for a Federal license tax with a return to the several States of their respective shares, suggested by various witnesses, seems to me to be impractical, undesirable, and at present unjustified. I believe that the railroads should go into the bus and truck business on a larger scale, and that they should be encouraged to do so by appropriate legislation.

GRADE CROSSINGS

As to elimination of crossings at grade of highways and railroads, I believe that the railroads' share of the cost should be materially reduced. In many States the railroads' share is as high as 50 per cent. This is unduly burdensome and unfair to the railroads, and it has naturally resulted in bitter opposition to elimination orders and the general slowing up of the crossing. elimination program. This reduction can not, however, be accomplished by Federal legislation or fiat. It must be brought about by persuasion in the several States.

I can not subscribe to the recommendation made to the committee that Congress should fix a maximum rate of taxation on railroad property beyond which any State and local levies would be invalid.

VALUATION

Coming now to valuation, I have not been able to give this subject sufficient study even to attempt a solution. The questions involved are exceedingly intricate. Members of Congress and experts outside of the Government have been studying them for years without coming to a satisfactory conclusion. From a superficial study, I am not entirely satisfied that the prudent investment theory is unworkable.

The reproduction-cost theory is obviously obsolete and must be discarded. I can not subscribe to the idea of basing railroad rates on ability to attract new capital, on the present cost theory or on the theory of the natural rule of survival. I doubt whether the courts would sustain or the public tolerate the survival theory. The present cost theory would tend to put the seal of approval on existing chaotic and wasteful railroad organization. The theory of fixing rates to attract new capital begs the whole question. It starts with a conclusion and adjusts all the facts to meet it. Moreover, this theory would defeat itself because the public would not be able to pay the high rates which it would bring about. In the end there would be less traffic and less revenue than before. Moreover, even if the public were able to pay the bill, I believe that the adoption of this theory would perpetuate bad management, write up values of many railroad securities beyond their actual worth, and take away the incentive to consolidation and good management.

A new principle of valuation has recently been proposed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives which seems to me to have considerable merit, but which is in such general language that it is difficult to see how it can be made the basis for the scientific determination of rates. It seems to me, however, that this is a subject which Congress should decide.

Whatever principle is adopted, I am satisfied that the general public will not tolerate writing up values or increasing rates merely upon the theory that a great many railroad securities are held by savings banks, trustees, and insurance companies as security for widows, orphans, and other beneficiaries of trust. It must be recognized that many railroad bonds are worth less than par in the light of conditions entirely separate from the depression, and that railroad stocks have declined even more in value. These assumptions are based upon any common-sense theory of true valuation, whatever it may be. Similarly, I do not believe the public will approve the proposal that railroad rates should be high enough to retire a substantial part of outstanding bonds, because this will be regarded as just another way of attempting to give present bonds artificial values.

SMITH FAVORS ONE-MAN BOARD

Taking up now the general question of Federal regulation, we are all agreed that effective regulation is an indispensable feature of the solution of the transportation problem. I find, however, little in recent history to justify the continuance of the Interstate Commerce Commission as now organized. This implies no criticism of its members. They have attempted to function under an obsolete and unworkable law, and in the face of conditions which call for intelligent planning and leadership as distinguished from endless debate on details. Everyone admits that more and more of the work of the board must be delegated anyway, and if this is so, the question arises as to why a board is needed at all. I believe that too much emphasis has been placed on the judicial functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, especially on valuation and rate making, and too little on planning and administration. The complete break-down of the present valuation formula has left the commission in a condition which would be laughable if it were not so serious. The scrapping of the present formula opens up some very interesting questions for taxpayers. What, for instance, becomes of the tons of statistics and other data collected on the basis of the old formula? What of the pay roll army of Federal commissioners, counsel, experts, and clerks? What of the wasted time of local officials, railroad representatives, farmers, business men, and commercial organizations? Suppose that just a little common sense had been substituted for all this scientific hash, this maze of regulation and red tape. I favor the abolition of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the creation in its place of a new department of transportation headed by one man, or a one-man bureau head in the Department of Commerce, determining policies with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce. What we need is a new transportation system, not endless hearings on a system that does not work.

I am convinced that the fundamental problem of the railroads is that of nation-wide consolidation and reorganization to reduce costs and rates and to write off losses. The era of railroad pioneering and competition is over. The roads must reduce overhead and operating expenses. They must scrap unnecessary, competing, and weak lines. They must get rid of obsolete equipment. They must cut out unnecessary services. They must use trucks and busses, eventually air transportation and, if necessary, waterways and pipe lines as a supplement or substitute for rails wherever these new forms of transportation are more economical. The establishment of a limited number of strong regional railway systems would be a start in the right direction. Even this will leave a certain amount of wasteful and unnecessary competition.

Whatever may be the basis of valuation and rate making, there must be a scaling down of many railroad securities. I believe that the banks, trust companies, insurance companies, and other holders of railroad securities must be realistic about this phase of the problem. The public will not stand for making them a preferred class of investors, who must get a hundred cents on a dollar, irrespective of the true value and condition of the business they have invested in, when values in all other fields are being readjusted and cut down.

The question for the railroad executives, directors, and security holders to decide is whether the steps taken in this direction should be compulsory or voluntary. To date voluntary regional consolidation under the auspices of the Interstate Commerce Commission has made little progress. The question has been raised whether compulsory consolidation is constitutional. As distinguished an authority as the late Senator Cummins thought it was, but there is no decision of the United States Supreme Court squarely on this subject. There is much to be said for the theory that we are moving inevitably toward one national railroad system. Upon this theory the major railroad systems might well give serious consideration to the appointment of some sort of an impartial chairman, arbitrator, or director general to coordinate their present activities and to prepare a plan of permanent consolidation.

If the railroads show no willingness to reorganize, reorganization can surely be brought about by some form of condemnation or eminent domain. I believe that the railroads will be unsuccessful in attempts to maintain their present physical, operating, and financial structure at the expense of the general public by penalizing competitors and raising competing transportation costs, inflating securities, raising rates, limiting taxation by States and municipalities through Federal legislation, borrowing Government money without adequate security, and other like devices. Similarly, attempts to bring about economy largely at the expense of railroad labor will prove unsuccessful unless this is part of a logical general reorganization in the interest of the public. Undoubtedly many wasteful and unjustifiable regulations have been made governing railroad wages, hours, and conditions of labor, and others which, however admirable in themselves, the country simply can not afford to-day; but the railroads can not expect public support in changing these regulations merely as a means of retaining and perpetuating other conditions which are equally wasteful. They can not expect to make labor the only scapegoat.

Those who are responsible for present railroad management need not complain of radical or drastic governmental action in the near future if they are unwilling even to attempt to meet their problems in a bold, forthright way through their own initiative and cooperation. They have an unrivaled opportunity to do themselves and the country a great service. They should have the guidance and help of the National and State Governments in this effort.

APPENDIX 1

LETTER OF INVITATION

HON. CALVIN COOLIDGE.
HON. ALFRED E. SMITH.
MR. BERNARD M. BARUCH.
MR. CLARK HOWELL.
MR. ALEXANDER LEGGE.

GENTLEMEN: The present financial position of the railroads of the United States is a matter of grave concern. Collectively the greatest and most important industry of our country, the railroads have operated in this year at staggering deficits. Only wise and timely Federal aid has averted the financial breakdown of important systems.

This situation touches every citizen. It affects directly the security of wage and employment of the 1,500,000 railway workers. It affects equally the many and important industries supplying railway equipment and supplies. It touches the financial problem of local, State and National Government, to the support of which the railroads contribute over $300,000,000 annually in taxes. It has given rise to a severe decline in the value of the $19,500,000,000 of railroad obligations and shares and has occasioned concern to institutions which hold such obligations among their assets, representing in part the savings of that thrifty portion of our population which is to be found among the policyholders of insurance companies and the depositors in savings banks. The relief that the present emergency has made it necessary to grant to the railroads is a drain on the Federal Treasury, and any ultimate loss will constitute a burden on every taxpayer.

The present deplorable position of the railroads is not due wholly to the stagnation of traffic resulting from the long-continued depression. Many of the present ills are due to governmental, financial, labor, and management policies, some wrong in conception, some wrong in application, and others rendered obsolete by radically changed conditions. As a result, the railroads have not been in a position to adjust themselves, as well as have other industries, to present conditions.

There are many disagreements as to causes, many disagreements as to remedies, but unanimous agreement as to the urgent necessity of some thoroughgoing solution of the problem. No solution, however, will be effective unless the problem of the railroads is considered as an integral part of the entire transportation problem of the United States, whether by rail, highway, waterway, pipeline, or air.

Every industry in the country is entitled to fair treatment—the railroads no less than the others. The public interest must certainly be protected, but regulation should not place the railroads at a hopeless disadvantage with competing agencies and destroy flexibility of operation and management initiative. The railroad workers are entitled to a fair wage and the greatest possible security of employment. The holders of railroad securities are entitled to a fair and stable return on the true value of their investment.

But more important than the interests of any one group, the people of the United States are entitled to the most effective and economical form of transportation to meet their various needs, whether by land, water, or air. Each form of transportation should be unhampered to provide effectively at a reasonable cost and at a fair profit the service for which it is best fitted. No form of transportation should be favored either at the expense of another agency or at the ultimate expense of the people of the United States.

We, the undersigned organizations, representing many of the interests concerned, believe that there is no more important present task than a thorough and satisfactory solution of the railroad problem, as an integral but the most urgent part of the entire transportation problem. We beg that you examine all phases of the problem and recommend a solution which, with due regard for the public interest, will insure an opportunity for the railroads of this country to operate on a business basis, to the end that there may be a stabilization in employment of wage earners and in the values of investments made in behalf of insurance-policy holders and savings-bank depositors and a general enhancement of the prosperity of the country which to so great a degree depends upon the prosperity of the railroads and of the many lines of business which in turn depend upon them.

DEPRECIATION OF FOREIGN CURRENCY

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter appearing in the Bangor Daily News of February 11, 1933, pertaining to the question of equalization of depreciated foreign currencies addressed to the American Newspaper Publishers Association, under the signature of Fred D. Jordan, publisher of the aforesaid paper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

AMERICAN NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS ASSOCIATION,
370 Lexington Avenue, New York City.

(Attention Mr. L. B. Palmer, general manager.)

GENTLEMEN: Ordinarily we have great respect for your judgment and opinion on the great public questions, but we are shocked by the narrowness and partisanship displayed in Bulletin No. 146, of January 27, 1933.

Under a heading "Newsprint" you state: "A. N. P. A. Opposes Compensatory Duty Measure." Your supporting arguments are only two in number. First, that the enactment of the proposed legislation "will result in a duty on newsprint paper and its component parts, thereby largely increasing the cost of newspaper production." Second, that a duty would be levied on wood pulp and that a large number (550, you state) of converting or pulp-buying paper mills would be put out of business.

We respectfully submit that this question of equalization of depreciated foreign currencies with our gold-standard basis is one of national importance—far too big to be decided upon by just the two issues you cite, even though one subscribed to your conclusions on them.

The equalization fee or tax provided for in the proposed legislation applies on all imports, with a very few minor exceptions, from all countries of depreciated currencies. The amount of the tax in the case of each importation is determined by the degree of depreciation of the currency of the country of origin. The application of this currency correction tax will merely raise the prices of these foreign goods up to a point where American industry can compete with them in our own domestic markets. The net effect will merely be a restoration of the competitive conditions which existed in our American market prior to the abandonment of the gold standard by practically all of the other nations of the world, beginning with England on September 21, 1931.

We were all geared up in this country to hold our own against foreign competition. Those of our products which required special protection enjoyed it under the provisions of our tariff act. But this was all changed by the general abandonment of the gold standard abroad. To-day the producers in countries of depreciated currency have a distinct advantage in a gold-standard market. To-day ours is the only gold-standard market of any consequence where they can wield their new weapon of competition. Canada, France, and Germany took prompt action to protect themselves and their industries. We have adopted no means of defense. We are wide open to the invasion—defenseless. Tariff protection has been practically wiped out by depreciated currency advantages to foreign producers. These same factors constitute an actual premium on foreign competition with articles on our free list.

The argument has been advanced that, as the currency of a country depreciates, internal prices increase and tend to offset it. That may be fine in theory, but it has not worked out in this case. We have been in this situation now for over 16 months and the condition is going from bad to worse. On the other hand if one grants that this argument is sound, what conceivable objection can there be to a currency equalization levy? As the benefit to a currency depreciation country declines, it will be to its advantage to work back to the gold standard. As it works back, the levy on its goods imported into this country will reduce in proportion, and when its currency gets back to within 5 per cent of the gold standard there would be no levy at all under the proposed legislation. Why make our own American people suffer during the foreign readjustment period? Why be so solicitous of the welfare of foreign peoples, when our own people here at home most certainly are in dire distress?

It is a fact that newsprint paper and its component elements have been on the free list for more than 20 years. They still are, and the contemplated legislation does not propose any specific duty on them. If it becomes a law, they will still be on the free list. True, the imports from countries of depreciated currency would have to bear an equalization charge in common with all other imports from depreciated currency countries during the period of readjustment, but what of it? You apparently fear an increase in the price of newsprint. From what level? All values in this world are relative. We publishers would only be back in the same relative position in American industry that we were in prior to September, 1931. We all know that our situation was better then than it is now. We can not hope to prosper as an industry, or individually in our respective communities, except in proportion to the degree of prosperity of those on whom we depend for our support. Let's not be a party to killing the goose that lays the golden egg!

Another important point from our own selfish standpoint: Do we want to place ourselves in the hands of European producers for our ultimate sole source of newsprint paper? Let's not fool ourselves. We have done nothing to foster the newsprint-paper industry in this country in the past. A major portion of it has migrated to Canada. If the present unbalanced currency situation continues, it will be completely wiped out in this country, and the migration will be from Canada to Europe. The Canadian producers can not compete in this market with $30 Finnish newsprint paper any more than our American mills can. Let's think straight and adopt the good old American policy of "live and let live."

The same situation exists and the same arguments apply with respect to the pulp situation. You devote more space to pulp than you do to newsprint paper. You get yourself tangled up in an attack on the West Coast pulp producers, and much of your argument savors of propaganda disseminated by a certain group of converter mills through the "Temporary Committee Opposing Tariff on Wood Pulp," which is confusing the issue of currency-depreciation correction on all imports from countries off the gold standard with a specific tariff on wood pulp which is nowhere even mentioned, except by them, in connection with the legislation under consideration. We know something of this situation, as Maine is one of the oldest pulp and paper producing States in the Union. And our industry here prospered until the currency-depreciation game got started abroad. Main produces more wood pulp than any other State in the Union. Our pulp industry is in favor of the proposed currency equalization and so are all our pulpwood producers, our timberland owners, our farmers, our fishing industry, our canners, and our other diversified industries. They should know better where the seat of their trouble lies than some few pulp buyers with a selfish interest—though a fallacious one at that—to foster. Our Maine people want relief from increasing imports and depressing price influence of goods from depreciated-currency countries. They should get it.

We doubt very much if this group which is opposing this legislation is really representative of even the converter paper mills. We know that some of the largest and most prominent converter mills take a sane view of the situation and are in favor of the proposed legislation. We know that the American Paper and Pulp Association has made a careful study of the situation, resulting in its industry from depreciated-currency competition, and has publicly indorsed the corrective legislation. In this connection, it is significant to note that its president is the head of a large and well-known company operating a big group of converter type paper mills and that several members of its executive committee also represent converter mills. Is it not a fact that this opposition to which you subscribe is in reality principally a group of mills making cardboard, in which the content of wood pulp is relatively small?

Your statement that the principal proponents of this legislation is a group of "about 200 manufacturers operating pulp mills" is not borne out by the evidence at hand. The calendar of the hearings just recently held before the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee shows the following witnesses from agriculture, labor, and industry who urged passage of this legislation:

1. John E. Dowsing, pottery industry (United States Potters' Association).
2. Brice T. Disque, anthracite coal (Anthracite Institute).
3. Mathew Woll, labor (American Federation of Labor).
4. Michael Flynn, labor (American Wage Earners' Conference).
5. A. M. Loomis, dairymen (National Dairy Institute); fish oil (American Fish Oils Association); cottonseed (Producers of Cottonseed); butter (American Association of Creamery Butter Manufacturers).
6. Chester Gray, agriculture (American Farm Bureau Federation).
7. Charles A. Turner, lace curtains (American Association of Lace Curtain Manufacturers).
8. John Adams, labor (Amalgamated Lace Operatives of America).
9. N. G. Robertson, jr., lace (Scranton Lace Co.).
10. Henry S. Bromley, lace (North American Lace Co.).
11. James A. Farrell, general business (United States Chamber of Commerce), steel industry.
12. William L. Wilson, pulp and paper (Champion Fibre Co.); Florida business (Florida State Chamber of Commerce).
13. T. W. Kennedy, iron and steel (Mystic Iron Works).
14. Stuart B. Copeland, pulp and paper industry (Eastern Manufacturing Co.), American Paper & Pulp Association.
15. W. J. Gillian, pulpwood producers.
16. John R. Joyce, textiles (Philadelphia Textile Manufacturers Association).
17. John Higgins, labor (lever section, Lace Operatives of America).
18. R. H. Goebbel, rubber industry (the Rubber Manufacturers Association (Inc.)).
19. Edward H. Cooley, fishing industry (Massachusetts Fisheries Association).
20. J. F. Callbreath, mining (American Mining Congress).
21. J. Carson Adkerson, manganese industry (Manganese Producers Association).
22. James A. Emery, manufacturers (National Manufacturers Association).
23. John A. Simpson, farmers (National Farmers Union).
24. John E. Walker, plastics industry (Pyroxylin Plastic Manufacturers Association).
25. Charles Green, lumber (Southern Pine Association).
26. Julian W. Curtis, sporting goods (A. G. Spaulding & Bro.).
27. Warren N. Watson, chemical industry (Manufacturing Chemists Association).
28. J. J. Underwood, fishing (Association of Pacific Fisheries; Northwest Salmon Canners Association).

Does your statement "hold water" when the above facts show that agriculture, labor, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and the National Association of Manufacturers, besides 15 specific principal industries (other than pulp and paper) are asking for this legislation?

The opposition from industry consisted only of the importers—whose position is so obvious as to require no comment—a certain element of the paper industry (mostly cardboard manufacturers) which opposes a duty on wood pulp and our own association. Witness the following from the Ways and Means Committee calendar.

1. James W. Bevans, importers (National Council of American Importers and Traders).
2. Stevenson Masson, importer and customshouse broker.
3. Elisha Hauson, publishers (American Newspaper Publishers' Association).
4. H. P. Christian, paper industry (temporary committee opposing tariff on wood pulp).

Frankly, the only interest any newspaper publisher can have in opposing legislation to correct the depreciated-currency debacle, is a selfish desire to buy its newsprint paper at a lower price. But what will that profit the newspaper publisher? In the process he is contributing to the ruin of the American industries, agriculture, and business on which he is absolutely dependent for his profitable income—his advertising.

The same fallacy exists with respect to the converting paper mill which wants to buy its pulp cheaper. Paper prices are reduced to the new level and he is no better off. He can not hope to eliminate paper competition from the pulp-producing mills. If the situation goes much further their pulp losses will break them, but they will only reorganize, buy foreign pulp and turn into converter mills, and on a recognized basis would be worse competition than some of the present converter mills now believe them. The only accomplishment would be destruction of industry and loss of employment of labor, besides wiping out tremendous values in timberlands and mill properties.

After taking a definite position in any public question, it requires courage and bigness to admit that one's position is wrong, but everyone admires these qualities. By the stand we have taken in this matter we have labeled ourselves "purely selfish," but worse than that we are shortsighted and are headed for the same calamitous end which we are helping to bring upon others—our friends and those upon whom our own prosperity depends.

It is not too late to make amends. Let's unwind, let's throw in the reverse gear and take the proper stand. Agriculture, labor, business, and industry—our customers and the foundation of our business—need our help to get proper legislation to correct the depreciated-currency situation and give them just the same break they used to have in our American markets. Newspaper publishers, we have the courage and bigness to do it. Let's go!

Sincerely yours,

AN APPEAL FOR WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I ask leave to have published in the RECORD an address by Senator ARTHUR R. ROBINSON, of Indiana, made over a National Broadcasting Co. network on Saturday night, February 11, 1933, during a program sponsored by the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

The roll of drums and the steady beat of marching feet marked the departure 16 years ago of more than 4,000,000 lads who were called to the colors. These lads were the flower of the youth in the land. They had nothing to do with the causes that brought on the conflict. "Theirs not to reason why," theirs only to make the sacrifices, the supreme sacrifice in some cases, that the land of their fathers might not be destroyed by the enemy without.

With light hearts and high purpose these young men entered the conflict. The Nation was in peril. Their duty was to save it. Their future or the ultimate cost of the war was not considered. With the cheers and plaudits of their compatriots ringing in their ears they marched away and plunged themselves into the vortex of danger and catastrophe.

Before leaving their homes a grateful citizenry assured them that their jobs would be waiting for them on their return—that a grateful Republic would "take care of them" for saving civilization.

While these lads were at the front or in the States in training camps waiting the call to go "over there," organized wealth and big business were having a golden picnic at home. While the youth of the land sacrificed, Wall Street was having a glorious time of it—4,000 miles behind the fighting front. Organized wealth kept the home fires burning—for itself.

Profiteers rolled in wealth as millionaires were made literally overnight. Munition manufacturers, Hog Island, and cantonment contractors made war pay and pay with a bang.

The real heroes of the war, the "cannon fodder," received only a small fraction of the cost of the war. This conflict cost America some $36,000,000,000, only 4½ billions of which went to the troops—the men who now are veterans of the war. Practically all of the rest went to the great business interests who were working night and day to make war pay.

It is now nearly 16 years since the lads marched away. We seem to have forgotten in a measure the quality of their sacrifice. These lads no longer hear stirring songs and martial music to inspire them to sacrifice. What do they find? They find that big business, organized wealth, and the Wall Street crowd—those who made war pay—are engaged now in a campaign of villification against the men who wore the uniform—against the men whose sacrifices made swollen fortunes possible.

Why this campaign of defamation against the veteran? Why this hue and cry against giving the veterans their just deserts? The reason big business is making such terrible onslaughts on the veteran from coast to coast is that they—big business and the war profiteers—might be relieved of a few paltry dollars in income tax. They do not know the meaning of sportsmanship. Big business and these villifiers not only are unwilling to pay for their share of the war but, to evade this just obligation, would take pennies from disabled veterans, the widows, and the orphans.

Big business bows down and worships the god, money. To add a few sordid dollars to their unwieldy store, big business would deliberately rob the disabled defenders of the American Republic. Through no fault of their own thousands of veterans are unemployed. In this the fourth winter of the depression we find many veterans who, with their families, would become charges on local charity and local taxing units but for small compensation accruing to them from the Government.

In the midst of this adversity big business continues its drive against the veteran with unrelenting fury. But what does big business care for the economic adversities of the man farthest down? Big business would relieve itself of income taxes and transfer its obligations onto the backs of the farmers and small property owners, already taxed to death. In short, we find that organized wealth is in the saddle and riding hard.

But what is the cost of glory, the price of glory to the veterans? More than 60 veterans' hospitals have made their appearance in the last 12 years. In these 60 institutions upward of 50,000 beds, all occupied and with long waiting lists, have hospitalized more than a million cases, practically one-fourth of those who answered the call to arms in 1917. This hospitalization on a large scale has been necessary because the engines of war and of mass destruction wreak human havoc with such tremendous force.

Experts tell us that the peak of disability will not be reached until 1945. During the next 12 years, then, we shall see other thousands and perhaps hundreds of thousands of our men who think they are sound and healthy enter the grim portals of the hospital. This is the price we pay for war to-day.

All of the casualties did not come from the front-line trenches. Many casualties came from those in training camps who suffered as the result of changed environment, disease epidemics, weakened lungs, different modes of life, and the strict discipline of Army regulations to which young men just out of comfortable homes were unaccustomed.

But the cost of the war mounts—we are impressed with the rising price of glory as we look in retrospect at those fateful years. We left more than 60,000 dead overseas and countless thousands others have been laid to rest in cemeteries on this side.

With the booming voices of the "Big Berthas" stilled and the ceaseless fire of destruction in no-man's land extinguished the war was closed. After the fanfare of homecoming and cheers of the welcoming throngs these heroes of '17 were demobilized into the business, commercial, professional, and industrial fields from which they came. Were their jobs awaiting them? They were not. Many of these lads were disabled and maimed. Some one must pay for this wreck and havoc. This is a national responsibility. With this responsibility comes the question of payment of the adjusted-service certificates.

There should be immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates. I have supported such action in the Senate. I favor this legislation because I believe it is right. If it is right to be thoroughly grateful to those who have defended the country in its time of peril, now that they are needy and ragged and are asking for clothing and food from the Government, then the payment should be made.

I do not like the term "bonus" with reference to this legislation. It is not a bonus; it is a debt due the men who served in the last war, a debt which has been acknowledged to be a debt by the Government itself. Therefore, I think it is wrong to refer continually to the legislation as a "bonus," as if the soldiers of America were seeking to hold up the Treasury of the United States for something that is not right or something they expected in addition to that to which they are justly entitled.

In favoring this legislation I am anxious that our children who come after us may understand definitely that the country is grateful to those who are willing to defend it with their lives.

What a contrast between the two groups of soldiers who marched down Pennsylvania Avenue in 1917 and in the summer of last year. With erect step tuned to martial music these young men swung down the Avenue to begin their first journey in the series of sacrifices of time, labor, and in many cases their lives. Last summer some of these same young men came back; they came back after 15 years. Again they marched down the historic Avenue. But in this march they were not clad in the trim uniform of '17. Many of them were ragged and wore their old war uniforms. Many had insufficient clothing and many were hungry. This ragged band of patriots represented thousands of ex-soldiers, their buddies with whom they had served, and to whom the United States Government owes not only a debt of gratitude but a debt in cold, hard cash. Gratitude pays no rent, buys no food or clothing.

As soon as the war was over the railroads came to Congress and asked for a bonus—a readjustment of earnings to make them square with the world. Congress paid it immediately. They did not have to wait till 1945. The civilian employees were given a readjustment in earnings—in cash on the spot. They did not have to wait till 1945.

Contractors who had built cantonments all over the land at profit and in perfect safety came and in effect said, "The boys ended the war too soon. They did the job too well. Here we are with contracts on our hands and we will lose money. We need a bonus. We need adjusted compensation." Congress paid it. The big contractors did not have to wait till 1945. They were paid in cash and on the spot.

But how about the war veterans? They found themselves in needy economic circumstances, badly off, attempting to rehabilitate themselves—and many of them have been very badly off since their war-time service. May God have compassion on the thousands who can never be rehabilitated. After the war the boys looked for the promised glory. The man with one leg or with no leg at all seeking money for an artificial limb to replace one shot off in the war; a man sightless, earless, noseless, and the family of the man who was mentally dark and blind wondered about the glory part of it—"Where was the glory?"

It is a rather common thing for those who have never seen war and never been in it to say to the veterans, "Why the country does not owe you a cent; it was an honor and privilege to serve your country!" I wonder how many of the critics would go out and accept some of the promised glory at $30 a month—$1 a day—with little hope of continued existence in this world.

I have always felt that readjustment should have come as soon as the war was over. The need for payment is now more acute than ever before. With hunger and want staring the men and their families in the face, we see in a most disturbing manner the need for payment now. Congress said in effect, "We appreciate your sacrifices and realize that you brought everlasting glory to the Nation. But because you have rendered patriotic service to the Nation we are going to ask you to wait until 1945 for the payment of the debt we admit we owe you."

It was a debt; I repeat—a debt due the day the armistice was signed. The veterans have been asking Congress to pay this debt. But the powers of money and of Wall Street oppose this payment. They say the Budget must be balanced. Balance the Budget? How often we have heard these words used to excuse the ingratitude of Congress! It seems to me to be elementary that with a debt of more than $2,000,000,000 due and unpaid, a debt that was due November 11, 1918, hanging over the head of the Government, the Budget can not be balanced; with that arrearage there can be no balancing until the debt is paid. The best way to balance the Budget is to pay the debt owed and get even and square with the board and at the same time do justice to the veterans.

And let me remind those who are reviling the veterans that thus far adequate provision has not been made for the widows and orphans. To paraphrase the words of a great American, the Nation's wounds can not be adequately bound up until we have generously provided for the dependents of those who have made the supreme sacrifice. War is costly; and so long as nations continue to indulge in war, they must pay the price.

In the campaign to discredit the veterans of America we find the National Economy League leading the attack. This is indeed an interesting organization, as the managing director, Henry H. Curran, who receives a salary of $15,000 a year, reveals. The league was begun last May, organized in July, and incorporated in November. The total amount of contributions for this short period in 1932 was about $200,000. The director said in testifying before the joint congressional committee on veterans' affairs that 17 contributors gave a total of $35,100. He gave the committee their names; and if you will examine the list submitted, you will find that those contributors are among the wealthiest citizens of the Republic. With its far-reaching influence, the National Economy League proposes to reduce the benefits of many thousands of disabled veterans to the extent of several hundred million dollars. In short, the Economy League purposes to charge as much as possible of the depression to the defenders of the Nation.

In his testimony before the joint committee Mr. Curran said: "The next thing to stop is the payment of the people's money to hundreds of thousands of men who were lucky enough to have the honor of wearing the uniform in the World War but who came out of the war without a scratch and in better health than they ever were before. Our people should be and always will be generous to a fault in taking care of the veteran who is hurt in the service or because of his service establishment. This is a special dole to special veterans who take sick and get a little old in the piping times of peace, long after the war is over."

Note the magic phrase, "piping times of peace." Mr. Curran in making this statement was apparently oblivious of the fact that we are in the midst of the worst depression in history. With thousands unable to find work, many are largely dependent on the meager allowances received from the Government for their existence. "Piping times of peace!" To hear some of the speeches and to read some of the propaganda of the National Economy League one would think the veterans were a lot of riffraff interested only in raiding the Treasury.

You know that many on the list of that organization are themselves receiving princely gratuities from the Government and some are earning lucrative pay besides from private concerns.

My comrades and friends, we should awaken to what is going on in the ranks of big business. American citizens should arise and in their righteous wrath condemn in unmistakable terms all of those who go up and down the country defaming the Nation's defenders.

It has been the custom of this country to be just to the veterans of all our wars and to their dependents. This policy must be continued. This Republic must show itself mindful of the sacrifices of the soldier, grateful to those who helped preserve the Nation—the veteran must not be relegated to the ranks of the "forgotten man." I go farther. A nation which does not deal generously and considerately with those who have worn the uniform in times of peril does not deserve to be defended if war comes.

In this depression we are looking for means to help alleviate the miserable conditions in which we find the country. One of the greatest needs is more purchasing power and not less. The policy espoused by the Economy League would only prolong the depression and would not help to the slightest degree. The plans and designs of the league are not only unwise, they are unjust and cruel. An aroused public opinion will soon make that fact plain to the propagandists who ply their trade in every State.

The laws under which existing benefits to veterans of all wars are administered are just. We must take no backward step that would endanger the benefits or vested rights of these veterans.

In conclusion, may I say that virile national policy is at stake. In order to have defenders of the Republic in times of danger oncoming generations must be impressed with the fact that when they are called upon to preserve the Republic, they and their dependents will not be forgotten. This is a time when events cry out for justice to the disabled veterans of America—a demand for justice which will be made known far and wide to the Congress and by the people in terms that no man dare challenge.

LABOR CONDITIONS ON HOOVER DAM

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I intend to discuss for a short time a matter of great importance, and that is the operations and labor conditions at Boulder Dam, or what is now known as Hoover Dam in Boulder Canyon.

HOOVER DAM CONDITIONS DEMAND INVESTIGATION

The principal difficulties which have arisen in the course of constructing Hoover Dam are as follows:

First. Failure of the contractor, the Six Companies (Inc.), to comply with the mine safety laws of Nevada, which has unnecessarily subjected the men employed to extraordinary risks, resulting in serious loss of life and limb and impairment of health.

Second. Failure of the contractor, the Six Companies (Inc.), to pay its just taxes, thus subjecting Clark County and the State of Nevada unfairly to extraordinary expenses.

Third. Monopolization and exploitation of business and "sweating" labor by the contractor, the Six Companies (Inc.), and its subsidiary, the Boulder City Co.

After careful personal investigation of complaints during the summer of 1931 I found these serious conditions to exist, and upon further investigation in 1932 I found them to have become seriously aggravated.

The Hoover Dam project is the largest ever undertaken in the history of the country, and it is vitally important that the work be conducted on the highest plane of American custom and practice and its administration be in strict conformation with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Furthermore, it is also vitally important that the work should be so administered and conducted as not in any way to infringe upon the sovereignty of the State of Nevada. The American people in the first instance would object if the work were not so administered and conducted, and in the second instance the State of Nevada would be unjustly and unnecessarily damaged, and the good will which should exist between the State and the Nation would be seriously impaired. An immediate investigation should be made as a basis for correcting these conditions.

I. FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH MINE SAFETY LAWS

Because it affects the health and safety of the men employed in the construction of Hoover Dam and works, the most serious condition of which complaint has been made is the failure of the contractor, the Six Companies (Inc.), to conduct the work under the provisions and inspections of the mine safety laws of the State of Nevada. Section 4229, Nevada Laws, 1929, forbids the use of gasoline underground, excepting under certain prescribed limitations. On November 7, 1931, A. J. Stinson, mine inspector of the State of Nevada, ordered the Six Companies (Inc.), the contractor, to cease using gasoline-propelled trucks in the removal of rock from tunnels then being driven. As a result of this order the Six Companies (Inc.) instituted suit on November 13, 1931, to enjoin A. J. Stinson, Nevada State mine inspector, from interfering with the use of gasoline trucks in driving tunnels.

The suit of the Six Companies (Inc.) is predicated largely upon the attempt of the Secretary of the Interior to create a Federal reservation of exclusive jurisdiction—the so-called Boulder Canyon project Federal reservation. Another claim by the Six Companies (Inc.) is that the application of the mine safety laws of Nevada would constitute an interference with a Government instrumentality. There is no apparent adequate constitutional or legal basis for the action of the Secretary of the Interior in attempting to create an exclusive jurisdiction reservation, and it can not seriously be held that the application of the mine safety laws of the State of Nevada would be an interference with a Government instrumentality. Before concluding I shall go into the constitutional and legal aspects of the situation.

The conclusion is inescapable that the Six Companies (Inc.) aided by the Secretary of the Interior, and the Department of Justice, representing the Government as amicus curiæ, by attempts to locate an exclusive jurisdiction reservation and by this suit, sought to delay a settlement of the issue until the work was completed and excessive profits made at the expense of the life and health of the men employed.

In the decision of the court granting a temporary injunction in favor of the contractor, the Six Companies (Inc.) thereby permitting the use of gasoline trucks in the excavation of the tunnels, it is stated that in its complaint the Six Companies (Inc.) contends the delay in using other than gasoline trucks would amount to $1,500,000, exclusive of other material damage. The Six Companies (Inc.) in the complaint, also alleged that its investment in gasoline-propelled trucks amounted to $300,000. I will later on in this statement show the misleading character of the above statements of the Six Companies (Inc.) in which the Secretary of the Interior has concurred.

To prevent further interference with the application of the mine safety laws of Nevada, I introduced a bill on January 7, 1932 (S. 2885). In a letter of April 12, 1932, addressed to Senator JOHN THOMAS, chairman of the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, by the Secretary of the Interior, in which he opposed the enactment of my bill, he made the following statement:

> The United States claims exclusive jurisdiction within this reservation, and any interference therewith would hinder the construction of Hoover Dam and might increase its cost. Litigation is now under way in the Federal courts to determine the question of whether the State of Nevada has authority to enforce its mining operation laws within this area. These laws, if enforced, would have radically altered the methods of excavation of the large diversion tunnels and would have materially increased the cost of them and slowed the work.

The Secretary of the Interior was willing to afford the Six Companies (Inc.) every assistance in reducing its cost of construction at the expense of the safety and health of the men employed on construction. Nowhere in the correspondence of the Secretary of the Interior is found a reference which indicates that he had given any thought to the safety and welfare of the labor employed. His great solicitude has been in favor of assisting the Six Companies (Inc.) in increasing their profits by employing cheaper methods of construction. Such excess profits would of course inure exclusively to the benefit of the Six Companies (Inc.), the contractor, which obtained the contract on fixed bid. The Government was in no way benefited by this extraordinary procedure which saved the company funds at the expense of the life and health of the men it employed. Furthermore, there is plenty of evidence to show that the observance of the State mine safety laws would not have necessarily increased materially the cost of or delayed the work, as claimed by the Secretary of the Interior and the Six Companies (Inc.).

Gov. Fred B. Balzar, of Nevada, informed me of the serious conditions prevailing at Hoover Dam because of the action of the Six Companies (Inc.) and the Secretary of the Interior in preventing the application of the mine safety laws of Nevada in a letter of November 24, 1931. I quote the following statements from this letter, which bear specifically upon the question of the safety and welfare of the men employed:

> In addition, may I suggest the desirability, if amendments to the Boulder Canyon project act are proposed, to add provision allowing the State to enforce its safety and industrial insurance laws within the bounds of Federal reservations.
> I do not know whether you are advised that the Six Companies have caused an injunction to be served on State Mine Inspector Stinson, restraining him from enforcing mine inspection laws, and the latter is to be heard in the United States district court on December 12.
>
> It is quite patent that congressional action should be had in the matter at the earliest possible moment, because under the terms of the restraining order no enforcement of the State labor laws is possible, nor any inspection of conditions looking to the safeguarding of lives.
>
> You are no doubt aware that more than a dozen fatalities have already occurred on the Arizona side, due, so I am advised by Mine Inspector Stinson, to a lack of supervision and inspection as to the safety of men and proper working conditions.
> On the contrary, but two fatalities have happened on the Nevada side, although there are more than five times as many employees on our side of the line, due to the close inspection and enforcement of our safety laws.
>
> I know of no reason why specific legislation should not be enacted authorizing the States of Arizona and Nevada to enforce the State laws for the protection of labor and for their industrial protection * * *.
>
> * * * * * * *
> I will be glad to keep you advised of the progress of litigation, but hope that the necessary amending legislation can be enacted which will take the entire matter out of the hands of the court and give the States the right to enforce their laws.

If the hands of the States are to be tied by injunction pending hearings in court, appeals from decisions at the convenience of interested attorneys, awaiting judgments in the matter, one can be very sure that the entire Boulder Canyon project will be completed before a final decision is rendered by the courts.

You have my cordial good wishes for success in the entire matter, and I shall be glad to have you keep me advised of the progress being made.

The contract of the Government with the Six Companies (Inc.) was signed March 11, 1931, and contains no reference to the contemplated efforts of the Secretary of the Interior to create an exclusive-jurisdiction Federal reservation for the purpose of relieving the contractor of responsibility and obligation to carry on the work of construction under the provisions of the Nevada mine safety laws and the supervision of the State mine inspector. Not until May 19, 1931, did the Secretary of the Interior, without any adequate legal authority in the Boulder Canyon project act or other statutes, attempt to take advantage of a general law passed in Nevada in 1921 long before the present Boulder Canyon project act was contemplated. Furthermore, the Six Companies (Inc.) carried on the work under the provisions and inspections required under the Nevada mine safety laws from its beginning up to November 13, 1931, when the company instituted suit to enjoin the mine inspector of Nevada from the enforcement of the laws. From these facts it would seem apparent that the attempt of the Secretary of the Interior to create an exclusive-jurisdiction reservation at Hoover Dam was an afterthought and a subterfuge to relieve the Six Companies (Inc.) from its just and legal obligations to comply with the mine safety laws of Nevada.

It should be pointed out that Nevada is one of the leading mining States. Some of the largest and most successful mining operations in the world have been conducted in the State. Its mine safety laws are based upon the soundest practice, and the mine operators of the State have willingly cooperated in every way with the State mine inspector in carrying them into effect. Among the Nevada mine operators are some of the ablest and most successful engineers and executives to be found in the world. This has resulted in a minimum of accidents and in the highest possible efficiency of operation, as the records will show. Furthermore, there is no valid reason why the Six Companies (Inc.), an outside corporation coming into the State of Navada to develop this huge enterprise, should not only comply with the mine safety laws of Nevada but also should welcome the supervision and advice of the State mine inspector, as have all other operators in Nevada, in order to afford the greatest care in safeguarding the lives and health of the men in its employ.

Since November 13, 1931, when the Six Companies (Inc.), with the assistance of the Secretary of the Interior, secured a temporary injunction forbidding the mine inspector of Nevada from applying the State mine safety laws, the contractor, the Six Companies (Inc.), has not only violated the Nevada mine safety laws but also decision No. 19 of the mine safety board of the United States Bureau of Mines. The Secretary of the Interior should have followed the rules and regulations of the Federal Bureau of Mines against the use of gasoline-propelled engines and gasoline in tunnels under construction and should not have permitted, encouraged, and aided the Six Companies (Inc.), the contractor he selected for this work, to violate this decision. There is, furthermore, no reason why the Six Companies (Inc.), on its own initiative, should not have conformed to this regulation of the United States Bureau of Mines in this great Government enterprise. It is obvious that both the Secretary of the Interior and the Six Companies (Inc.) have, in violating decision No. 19 of the Federal Mine Safety Board, subjected the men employed in the construction of Hoover Dam to extraordinary risks of life and health, and the report of State Mine Inspector A. J. Stinson indicates that far greater casualities and losses were sustained because of the violation of Federal decision No. 19 and the mine safety laws of Nevada.

The following is a copy of the United States Bureau of Mines Mine Safety Board decision No. 19:

CONCERNING INTERNAL-COMBUSTION ENGINES IN UNDERGROUND WORK

In the interest of safety, the United States Bureau of Mines recommends that:

(1) Internal-combustion engines should not be used in any parts of mines and also should not be used in tunnels under construction because of the hazard of carbon monoxide in the exhaust gases, except:

(a) When the air current is more than 100 linear feet per minute and the toxic gases are always less than 0.02 per cent in the air current.

(b) When the percentage of inflammable gas in the air current is less than 0.25 per cent and/or inflammable gas can not be detected in any place by a permissible flame safety lamp.

(2) Gasoline or other highly inflammable liquids should not be used for engine fuel in mines and in tunnels under construction because of the hazard of their transportation and use.

A letter addressed to me on January 5, 1933, by A. J. Stinson, inspector of mines, State of Nevada, reports on the conditions under which the Six Companies (Inc.), carried on the construction work, and includes a list of fatal accidents sustained by the labor employed from May 1, 1931, to November 13, 1931, the period before the injunction was served, and from November 13, 1931, to December 31, 1932, since the injunction was issued. From this table it will be found that for the period May 1, 1931, to November 13, 1931, when the mine safety laws of Nevada were being enforced, only three fatal accidents occurred, and these were all caused by premature explosions.

During the period November 13, 1931, to December 31, 1932, the period in which the Six Companies (Inc.), violated the Nevada mine safety laws and also Decision No. 19 of the Federal Mine Safety Board, there were 22 fatal accidents. Three of these fatal accidents were caused by premature explosions, while the causes of the remaining 19 deaths are so varied as to indicate general disregard of the safety of life and limb and gross carelessness.

In accordance with the records of the Nevada industrial commission for the 8-month period prior to November 13, 1931, when the mine inspector was enforcing the mine safety laws of the State of Nevada, there occurred 121 nonfatal accidents, while for the 14½-month period which has transpired since the mine inspector was enjoined from enforcing the mine safety laws of the State of Nevada, there have occurred 756 nonfatal accidents, or more than six times as many. This is a further indication of the utter disregard for the life and welfare of labor with which the Six Companies (Inc.) is conducting its work at Boulder Canyon, and emphasizes further the necessity for enforcing the mine safety laws of the State of Nevada at the earliest possible date.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point the letter from Mr. A. J. Stinson, inspector of mines for Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

STATE OF NEVADA,
INSPECTOR OF MINES,
Carson City, Nev., January 5, 1933.

Hon. TASKER L. ODDIE,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR ODDIE: Your letter of inquiry with regard to injuries and deaths occurring in the Boulder Dam project operations received and contents noted.

With reference to the above I have had the industrial commission make out a list of all the fatal and serious accidents which have occurred at Boulder Dam since they took over the accident insurance of the Six Companies. I have also checked their list of accidents with the records of this department and find that the two correspond. You will please find this list inclosed.

As you know, this department took over the inspection and the enforcement of the safety laws for Nevada on May 1, 1931. On November 13 the Federal court served a restraining order on me and also placed me under a temporary injunction. This case was submitted to the court several months ago, but as yet we have not received a decision. Our records show that from May 1 to November 13 two fatal accidents occurred in and around the tunnels on the Nevada side, and 12 fatal accidents on the Arizona side. Also, during that period there were 4 to 1 more men working on the Nevada side. Since November 13, the date the injunction was served, you will note that the Six Companies have had 22 fatal accidents.

It appears to me that after a careful study of the records and reports as to the causes of the accidents, that the Six Companies have been very negligent in the proper inspection and enforcement of the laws and regulations. In many, many cases they have disobeyed the safety laws of our State. I will draw your attention to the fatal accident of C. Bennett. This man was employed as a miner in tunnel No. 1, and was working on the swing shift, going off work at 11.30 at night. A round of holes was blasted before the men went off shift, and the evidence showed that the deceased helped load the holes. Next morning one of the engineers was looking for a point, which was situated close or in the muck pile, and while doing so found the body of the deceased. In the case of R. R. Petticrew, who was working as pitman and who was electrocuted by a short on the drag line, the evidence showed that several of the employees received shocks while standing on the ground a distance of 15 feet from the drag line. Similar shocks had been received several days previous to this accident. The body of Ben Johnson, who was drowned in the water tank, was not found until four days after the accident. The reports show that in many other such cases there was evidence of carelessness in the enforcement of the rules and regulations.

Six hundred and twenty-one men have, and are now receiving compensation from the Nevada Industrial Commission as a result of nonfatal and minor accidents

According to a newspaper report, which reached the office on Tuesday, 25 men were injured in a skip crash on the Arizona side.

If you desire any further information please do not hesitate to call on me.

Very truly yours,

A. J. STINSON, Inspector of Mines.
